The Wheeler mail room has been a source of constant aggravation he said. "Most of them are resonably clean," but "[Wheeler] hasn't been cleaned or dusted in four or five years that I know of."

Standing in Wheeler's diminutive mail room Bordeaux pointed out undisturbed cardboard boxes layered with dust. "This is a compete fire hazard," he said, while stepping over a pile of mail bags he had earlier delivered. Papers and discarded elastics littered mail room shelves.

Much of the clutter appeared to belong to the cluster office. A vacuum cleaner lies perched upon a storage box while pool cues and a broken Charcoal grill sat pushed in the corner.

"Oh wow, a volleyball net!," exclaimed Christian Carrera, a freshman Wheeler resident, peering through the open mail room door.

"It's too easy to misplace things here," said Bordeaux, guessing that over the years plenty of mail has been lost in the clutter.

Bordeaux said that he and Richard Clarity, the campus mail supervisor, have been trying to have the room cleaned for the past four or five years.

The upkeep of the mail rooms is the responsibility of Housing Services, said Bordeaux. Since Housing has taken responsibility for the mail rooms, "We have no control at all now," he said.

Ted Mone, Housing Services Operations Manager for the Orchard Hill and Central areas is ultimately responsible for keeping the rooms clean.

"Most of Housing does their job," said Bordeaux, but his efforts to bring the problem mail room to Mone's attention have failed.

"He was told twice personally that I know of," said Bordeaux. "He's been in there five years and still ain't done nothing. That guy completely ignores us."

Once contacted, Mone refused to speak on record, but gave his assurances that the problem would be taken care of.

Speaker scorns Cambodian treaty

By MATT GRIFFING
Collegian Correspondent

The peace treaty ending the Civil War that has plagued Cambodia since 1975 means more suffering for the Cambodian people, said a former Cambodian resident last Saturday at the New Africa House.

Boreth Sun, who came to the United States in 1982, spoke before a small crowd in a program titled "The Aftermath of the Civil War in Cambodia." The program, which included a discussion afterwards and a photography exhibit, was sponsored by the New World Theatre Symposium.

Sun, the main speaker, said "I will not celebrate the treaty because it places the Khmer Rouge back in power and asks the people to make peace with their butchers."

The Khmer Rouge, led by Pol Pot, massacred over a million people during a three year genocide beginning in 1975. Pol Pot, along with two other leaders have been placed in the National Supreme Council which will rule over Cambodia until the 1993 elections.

The treaty will in effect enable Pol Pot to gain control of Cambodia according to Sun, who said "Pol Pot will be moving to the country in case he loses the election so he can mobilize his terrorist gorilla groups." Sun added that Pol Pot will have little political opposition.

"Compared to Pol Pot the other members of the council, Son Sam and Prince Si Hanoukist are weak politically and militarily," he said.

The treaty and most international action towards Pol Pot has not been aimed at protecting the Cambodian people from the Khemer Rouge because that has never been a priority, explained Sun. The first time the US condemned the actions of the Khemer Rouge was when Secretary of State Baker did after signing the peace treaty.

In the closing discussion with the audience, Sun brought up the fact that stabilizing Cambodia is important for normalizing relations with Vietnam, a current U.S. foreign policy objective.

AIDS Quilt memorial in Springfield

The Young Learn About A Dread Disease - A family views "The Aids Quilt" at Springfield Technical Community College Saturday. Each panel was made by friends and loved ones of an Aids victim.

People Came From Everywhere - Visitors were invited to write messages of love and support to friends and loved ones of Aids victims. The Quilt was created by The California-based Names Project Foundation.

A Promise - Over 14,000 panels have been added to The Quilt. Fully assembled, the quilt spans nearly 6 football fields. It contains victim's names from all 50 states and 26 other countries, according to the Project Names Foundation.

Halloween frees the mind

There are three pumpkins sitting in my room.

One is kind of tall and oval — it's a good shape for a giant grin. The second looks rather squashed down — I think that one will be carved into something wholly evil. I don't know what will happen to the third yet.

Tomorrow night my roommate and I will spread some old Collegians on the floor, wash off the pumpkins, pull out some daggers and, after deciding on the "best side" of each, cut out our jack o'lanterns.

We don't have any costumes or candy, but we do have pumpkins. Halloween pictures drawn on typing paper cover our door from top to bottom. Friends helped to make the pictures: traditional witches, cats, candles, jack o'lanterns and ghosts beside the two faces of death, battling for world supremacy and babes.

There's a weird fascination with Halloween...I know a vast number of people who claim it as their favorite holiday. It seems a little odd in comparison to other national holidays. Most of our holidays celebrate the good things in life, such as independence, religion, culture and, of course, the "spirit of giving."

Halloween isn't a celebration of evil, but it still is a little out of place among other special days (and nights). It's a bit archaic, actually; I don't know many children who dress up to ward off evil spirits these days.

It is the most imaginative holiday we have. As Oscar Wilde wrote, "Imagination is a quality given a man to compensate him for what he has not." For one night of the year, reality is suspended and you can be whoever you want to be.

Over the last few years, I've read a few news stories about towns banning Halloween. I understand part of their reasoning. Pranks have a nasty way of becoming more serious than anyone intended, and most parents check their children's candy for razor blades and pins.

However, some of the reasoning was based on the nature of the holiday itself. There were some community leaders who believed the night to be a warped and twisted celebration of the things that go bump in the night, leading innocent youth astray into the clutches of the devil.

These are the same people who want to censor music and visual art.

Thankfully, Halloween bashers are still a tiny minority. Most people have too much fun on Halloween to take such hysterical over-reactions seriously.

It's certainly a commercialized holiday. Card and gift shops are overflowing with plastic masks and caricatures of ghosts 'n' goblins. Sales of glow-in-the-dark nail polish are never higher.

Halloween gives us the chance to make fun of the things that scare the hell out of us. Okay, so you don't believe vampires are real and you were always a little skeptical of the werewolf thing too. Still, don't try to tell me you never get spooked on a windy, dark night. It's not mythical creatures or dancing skeletons that are so scary; it's death.

A friend sent me a clipping from the newspaper. It isn't about Halloween but the essence of it fits. It's written by Michael Brenner — I don't know who he is, but this is what he wrote: "Contrary to what you've been told, dreaming is not antithetical to realism — it's where realism begins...The most subversive things to teach people? Creativity, imagination, dreaming, being a lover, idealism, spirit..."

Halloween takes the nasty stuff and makes it safe. Let the imagination run wild — enjoy.

Writer mistaken on nominations

In "Partisan Politics" [Collegian, Oct. 18] Michael Morrissey makes two important factual mistakes about the American Supreme Court nomination process.

First, he appears to believe that Congress must find a nominee guilty of a crime in order to refuse confirmation. Not true — if it wee, Congress could be could skip the formality of meeting the nominee and simply ask the Federal Bureau of Investigation to check the nominee's record for felony convictions.

Instead, the [theoretical] concept behind confirmation hearings is for the Congress to examine, among other things, the character of the nominee; the relevance of whether or not the nominee has abused his or her power over subordinates should be obvious.

Second, Mr. Morrissey, showing a stunning ignorance of American history, states that in "recent years" politicians have tried to use this formerly routine process to their political advantage."

This would be news to Abraham Lincoln [who, admittedly, tended to play a bit loose with Constitutional law]. In 1864, President Lincoln nominated Salmon P. Chase, his political and personal enemy, to the Supreme Court in exchange for Chase's help with Lincoln's re-election campaign.

This political use of the nomination process wasn't new then, nor has it been uncommon in the century and a quarter since. Really, our current system [partisan president nominating Thomas for his views on property law and abortion, some partisan Congressmen opposing him for those same views is relatively uncorrupt.

Perhaps Mr. Morrissey should attend college before making further comment on matters that he obviously...oh, dear me, you say that he does attend college? How sad.

Bored at the laundromat

Last night I went to that funky place you go to wash your clothes and pretend to do homework — The Laundry Club. As I was tying to drag my mountain of clothes through the door, a guy came out of nowhere, picked up my basket and carried it over to the washers. Wasn't that nice? I thought so.

Amy Prendergast

My roommate and I stuffed about 100 pounds of laundry into one of those heavy duty $3.25 washers. We obviously hadn't done laundry in awhile. Now that I live off-campus, I have really come to miss those two white machines that lived across the hall from me in John Adams. I miss those days of being able to do laundry at 3 a.m., and not have to leave my floor.

Isn't it the best feeling to go back home, load up Mom and Dad's machine and just turn it on? I always feel like I should leave a little tip by the washer. One weekend during my freshman year, I went home and loaded up the washer big time, and broke it. My father was so mad but I tried to explain that quarters were a scarce thing for a starving college student like myself. Now there is a sign on the washer in my cellar that says, "Please don't overload, THANKS AMY!"

As I sat watching "Inside Edition" on that wide screen TV they have which I want to steal for my apartment, people kept walking by the windows coming from Scott's with cases and cases of beer (no kegs,of course). Then looking across the street, I could see people packing into Rafters. It was very depressing to watch, as I sat stressing about all the work that was waiting for me back home. Every so often I would check on my laundry, and catch myself just staring into the dryer, watching the clothes go round and round. Is that normal?

When I did finally get home, I felt energetic so I hopped on the stairclimber and watched "Doogie Howser." Alright, call me old-fashioned, but isn't Doogie a little young to be having sex? And "Life Goes On" is another one. I don't know, maybe I'm getting old. But someone should really calm down these little 16 year-olds on these family shows.

Did anyone see Donahue when the high school quarterback that was booted from the football team for drinking was on? He was from some small town in New York and felt thirsty at the town picnic one day, so he drank a beer. It wouldn't have been a problem, except his football coach and the rest of the town was there too. His high school had a rule that any athlete caught drinking was automatically removed from the team. No two-week suspension, you were gone. Was the person who made this no drinking rule from Amherst by any chance?

We wouldn't have had sports teams if my high school had that rule. One prom, and it would have been all over. As a matter of fact, at the Junior Prom, our future captain of the football team was so trashed that he puked on the principal's foot!

I was laughing because parents on the panel were standing up and saying, "Well my Suzy was there, but she only had one sip." It's like, yeah lady, she was probably hammered like the rest of the drunk high school kids stumbling around the picnic. It's a sad fact, but parents really have no clue of what goes on in high school.

Now I'll leave you with one last question that's been on my mind for weeks.

What am I going to be for Halloween?

Graduate employees charge columnist with misunderstanding issue

We received several responses to Peter Kasperowicz's column, "Administration and GEO are only playing a chess match" [Collegian, October 23]. We do not have room to print them all, so here are excerpts from some of the letters received:

"I wish my understanding of the world was as playful as Peter Kasperowicz's. Unfortunately for me, I have come to learn that education and unemployment are not as simple as tic-tac-toe or even chess. Both sides agree to a set of rules when they play chess. When it comes to education and employment, the rules are far too often set by the side that controls the most power.

"As for Kasperowicz's economics, GEO is not asking for a non-existing dollar, rather we are saying: if you take a dime from everybody, don't take a quarter from us.

"Does any human being deserve the alternatives [to job security]: unemployment, homelessness, poverty, malnutrition, no access to health care, disease? I think not. He believes that 'the real reason we're here, education, is forgotten...' Over the summer, 147 TAs lost their jobs. They were not notified until late August, beyond the financial aid deadline...Suddenly faced with over $2,000 in fees and up to $6,000 in tuition as they also lost their waivers, many were forced to leave the university. They could no longer afford 'the real reason we're here.'"

Andrew O'Neill
GEO/District 65, UAW

"Peter Kasperowicz chose to misinterpret, and misinform his readers on, the nature of the negotiations between GEO and the administration. The issue is much more serious than Kasperowicz cares to admit and because it is so serious both sides are proceeding with caution. Now if that caution strikes Kasperowicz as a chess match and too decorous, so be it. It is a weak and misleading analogy, one that makes writing his column easier, I'm sure, but one that neglects what is at stake.

"Fairness is all that graduate employees are asking for. It is fair to pay reasonable fees for services of value, to allow a union to have its membership recognized once and not require them to sign dues deduction authorization cards every academic year, to have a disinterested third party settle disputes, and that employers provide an equitable way to cut budgets and handle layoffs. Many graduate employees...work harder than contract and job descriptions demand; they do it for 'the real reason we're here, education.'"

"The true reality mixed with economics here is that we aren't whining, we are asserting our right to be treated fairly and taken seriously. The administration seems fairly reluctant to agree to this. I don't know why...If they make the commitment to us that we have every right to have, they can't cut positions at whim to save money, nor can they run up fees; they'll have to make harder choices, work a little more creatively, think more about what is good for the whole university rather than what is easy for them."

Nick Carbone
Sunderland

"Let's say that the time specified [for a TA appointment] runs out, and the money that funded that position dries up. What happens to our hypothetical TA, Pete? Unemployment line? No dice. A TA-ship is a part-time, contracted position. The unemployment office won't give you benefits for those sort of things, even if you were wrongfully let go.

"For the reality you so eloquently wanted to mix with economics, you can come to my house, where I have very little heat, and you can join me for the umpteenth peanut butter and jelly sandwich I have eaten since I started graduate school."

What I learned from Sandra B.

By LOU COVE
Collegian Correspondent

Sandra Bernhard
Smith College
Friday Oct. 25

I learned a lot at the Sandra Bernhard show at Smith College Friday night. I learned about Warren Beatty's butt and the sex of his first child who is still snug in Annette Bening's womb, about Sandra's sexual fantasies involving Ted Kennedy and her third grade teacher (she used to look up her skirt), and that Jodie Foster is really "a fucking lying dyke," ("What makes her think she has her finger on the pulse of white trash? Who named her the Great Blonde Hope?")

Sandra Bernhard was on from the moment she hit the stage at the John M. Greene Hall. She greeted the frenzied audience with her trademark barrage of caustic wit and spitfire: "Yeah, I know all you Smith chicks; I saw you around town today. You're a bunch of angry lesbians out to kick some ass and eat some pussy. Well that's fine with me, just make sure you shave before you do it."

It was the first half of the show that proved most rewarding. Deftly tossing off innumerable incendiary quips at the audience over a constant refrain of electric guitar, Bernhard fell immediately into a kind of beatnik rhythm. "It's kind of a Jack Kerouac thing," she proclaimed. Her monologue followed no particular course, it was pure stream-of-bitter-consciousness. One minute she was picturing Ted Kennedy in her bed with "a big hairy belly, smelling like booze and having a small penis," and the next she was belting Stevie Nicks' songs.

Bernhard spent half of her time on stage fielding questions from the audience, which seemed like a great idea at first. Unfortunately the whole affair digressed into a star-worshipping love-in, replete with supremely insipid inquiries like "Who are your favorite designers?" Who cares? Everyone wanted a kiss or a hug or an autograph, and the whole affair degenerated into a silly mess.

Bernhard did get a few good questions and her answers were classic:

On the Pee Wee Herman incident: "Everybody likes to jerk off, big fucking deal."

Describing Northampton in one word: "Shangri-la!"

But the question and answer period was dominated by so many boring, stupid comments from people vying for Sandra's approval, or folks who just didn't have a clue, that the show veered swiftly from entertainment to atrophy. In general, Bernhard was very polite and receptive, which seemed wholly out of character. I was just waiting for her to let them have it, but her wrath stayed out of sight until the very end. When an innocent young Smith student said meekly: "You seem to be really down on feminism, and I was just wondering why?" To which Sandra responded: "Does the word irony ring a bell? It's nice to be insulated at your little school here. Get out in the real world and give me a call."

Dread Zep plays Pearl St

By GEREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

There's a Led Zeppelin song from their 1973 album Houses of the Holy titled "The Song Remains the Same."

It's altogether fitting that Dread Zeppelin, who play Pearl Street tomorrow at 8 p.m., cover this song on their second release 5,000,000.

Reason being, when you take the material of the definitive hard rock band of the 70's and cover it reggae-style with an Elvis impersonator as lead vocalist, the song is about all that stays the same.

The concept behind Dread Zeppelin is the kind of thing an evil, twisted genius might come up with if he or she were experimenting with recreational mind-altering substances.

Really, an Elvis look and sound alike named Tortelvis with fake sideburns who sings versions of "Heartbreaker" and "Stairway to Heaven" that Bob Marley would've appreciated? A drummer named Fresh Cheese? Musicians with Zeppelin-turned-reggae names like Jah Po Jo (bass) and Carl Jah (guitar)?

Here's the kicker, though - it works. Maybe it's because the mere thought of taking something held sacred like Led Zeppelin and making it sound fresh and funny is enough to make the whole crazy thing fly. Maybe it's because comparisons between Elvis Presley and Robert Plant, who has cited Presley as an influence, aren't so far-fetched.

Not only is it funny, it's good as well. To be honest I had minimal exposure to Dread Zeppelin until recently, when I happened to be in a record store where the Dread-ized version of "Song Remains the Same" was playing. Hearing Tortelvis mutter a Plant trademark line like "It always grows" in Elvis-speak brought me to my knees with laughter.

Those of you who are aghast at the violation of Led Zeppelin's spiritual purity by a reggae cover band should keep in mind that this is all supposed to be fun. A quick glance at Dread Zeppelin's press release, which is full of press release parody, should convince any skeptics. With lines like "Fresh values the respect he gets from his fans and the music press in Japan, and his athletic personality attracts health-conscious fans from all over the world," who could doubt it?

If you have a sense of humor at all, check this band out.

Dread Zeppelin will play Pearl Street in Northampton Tuesday Oct. 29 with Bop (harvey).*

Volpone was complex

BY DANIEL JOKELSON
Collegian Correspondant

My reaction as I was watching the play was "WHAT?" But since then I've had time to soak in the UMass theater department's production of Ben Jonson's "Volpone," which I saw last Friday, and waves of laughter that ripple over me even now assure me that this production is a genuine to watch.

The premise of the farcical play is simple and easy to grab: A clever devious rich man plots with his even more cleverly devious servant and, mostly by the aid of his servant's crafty tongue, dupes the greediest people in society into tossing their greatest riches to him with the eagerness of puppies. Of course, in the great tradition of moralist plays, the master and servant are caught and harshly sentenced, along with their greedy victims, who are punished for their voluntary abuse of pure, innocent victims.

So what's so confusing about that? Well, after a while, the characters' speaches began to get so long and their

Chinese food is better than the D.C.

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

"Patience is the key to joy."

Fortune cookies make sense. Every now and then you've got to go somewhere with table cloths, cloth napkins, glasses, and a chandelier. You know, a place where you have to wait for your food, and I don't mean wait in line. You sit down, you look at a menu, you talk to the waiter and you wait for your food to be prepared.

After a week of UMass living, the average UMass student deserves to have a little elegance. For most, this means going out to eat. Food. No D.C. No long line. No need for your I.D. Chinese food. Whoa. Yeah. Almost sounds orgasmic, don't it?

Take your time. You've been rushing around all week. Order your food, relax, chat, chill.

China Garden is a neat-o little spot not too far from here. A hop, skip and a jump right into downtown Amherst, just around the corner from the Amherst police station and across the street from the Shawmut on North Pleasant Street. Classic Chinese food. This is the stuff the kids want.

Red napkins, red table cloths (with a plate glass guard over them to protect them for all of you sloppy campus folk), white dishes and tea cups with blue designs etched all over them, and lots and lots of tasteful art and plenty of chandeliers. Nice decor. Well lighted and well staffed.

The place also has those cool Zodiac placemats for people addicted to their daily dose of Jeanne Dixon.

A friendly guy named George Yeo owns and runs the place. Always respect a guy that not only owns his own place, but runs it too. George likes his customers and if you show up often enough, he'll remember you.

The China Garden has a huge menu of all sorts of food with Madarin, Szechuan, and Hunan cooking and the menu is going to expand next month when they add a vegetarian section. Yes sir, not only does the China Garden refuse to even recognize the existence of MSG (that hateful chemical stuff), but now it's going to make it possible for vegetarians to go out for Chinese. Of course, I'll always make a bee-line for the beef teriyaki strips and spare ribs, but hey to each his own.

George recommends some selections from the Chef's Specials section, and that's not because they're more expensive; they're not, they just taste good. Numbers 19, 5, 6, and 9 are the dishes to watch, according to George.

Dragon and phoenix was my choice, number 19. It's shrimp and lobster in a red sauce chock full 'o chopped up vegetables. Spicy. Really classy placement of everything on the plate too. Pretty food, what a concept.

General Gao's chicken is another dish I tried. Clumps of chicken in a sweet brown sauce. I couldn't find anything wrong with it but George told me that he's going to replace it on the menu with a House Special Chicken that's better by far.

Marbles Beef, Rose Shrimp, and Ma La Lamb (rare for a Chinese restaurant to have lamb) and some others were mentioned. While I didn't try them, I'm sure George wouldn't steer you wrong.

Of course, you get the traditional freebies. A pot of tea, a bowl of fried wontons with duck sauce, that dish of pineapple bits that you eat with toothpicks (there's always a fight for these amongst dinner parties), and the fortune cookies that are the essense of going out for Chinese in America.

If you're tired of those Pu Pu Platters (but how could you be! I'll never tire of all that great food on the spinning dispenser with the little fire up top you can use to light up your pocket lint), George would be happy to set you up with some Lychee and ice. Lychee is some sort of fruit he has imported all the way from Thailand. It's a little weird looking, but hey, so are your classmates.

Chinese food dining is the American tradition and with good reason. It's fun. Just to remember to add ". . . in bed" to the end of whatever you get for a fortune and the fun will never stop.

So go run, walk, crawl and fight your way out the D.C. and take the nearest bus into town for some real chow. And when you get back to find that your entire floor is stuck on the can downloading what they had at the D.C., you can just laugh and laugh.

references so obscure or so difficult to understand fast enough that I was lost. I lost most of the reasons why these gross characters were doing what they were doing. I only knew that what they were doing was hysterical and disgusting! The actors were speaking in a code that they alone were fluent in — or were they just not able to understand their own words, and so they just put in a partially studied understanding of their characters' motivations?

Either way, I had a muddled impression of the play by its end. I was frustrated because it was hard to have fun with the great slapstick and be confused about what everyone was doing at the same time. It was frustrating, too, that the stream of images was infinite and infinitely fast, and that many actors did not indulge in those images — live and breathe them fully — but instead flew through them.

Many actors weren't taking enough risks. I didn't see the greedy, abusive characters go for the jugular in their ruthless crimes, and I didn't see the rich Volpone and his servant Mosca being wholly consumed by their own brilliant, mischievous, crafty skills. I wanted them to love those genius ploys, because then I could love them just as much; the greedies to be unremorsefully greedy, because then I could laugh that much harder at their downfalls.

In the second act, there are two courtroom scenes in which most of the characters are onstage at the same time. In those scenes, there was so much bickering and it came from so many characters simultaneously that I was lost. Again, I couldn't understand many of the characters' reaction for saying and doing what they said and did.

The flip side of the riddle was that is was fascinating to watch the actors interact in this strange world made from Jonson's strange images with such great timing. The dialogue was smooth as ice, and all of the actors used great precision in executing their physical and verbal cues. The courtroom scenes were so fantastic in that way that I was mesmerized.

I also got a wonderful sense of the work the actors were putting in during the show. Despite the tiny and somewhat frequent gaps in understanding, they pulled off a terrifically complex play — I understood many of the essentials they worked so hard to express.

And of course, the schticks they did were great. Volpone's fools (Craig Doescher, Laurie Ciarametaro, J. Jacob Baritz) had lots of good cameos and funny physical gags. Lady Would-Be (Holly Waite), Volpone's incredibly overbearing and unwanted seductress was wonderfully outrageous in her vaudevillian stunts (like performing "I Get No Kick From Champagne". Her costume was the greatest of all the great, zany costumes — bright colors that clashed, a beehive hairdo, a tacky, floral-patterned bag, etc. Signora Corbaccia (Madeline Rains), the greedy who takes her will away from her own son to win Volpone's favor, was wicked but in a disarmingly bungling way. It's hard to capture the flavor of Rain's performance on paper, but the way she portrayed a person who has no clue was hilarious. Celia (Joan Jubett) was also a powerful presence — a serious reminder of the moral implications of greed. When Volpone wooed and almost forced himself on her, her mixed feelings of enjoyment and then total violation were sickeningly real.

The portrayals of Volpone (Ed Jewett), Mosca (Tess O'Brien), Corvino (Ian Guarnieri) and Bonario (Carl Dillard) were all strong, had their great moments and had tons of energy behind them. But it was precisely because of those strengths that I was frustrated — I knew they had the power to reach inside for those riveting performances, but they held back. Why? I don't know, but they all gave me a lot to think and laugh about.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A friendship could develop into a romance. Share the joy you feel. A positive attitude is contagious! Keep children in mind when making a financial decision. Travel enjoys highly favorable influences.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A pet could make this an especially lively and rewarding day. Pay off a debt to a family member on time. Remember the lessons of the past when planning for the future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Protect your interest. Forgive those who have hurt you, but make sure they cannot take advantage of you again. Legal advice is worth the expense. Choose your confidants with care.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A phone call or surprise visit brings welcome news. Answer all letters from family members. Those at a distance are eager to hear from you. Emphasize the positive when describing a complex situation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A recreational idea boosts your spirits. Consult your partner before spending jointly owned funds. Others tell you their troubles, knowing that you will keep their secrets. Protect your reputation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pay attention to those willing to give you the benefit of their experience. A family problem requires a practical approach. Avoid passing judgement. Romance gets back on track.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have an opportunity to forge an alliance that will benefit you all your life. Choose a partner who shares your high ideals. Others judge you by the company you keep.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov 21): Try not to look back. Dwelling on the joys of the past could keep you from making the most of the present. Treasure your memories, but plan for the future. Develop new friendships.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do some investigating if worried about a situation that could affect your family. Travel is an excellent investment now. Keep your passport handy! Be fair when dealing with loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You feel pulled in two different directions now. Make your choice. A romantic interest is worth pursuing. Put your best foot froward. Give your home a quick clean-up.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is time to come to grips with a recurring problem. Be flexible. Your ability to compromise is essential to solving domestic difficulties. Avoid driving if you feel tired or under the weather.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your words and appearance make quite a statement today. What you believe, you can achieve. Your powers of persuasion are at an all-time high. Give romance top priority tonight.

cer program, according to Bleau.

"A decision has to be made before the season is over, otherwise we won't have any recruits," said Frank Kylish, a concerned soccer parent. "As far as the parents raising $10,000, that seems reasonable. If each parent gives $500, then you've got the $10,000."

The proposal asks the Athletic Department to require all sport programs to work toward funding 30 percent of their budgets within two years and fund at least 15 percent next year.

The raw budget proposed would force players to provide their own shoes, for players to stay with alumni, friends, fraternities, apartments, etc. during the preseason, to find a restaurant during preseason which would sponsor the team and give the players free breakfast, and to eliminate the game with Maine, which is an away game and would cost approximately $1,000.

As for Coach Sam Koch, the proposal requires that the Athletic Department make a decision by the end of the season to retain him and to keep the program alive.

Alumni and parents would then work with Koch to augment his salary so that he can remain in the area for a good part of the year.

"I'd be happy to stay. . . I have to consider my schooling," Koch said. "I haven't kept up with my work, so my schooling will be a major consideration."

As for now, Koch has been told by the Athletic Department not to recruit. He did say that the program does have people looking for them and that they have had phone calls from kids inquiring about playing at UMass next year.

Field hockey stuffs UConn, 2-0, without coach

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

In their most emotional game of the year, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team defeated the University of Connecticut Saturday, 2-0.

The team overcame the absence of coach Pam Hixon and rebounded from a very disappointing 3-0 loss Thursday night at the hands of Boston University.

If the team missed the presence of Hixon, who was ill, they did not show it on the field. Assistants Heather Lewis and Kathy DeAngelis coached the women to victory, but the game plan was devised with Hixon, according to Lewis.

The strong defensive play by the Minutewomen (12-4), who are fourth in the country, carried the team past the No. 10 ranked Huskies.

Sherlan Cabralis was the offensive star, picking up two assists. UMass' intensity was obvious, and the team seemed to play as hard as they had all year.

"We learned from [the loss to BU], and we put it behind us," forward Tara Jelley said.

UMass started the scoring at 21:18 of the first half when Cabralis passed to Dawn Trumbauer, who put the Minutewomen ahead by a 1-0 margin. The team added their second goal just three minutes later, this time by Jelley from Cabralis.

In the second half, Connecticut seemed to close UMass' attack, and did not allow any chances to open up play. The slow grass of Totman Field contributed to the less than frantic pace.

The Huskies kept the ball in the UMass zone, but they failed to get the ball past goalie Philippa Scott. Scott and the defense played a strong game, as the Minutewomen notched their ninth shutout of the season.

"Our defense was excellent," Jelley said. "They had an excellent game. Kathy Phelan and Joy Blenis worked extra hard."

The game was a very rough one, with tight checking by both teams. The ball flew in every direction, occasionally hitting people. In the last two minutes of the match alone, two Huskies players went down after getting hit by the ball.

The fact that it was "Parents Weekend" at UMass and that this game is the last regularly scheduled home game may have added to the intensity of the Minutewomen's play. Nevertheless, the team is now 7-1 at home, with their sole loss at the hands of No. 1 Old Dominion.

This fact is important because the first two rounds of NCAA postseason play are at the top seeds' home fields.

If the Minutewomen can keep their national ranking around No. 4, they will probably host two playoff games.

The rivalry between UMass and UConn is a long-standing one, as Saturday marked the 25th time that the two teams have played. UConn has not defeated the Minutewomen since 1988, and were beaten twice last year by scores of 2-1 in the regular season and 1-0 in triple overtime penalty strokes in the NCAA tournament.

The Minutewomen get a week's reprieve from matches. Their next match is down in Maryland against Virginia and Delaware next weekend.

"Every game is pretty much important," Jelley said. "We just have to take them one at a time."

ended with Hellmuth crossing the ball in front to an open Eynard. Eynard tipped it over to Woodside, who boomed it into the upper left corner.

"It was wonderful, a real team play," Rudy said. "You can't coach that play.

Now with only two games remaining in the regular season, the successful weekend keeps the Minutewomen on track for a wild-card bid in the tournament.

"This was a really big weekend for us," UMass' Amy Trunk said. "Cornell was in the running with us for a wild card spot with us, so this win makes us look a lot better. We're taking things one game at a time and then we'll see about the post-season."

Massachusetts hosts Yale at 2:30 p.m. on Thursday, on Lower Boyden Field.

Men's soccer's hopes for tourney bid, still alive

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team's hopes for a spot in the post-season Atlantic 10 Tournament are still alive, even though they dropped a 6-2 decision to Rutgers University, Sunday.

Here is how the A-10 standings wrap up (three points for a victory, one for a tie): Rutgers has clinched the top position with a 6-0-0 record, therefore they have 18 conference points.

Rhode Island rests in second place with four wins, 12 points. George Washington is in third place with four wins, 12 points.

Here is where the confusion lies: UMass has finished their A-10 season with three wins, one tie, 10 points. Right now, they are in fourth place and West Virginia is in fifth with nine points. The top four teams go to the tournament.

However, West Virginia has one game remaining, Nov. 2 at George Washington. The Minutemen must hope West Virginia loses or ties. If West Virginia loses, they finish one point behind UMass, if it ties, they will be deadlocked with UMass. However, UMass beat West Virginia earlier in the season, consequently, they would be in the A-10's.

The Rutgers University men's soccer team, ranked No. 1 in the nation with a 16-1-1 record, knocked off the University of Massachusetts yesterday, 6-2, at Lower Boyden Field.

The Scarlet Knights, led by Lino DiCuollo's hat trick, combined relentless offensive pressure and consistent defense to thwart the Minutemen.

Brett Anthony gave UMass the game's first lead at 26:59, when he scored a goal assisted by Justin Edelman to make it 1-0.

It seemed that this goal might have given the Minutemen the necessary momentum to upset Rutgers, but that momentum quickly died.

Less than a minute later, at 27:57, DiCuollo put a penalty kick past UMass goalie Jonathan Gruber to tie it 1-1.

With just over eight minutes left in the half, at 36:53, Andreas Maier scored on a header from DiCuollo to give Rutgers a 2-1 lead it would not relinquish.

Just over two minutes later, at 39:17, DiCuollo put a ground shot in between Gruber and the right goalpost for his second goal, assisted by Maier to make it 3-1.

Rutgers did not slow down in the second half. At 62:52, DiCuollo completed his hat trick with a goal that made it 4-1.

Anthony continued to be the sole provider of UMass offense, as he scored his second goal of the game to cut the margin to 4-2. It appeared that perhaps UMass had regained some crucial momentum, but that thought escaped anyone's mind only a few minutes later.

With less than 17 minutes remaining in the match, at 73:39, Jeff Zaun scored from Peter Collum to give Rutgers an insurmountable 5-2 lead.

At 86:28, Rutgers added insult to injury, when Brian Sentowski wrapped up the scoring with a goal assisted by Brent Longenecker to make it 6-2.

Rutgers outshot UMass, 23-17, and a remarkable 17 of Rutgers' shots (73.9 percent) were on net. Only eight of UMass' 16 shots (50 percent) were on net.

Gruber entered the game with a startling 0.63 goals-against average, but no goaltender can be expected to maintain an average like that when he has to face the sort of pressure Rutgers applied. Gruber made 11 saves.

UMass' next contest is on Wednesday, October 30, against Fairfield University at 2 p.m. at Lower Boyden. However, the Minutemen will focus just as much on a November 2 matchup between George Washington and West Virginia, a game which will decide the fate of the Minutemen's post season play.

Proposal to continue men's soccer on table

Editors note: This is the second of a four-part series depicting the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team.

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

A proposal to continue the men's soccer program at the University of Massachusetts next year is on the table, after being presented to the Athletic Department by Al Bleau, President of the University of Massachusetts Men's Soccer Association, last Friday.

According to the proposal, it would take $40,583 to keep the program alive in 1992. Of that $40,583, the Athletic Department must come up with $14,583 either from their budget or from the result of other programs raising 15 percent of their share of costs or from a joint all sports fundraising event.

Parents and alumni must contribute $10,000, corporate programs and donors, $6,000, and special event fundraising — Las Vegas Night, $10,000.

The soccer program was cut from the Athletic Department's budget this past spring. However, the program was able to raise enough money so that it could return for what has been termed its terminal season.

"Given all the cuts, all the teams must get involved in fundraising," Bleau said.

Raising the $14,583 won't be easy for the Athletic Department since they were recently informed that their salary account will be reduced by $50,000 on July 1, 1992, and that they can expect a drop of $169,000 in student fees due to a 1,000-student drop in enrollment.

Athletic Director Frank McInerney said that a former trustee pledged $2,000 for this season and has since disappeared, leaving the Athletic Department to come up with the missing $2,000.

"I don't know where we're going to get that money," McInerney said at a meeting with soccer parents two weeks ago. "Everyone's saying to us 'find the money', I can't."

Bleau said, "The more you cut programs, the more you lose enrollment. The solution isn't to keep cutting."

In addition to joint fundraising and fund development, the proposal states that there must be an attitude change and policy changes within the athletic department.

These three things would assure that UMass is able to maintain a quality soc-

Women's soccer shuts down Colgate, Cornell

Cornell goalie Sue DeLong saved almost everything yesterday, except for one as the Minutewomen defeated the Big Red 1-0.

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

This past weekend, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team took two big steps in cementing it's argument as an NCAA tournament team, as it defeated a couple of teams from New York.

Yesterday, the Minutewomen (12-4) defeated 14th ranked Cornell, 1-0 at home. On Saturday, the squad traveled to Colgate where they dispatched of the Red Raiders, 3-0.

In the Cornell contest, UMass broke the scoreless tie in the 34th minute. Driving towards the net, Carrie Koeper punched the ball through the slot to Polly Hackathorn. Hackathorn took the pass on the left side of the net and placed the shot into the far right corner, past the dive of Cornell goalkeeper, Sue DeLong.

"It was really an unfortunate play for Cornell," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "[Cornell defender Jennifer] Moyer fell down, we got the bounce and made the most of it. It was a hell of a break for us."

For the first twenty minutes of the game the Big Red controlled the play, while testing UMass goalkeeper Briana Scrry on a couple of occasions. With 25 minutes gone in the half, Rudy substituted in Paula Wilkins, who has been sidelined with back spasms. The tide of the game turned as the Minutewomen controlled the rest of the half.

"Obviously Paula makes an impact," Rudy said. "It was either her presence that turned it around or we caught our rhythym. She is a player, a smart kid, who knows how to lead, direct the play and drop back. She plays a game that the average fan doesn't see, but she came in, played hurt and brought things together for us."

Massachusetts, ranked No. 10 in the nation, just missed converting on a number of scoring opportunities. In the 28th minute Holly Hellmuth, from the top of the penalty area, tapped a pass back to Michele Woodside, who drilled one off the crossbar.

Four minutes later Wilkins let go off a low drive from 15 yards out in the penalty area that DeLong had to dive to stop.

In the second half, Kim Eynard collected a ball near midfield and drove past three Cornell defenders with a series of moves. From the top of the box she drove a shot off the crossbar, the rebound went to Colleen Milliken, who put the ball over the entire net.

On Saturday, Massachusetts played a strong all-around game in beating Colgate. Milliken was the offensive hero as she collected two goals, Woodside had the other tally.

Woodside's goal, according to Rudy, was the team's best goal of the season. The play was a result of a seven-pass sequence that

Capture first ever conference Championship

Led by senior captain Michelle St. Laurent, the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team captured it's first ever Atlantic 10 Championship Saturday at Van Cortland Park, N.Y.

St. Laurent finished in eighth place overall in a time of 18:21, anchoring the win for the Minutewomen. UMass' next three runners, Kim Liljeblad, Becky Johnson, and Kelly Liljeblad, finished ninth, 10th, and 11th, all within nine seconds of St. Laurent.

Rounding out the top five for the Minutewomen was Tricia Mathiesen who finished 21st with a time of 20:08, while battling a slight arch injury.

"It's been a big goal of ours since last year, and the women really came through for us." Coach Julie LaFreniere said. "I'm very proud of them, and they're really excited."

On the less-than-perfect Van Cortland Park course, UMass took home the title with 59 points. Rutgers finished second with 65, followed by Rhode Island with 68, West Virginia with 79, and St. Josephs with 82.

Rounding out the meet were Duquesne with 153 points, George Washington with 203, and St. Bonaventure with 248.

"I was a little concerned when the runners began to come in," Lafreniere said. "West Virginia placed two runners before our first, [first and third] as did Rhode Island. When I saw our runners coming in that tight pack though, I knew we had a good shot."

Also keying the Minutewomen's win was the strong running of Cate Dean and Tracy Delutis, who placed 23rd and 26th respectively, enabling UMass to displace Rhode Island's fifth runner.

"I was really impressed with the way Tracy ran, because she really hasn't run since the beginning of the season." LaFreniere said. "As for Cate, she ran about the best race I think I've seen her run."

With the win, the Minutewomen will be riding a crest of momentum into this Friday's New England Championships in Northfield, MA.

Middle East peace talks approaching

By RICHARD LORANT
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Two days before the start of Middle East peace talks, Israel today rejected a freeze on settlements in occupied lands, and an Iranian radical called for suicide attacks on the Jewish state.

In Turkey, a Muslim terrorist group opposed to the conference killed an American and seriously wounded an Egyptian diplomat in two bombings.

A Berlin newspaper, meanwhile, said in a report attributed to unidentified intelligence sources that seven Arab terrorists were in Madrid and planned to attack the sewer system under the conference site. The report in Berliner Kurier could not be confirmed independently.

Spain is mounting its biggest security operation ever — involving more than 12,000 people — to guard the heads of state, foreign ministers and thousands of delegates and journalists attending the talks that begin Wednesday.

Sharpshooters were posted on the roof of the 18th-century Royal Palace where the delegates will meet. Armored personnel carriers were parked around the granite building and anti-terrorist police were deployed around its formal gardens.

Israel officially refuses to talk with anyone from the PLO, which it views as a terrorist group out to destroy the Jewish state. Palestinians are attending the peace talks as part of a joint delegation with Jordan.

Today, however, it was Shiite Muslims — most Palestinians are Sunnis — who threatened the first face-to-face meeting between Israel and its Arab neighbors in more than 40 years.

The Beirut newspaper Ad-Diyar quoted Ali Akbar Mohtashemi, Iran's former interior minister, as describing the Madrid conference as "high treason" and a "crime against the Palestinian people."

Mohtashemi, a founder of Hezbollah, the Shiite group believed to be an umbrella for factions holding Western hostages in Lebanon, was quoted as saying: "I have the wish to sacrifice myself for the sake of fulfilling the teachings of Imam (Ayatollah Ruhollah) Khomeini for the liberation of Palestine."

In Ankara, Turkey, today, separate explosions killed an American serviceman and seriously wounded an Egyptian diplomat. The United States is a co-sponsor of the talks in Madrid; Egypt is the only Arab nation to sign a peace treaty with Israel.

An anonymous caller claimed responsibility for the bombings in the name of Islamic Jihad, and said: "We will not allow imperialist powers to share the Middle East during the peace conference."

Islamic Jihad means Islamic Holy War. A Shiite group by that name holds three hostages in Lebanon, but it appeared unlikely that the same people were behind the bombings in Turkey.

In Jerusalem today, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir rejected a proposal from Israel's Labor Party for a freeze on settlements in lands occupied in the 1967 Middle East War.

"We cannot accept preconditions to the opening of negotiations," Shamir said in a statement issued by his office. "The moment you announce a freeze or a halt you weaken our position in negotiations," he said, reiterating a long-held position.

Attack on bus leaves 2 Israeli settlers dead

By SERGEI SHARGORODSKY

JERUSALEM — Assailants opened fire today on a bus carrying Jewish settlers to a demonstration urging Israel not to trade land for peace at the Mideast peace conference in Madrid. Israel army radio said two settlers were killed and five wounded.

A military official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the attack occurred near Ariel, one of the largest Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank. Other officials confirmed the death figure.

It was not known who attacked the bus or what their motives were.

The incident could boost right-wing opposition in Israel to the peace conference and support for the

Nostradamus prediction circulates

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

The rumor of a Nostradamus prediction of a college dormitory massacre, heard around the University of Massachusetts, is being heard across many New England campuses.

Many other campuses have heard the rumor and some colleges plan to increase security, according to reports.

The rumor at UMass has centered around the James Residence Hall in Southwest. A meeting at the all-women's hall was held Thursday night to dispell the rumor which has been floating around the area for about two weeks.

Nostradamus was the 16th century astrologer who many believe predicted the assassination of the Kennedy brothers and World Wars I and II.

The other campuses which have heard the rumor circulate have heard similar predictions with specifics such as a building shaped like the letters "F," "H" or "T." Other rumors have mentioned a pond or a cemetery.

The rumor has been heard at the following campuses:

- Assumption College, no informantion available.
- Boston College, no information available.
- Boston University, no information available.

Police warn cash give-away is bogus

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

If a man called you on the phone offering you large sums of money with no strings attached, between $5,000 and $100,000, would you go and pick up the cash?

Since June, four people have fallen for this bogus deal, according to Richard Besse, University of Massachusetts crime prevention officer. He said there are probably many more victims who haven't reported the incident to the police.

"It sounds like the caller has defined and refined his story to be more convincing," Besse said.

Police believe one person is responsible for the annoying calls. He usually identifies himself as "Paul Rollins" and convincingly relates an elaborate, complex story on why and how he wants to give money away, Besse said.

The victims are told to pick up the package of money in the Campus Center at a certain date and time — but there is nothing there.

"Hang up on him. Don't waste your time," Besse said. "There are a lot of nuts in this world."

He warned that going to the designated pickup area could be dangerous.

"The possibility does exist for some type of assault," he said.

Amy, a University of Massachusetts student, crawled out of bed at 6:30 a.m. in late September to answer the phone. A man who identified himself as "Paul Rollins" proceeded to relate a "big, elaborate scheme" to give Amy $27,000. "Paul" told her he received from a "rich Uncle" in California.

Although she was initially annoyed by the early call, she said the man had a polite and business-like voice and discussed the financial problems of college students — something almost everybody can relate to. The conversation lasted one hour, she said.

"He said I think I can make you very happy," Amy said. She said the man soon began talking about his personal traits and then proceeded to ask her extremely personal questions regarding her sexual behavior.

"It was very strange. He's obviously very good at what he does," Amy said. When she went to the Campus Center hotel desk to see if the package was there, she found nothing.

She said she felt "like a jerk. I was pretty mad — more mad at myself that I thought this guy was going to give me money."

Amy added that she considers herself not a gullible person. "I fell for this but he's definitely not an amateur. It's hard not to fall for it," Amy said.

Besse said it is difficult to track down the caller because he never calls the same female twice. He said the University has dealt with bogus surveys in the past, but he has never seen anything like this rash of phone calls.

Besse related the old truism, "Remember, if it sounds to good to be true, it usually is."

Please don't feed the ducks

PLYMOUTH (AP) — Plymouth voters have outlawed feeding ducks and geese on a town pond, apparently agreeing with town officials who said the birds were fouling the water and eroding the surrounding area.

In a special election this weekend, the town residents voted 2-1 to prohibit feeding waterfowl on Jenney Pond in Plymouth's historic district.

The ban, which carries a $20 penalty, takes effect March 1.

"Being kind to animals is now a crime in Plymouth," said Dorothy Checci-O'Brien, who organized the petition drive that forced Saturday's vote on a ban enacted at an earlier town meeting.

"The message is very sad: It's perfectly fine to shoot ducks for the fun of it, but it's illegal to feed them for the fun of it," O'Brien said.

But Selectman Alba Thompson pointed out that Plymouth has more than 350 other freshwater ponds and 17 miles of ocean coastline.

"We're rich beyond dreams in ponds here," she said. "If you want to feed the ducks, all you have to do is walk a few steps toward the coast," Thompson said.

Local Democrats announce candidacy

•UM alumnus Hite devoted to education •Personal freedom key issue for Franklin

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Amherst resident Jon Hite declared his candidacy for the Third Hampshire District seat in the Massachusetts House of Representatives yesterday.

Hite, 36, made his announcement both at the Ann Whalen Apartments in Amherst and at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center because he said "both represent our government's most crucial role: furnishing people with the power to fully enjoy and participate in society."

The Third District's seat, consisting of Amherst and Pelham, became open when three-time representative Stanley Rosenberg was elected to the state senate in late September.

Hite, who has worked as deputy director of the Northampton Housing Authority since 1989, said he believes both his public education at the University of Massachusetts and career in public service would help him to represent the voters of Amherst and Pelham.

Jon Hite

"Thanks to the Commonwealth, thanks to the people of the Commonwealth, I had an opportunity to go to college, right here at the University of Massachusetts," Hite said.

"That opportunity has led me to spend my career in public service, trying to give something back to the Commonwealth that gave me a chance to better my life," Hite said.

Hite said Massachusetts has lost sight of the University's foundation of "quality and accessibility," through raising tuition and fees, denying qualified students access to financial aid and forcing faculty to leave through under-funding them.

"Accessibility is the moral foundation of the University," Hite said. "When I go to Boston I'm going to be leading the fight to rebuild that foundation so that it will be possible to turn the rhetoric of world class status into the reality that we know is in reach."

Hite said he supports the idea of a one-cent increase in the sales tax if the money is earmarked for education.

"It's important that elected representatives don't play the game of raising taxes and hiding the money," Hite said.

Many of the Commonwealth's schools have outmoded curriculums, while there is also a great discrepancy in quality between different town's school systems, according to Hite.

Hite said Massachusetts needs to start working to create more jobs through what he called "some old-fashioned pump-priming."

"We need to get some people back to work," Hite said.

The building trades such as construction provide the long-term jobs needed to help the state improve its economic position, Hite said.

Hite added he was "not necessarily against capital gains cuts to stimulate pro-

Democrat Terry Franklin of Amherst announced yesterday at a marijuana legalization rally that he is running for the Amherst/Pelham state representative seat vacated by Stanley Rosenberg.

Franklin accompanied by four other local people spoke on the Student Union steps during the rally sponsored by the University of Massachusetts/Amherst Cannabis Reform Coalition.

Wearing ordinary street clothes and a hat, Franklin explained his intentions as a candidate do not include conformity, which he said was symbolized in the "199 suits" at the State House.

Franklin's key issues to take to office are personal freedom, gay/lesbian rights, abortion rights, a lower drinking age and marijuana legalization. He also mentioned the environment, continued funding for Mass Transit for environmental reasons and education.

"The big thing is going to be education," he said, "But that is going to be the big issue for anyone from Amherst."

Franklin said he planned to be a graduate student when budget cuts eliminated the course he planned to study.

Recurring themes of five speakers at the rally, attended by about 100 people, were the connection between drug restrictions and alcohol prohibition and an infringement on the rights of Americans as a backlash of the war on drugs.

Al Giadonno, writer for the Valley Advocate, said crimes labeled as "drug related" are more "precisely prohibition-related." He said many crimes committed are caused by the inflated price of drugs, caused by prohibition, which leads people to steal to feed their habit.

Northampton lawyer Richard M. Evans said the "war on drugs" is actually a "war against its people."

Evans said current laws are "vicious police state law enforcement tactics." One such law revokes a person's driver's license for drug possession regardless of whether the person was driving at the time.

Terry Franklin

Evans quoted statistics which say 500,000 people are killed from alcohol and cigarettes every year.

"There has never been a recorded death from cannabis overdose," he said.

Franklin spoke of "puritanism," which he said was "a lot of people who are angry and bitter and want to run other peoples' lives for them."

Cannabis Reform Coalition Vice-President Aaron Wilson said the long-range goal of the registered student organization, which he said has 71 members, is to work towards passing a state referendum question in about two years. The group plans to bring bands to campus, show movies and build awareness on campus.

Cold showers in Coolidge during repairs

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

Coolidge Residence Hall students will be taking cold showers and sleeping with extra blankets while the University fixes a damaged underground steam pipe which feeds the building.

The hall, housing slightly over 500 students, will be without heat or hot water for about 36 hours, according to officials. The repairs started at about 6 a.m. Monday.

John Findley, assistant director for maintenance and operations, said workers are still unable to pinpoint the problem.

Findley said an underground steam line at the southwest corner of Coolidge ruptured, requiring immediate repair before the onset of winter.

The exact cause and extent of damage cannot be confirmed until the pipe has been fully excavated, Findley said. The repairs should not take more than 36 hours, although he said an exact time of completion is undetermined.

Rachel Haselkorn, a freshman School of Management major living in Coolidge, said she regards herself as one of the more fortunate residents.

"I slept elsewhere last night," Haslekorn said. "I know other freshmen with nowhere to go, taking cold showers."

Coolidge Residential Director Michael Wiseman said he remains optimistic about the problem.

"This is the stuff that makes life interesting," Wiseman said, although he acknowledged that his good humor, and that of the students, will depend upon the completion of repairs within the quoted period.

Wiseman said he expects tonight and tomorrow morning to prove the most inconvenient, with temperatures dropping overnight to around freezing.

Ruling concerns UM Committee

BOSTON (AP) — An animal care and use committee established by the University of Massachusetts board of trustees is not subject to the state's open meetings law, the state Appeals court ruled Monday.

The court said the committee, which makes sure animal research at UMass complies with state and federal laws and regulations, does not hold meetings at which public policy issues are discussed.

The open meetings law requires that meetings of most government boards must be open at which any public policy matter is considered.

Instead, the court said, the animal care and use committee inspects research facilities to determine whether policies already set are being followed.

The court declined, however, to accept UMass' arguments that only the board of trustees itself is subject to the open meetings law and that all of its committees are exempted.

The decision overturned an earlier Suffolk Superior Court ruling in favor of three citizens who had brought suit seeking open meetings.

Alleged fraternity tunneling incident to be investigated

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Police said 17 men were involved in a fraternity incident Thursday morning on Nutting Avenue now under investigation by authorities.

Members of the fraternity Lambda Chi Alpha were allegedly "tunneling," or travelling through the underground steam tunnels in the University, according to Edward P. Korza Jr., former Greek Affairs director and acting director of student activities.

Korza said the incident, which occurred at 2:38 a.m., was not an initiation. "It was basically a night out," he said.

Jonathan Stavis, a senior zoology major and fraternity educator for Lambda Chi Alpha, said he was one of the 17 men in the early morning gathering.

"It was a fraternity gathering," Stavis said. He said it was primarily for "stress relief."

"It wasn't initiation," Stavis said. "No one had been tunneling." He said the police may have responded to a noise complaint.

Fraternity President David Kula declined comment.

University of Massachusetts police spokesperson Philip Cavanaugh said the incident is under investigation and has been referred to the district attorney's office.

settlers' position that the government should not negotiate with Palestinian delegates sympathetic to the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

The bus was carrying settlers to Tel Aviv for a rally to show opposition to Israel surrounding land at the peace conference that opens Wednesday in Madrid, Spain. Such a concession is a key demand of Arab negotiators.

Radical Arab and Jewish groups have vowed to disrupt the peace talks.

Palestinian extremists fear Arab moderates will accept peace with Israel and lose the opportunity for forming an independent Palestinian state.

The attack occurred just at 6:15 p.m. at Tappuach junction, 18 miles north of Jerusalem and five miles from Ariel. Ariel is one of the largest Jewish settlements in the West Bank.

"This bus was on its way to peace demonstration to support firm stand by the government ... Several bursts of automatic gunfire were fired at it," said Aharon Domb, head of a settler center that monitors violence in the territories.

Military forces arrived to the scene of the attack and were searching the area, Israel army radio reported.

About 100,000 Jewish settlers have moved into the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip since 1967, when Israel captured these areas from Jordan and Egypt in the Six Day War. The West Bank and Gaza are home to 1.7 million Palestinians and the site of their uprising against the Israeli occupation.

Today's attack brought to 74 the number of Israelis killed during the uprising, which began in December, 1987. At least 865 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli soldiers or civilians and some 461 Arabs have been slain by other Palestinians on suspicion of collaborating with Israel.

ductive investment," but opposed capital gains cuts simply to allow wealthy people to "cash out and go to Florida."

Prior to beginning his position at the Northampton Housing Authority in 1989, Hite served two terms in the Amherst Housing Authority from 1981 to 1989. He served as chairperson of that body for five years.

Hite also served as director of the University's Alumni Office from 1982 to 1987. He has served as a legislative aide to former Amherst State Rep. Jim Collins from 1979 to 1981.

He graduated from the University in 1978 with a bachelor's degree in political science and served as the president of the Student Government Association while at the University.

Hite joins Ellen Story of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham as Democratic contenders for the state senate seat. Republicans Paul I. McGonnigal, a UMass undergraduate, and Georgia Parks of Amherst have said they will run for the seat. Democrat Terry Franklin also announced yesterday for the seat.

No date has been yet set for the election expected to be held sometime in February or March.

MOUNTED POLICE — Mounted Spanish Civil Guards patrol the grounds Monday outside the Palacio Real in Madrid where the Mideast peace talks will taken place Wednesday. Weak economy poses political worries for GOP

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bad economic news is causing political worries at the White House, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady acknowledges. But Republican National Chairman Clayton Yeutter predicts the economy will rebound by Election Day 1992.

Yeutter also said Sunday that he expects New York Gov. Mario Cuomo to enter and win the race for the Democratic presidential nomination. Democratic National Chairman Ron Brown said he doesn't know what Cuomo will do, but "he'd be very formidable against George Bush."

Brady, Yeutter and Brown appeared on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

The treasury secretary was asked whether the economy was viewed at the White House as a serious problem, not only economic but political.

"Not only do I, more importantly, the president views it as a serious problem," Brady replied. "It is obvious that the economy is not coming back as strongly as it should" from the recession.

He said the administration is working on the problem and the Democrats have not come up with any solutions that would not violate last year's budget agreement and result in higher taxes.

Brown said, "Our country is in economic trouble. We desperately need presidential leadership, and we're not getting it."

The Democratic chairman said he was "very pleased" with the present field seeking his party's presidential nomination and believed Cuomo would be a "very formidable candidate" should he end up as the nominee.

Yeutter said of Cuomo: "Been a candidate for weeks on end already. I think all he's really done is that with trial balloons every couple of weeks, he's pulled the rug out from under the other Democratic candidates and very cleverly retained the spotlight for himself. But we consider him a candidate right now."

Cuomo, who previously had scoffed at suggestions he might seek the nomination next year, has said recently that he's considering it and has discussed it with political and financial backers.

Yeutter, asked whether he thought the New York governor would be the nominee, replied, "Absolutely. I've felt that way for well over a year."

Then he was asked which he was most afraid of politically — Cuomo or the economy.

"Oh, I don't fear either one of them," he said. "The economy is going to be back on the upswing by the time the election rolls around."

Major declared Democratic presidential candidates include former Gov. Jerry Brown of California, Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas, Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa, Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska, former Sen. Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts and Gov. L. Douglas Wilder of Virginia.

President Bush has made no formal announcement but is expected to seek a second term.

IRS sheds refund checks

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service shredded alomost $5 million worth of 1990 tax refund checks deemed undeliverable by Los Angeles mail carriers.

The 8,642 checks worth $4,918,792 were returned to the IRS by postal officials in Los Angeles County because recipients had moved or handwritten addresses they provided were illegible.

"Most of the people have probably moved since they filed their returns. But others may have had bad handwriting we couldn't read<" said Jan Gribbon, a spokeswoman for the IRS office in Los Angeles.

"Or maybe they died and their heirs haven't contacted us."

The largest refund was $229,015 owed to a Beverly Hills taxpayer.

The IRS will issue new checks if taxpayers who had refunds shredded contact the agency.

The IRS is prohibited by law from purchasing newspaper advertising to publicize the names, administrators said.

Police officers hurt in bombing

BOSTON (AP) — Two police officers were injured in an explosion today after they were sent to a home to investigate a suspicious object, authorities and witnesses said.

The explosion occurred shortly after noon at a single-family home in the city's Roslindale neighborhood, and the injured police officers were taken to Brigham and Women's Hospital, authorities said.

Lewis Whittemore, an off-duty police officer who lived down the street, said he saw "two policemen lying on the ground." He said they looked "very seriously injured."

A hospital spokeswoman would only confirm that the officers had been brought in for treatment. Their conditions were not available.

Neighborhoods said they heard the explosion shortly after officers had arrived to investigate reports of an object at the back of the driveway.

"It sounded muffled, but it shook the house," said Nick Debenedictis, who was visiting a friend three homes away from where the explosion occurred. "I jumped out of my seat."

Debenedictis said he ran to the scene, where he saw a police officer on the ground, leaning against a fence.

"His face and arms were bleeding," he said. "He looked like he was knocked out."

A nearby elementary school, the Mozart School, was not affected by the blast and was not evacuated.

"Of course, the safety of the kids was the foremost consideration," schools spokesman Larry Faison said.

Feeling sick? Columnist has the cure for you

Now that your overworked minds have been overburdened with the five biggest factors contributing to our failing health, you can find rest knowing the solutions are less than a minute away. After revealing why germs flock to UMass like flies to road kill, you will learn how to control the massive semesterly influx. For those who have no idea what I'm talking about, a generous summation of the observation is given with each solution. You're welcome.

1. Problem: Sickness a side effect of popular brainwasher "It" pumped into D.C. scrod.

Diana D'Avanzo

Solution: Usurp the storage room Whitmore uses to house "It" and, after over-exhausted officials have entered a deep sleep resulting from a hectic day of student protests, marches and demonstrations, break into administrators' homes and inject "It" into every scrod in the house. If there is no scrod, bring some from the D.C. They won't miss it. The following day messages such as "Freedom for Students," "Pay Cuts for Administrators" and "Free Chinese Take-out for All Undergrads" should be played over several locations across campus. If this doesn't work, hold a "Save the Scrod" sit-in. Unfortunately, this may force the University to look to the chicken pucks as a possible "It" go-between.

2. Problem: Illnesses part of intricate plot by munchy store managers to make high priced remedies appear appealing.

Solution: You know those hottest days of summer when you're packing for next semester? Well, when mom is on your back about not leaving cold medicine behind, LISTEN TO HER! Winter seems years away but remember this is UMass, sickness shows no predilection for seasons. Remember the cold stuff and don't forget vitamins. Unfortunately, munchy staff will have gotten us sick before they realize sales aren't moving. At least you'll save some cash.

3. Problem: STTCI (Small Things That Cause Illness) imported for demented officials' enjoyment.

Solution: In a remote area of the world, north of Zimbabwe and south of New Zealand, a rare dangerous anti-STTCI drug has been discovered by happy headhunters. The anti-STTCI drug, cleverly named the "anti-STTCI drug," effectively succeeds in destroying the "small things" that infect students on contact. The only drawback is that since there is no actual evidence for problem No. 3, the placement of anti-STTCI on dorm mattresses could have an adverse effect on students. Clinical tests show anti-STTCI must come into contact with STTCI within twenty-four hours. Otherwise the drug will enter the left ear of the sleeping student and cause said student's head to explode leaving a mass of pulpy material as room decoration. Scientists believe "head-exploding" may be related to the headhunting environment anti-STTCI is taken from.

4. Problem: Bathroom non-cleaning on the weekends.

Solution: You might say, "We could make them clean bathrooms on weekends, free-from-brains." However, it's not as simple as it sounds. Case in point: the Brooks House Heating Crisis. After over a month someone looked into the problem. The heat has yet to be turned on. The swing space down the hall is fully heated. So what do we do? Complain until they fix it. This may work. If not, we could transport the creepy-crawlies from the restrooms to responsible officials' chairs. At least they'd move their behinds.

5. Problem: D.C. silverware placed in clear sight of overanxious hands.

Solution: Only thing that comes to mind is silverware dispensers along the lines of napkin dispensers. One utensil would come up at a time. Sanitary silverware is hard to come by but the D.C. does try. To avoid tableware cooties, invest in your own set.

There you have it. The problems, the solutions. The rest is up to you. Students of UMass unite!

Homophobia outrages students

We are writing to you to express our outrage and indignation at the intolerance and homophobia which is present on this campus. We are not claiming that the countries we come from are free of prejudice but we have been shocked by the level of intolerance we have seen at the University of Massachusetts, something we did not expect to find on a university campus.

We are referring specifically to the comments made by the band playing at the Hatch Friday night, October 18. They are indicative of a general level of narrow-mindedness which has evidenced itself in the furor over the open housing policy at Brett. We were in the Hatch on Friday night and feel that we must take issue with your columnist over their implication that LBGA is overly sensitive to such issues.

Lesbians, gays and bisexuals face massive discrimination within our society every day and therefore we hope that our outrage is understandable when we see it evidenced in an atmosphere which is supposedly more liberal and open. We must all question our prejudices and recognize them, otherwise they will continue to grow unabated. The incident at the Hatch is not the only evidence of homophobia that we have encountered on this campus and although we recognize that there are many open-minded students on this campus, the bigoted members of this community are creating an unpleasant and hateful atmosphere for everyone.

Texas tragedy doesn't compare

An article in the October 17 Collegian was headlined "Man kills 22 in Texas." Directly below the headline was the subheading "Massacre deadliest in U.S. history." While this incident was a needless tragedy, I would like to point out that it was a far cry from being the "deadliest massacre in U.S. history."

"Massacre" is defined as "the act or an instance of killing a number of human beings under circumstances of atrocity or cruelty." With that in mind, consider the wholesale slaughter of innocent Iraqis, cloaked under the facade of "freedom and democracy." And as the Iraqi children still suffer slow, agonizing deaths due to disease and hunger, our own government refuses to lift sanctions. This qualifies as a massacre to me, substantially more deadly than the tirade of one deranged individual in Texas.

The cold-blooded acts of our present government and corporate sectors are a direct offshoot of the colonial barbarism perpetrated by the "discoverer" of America and his pack of ruthless thugs. Armed with swords, muskets, and twisted logic, they decimated an entire population of Arawak Indians in a relentless flurry of racist greed.

Five centuries of power, privilege and hierarchy is the savage history of this continent. And the United States, fueled by a dangerously obsolete economic system which dictates overproduction, expansion through exploitation and murder, commits massacres on a daily basis.

AIDS has been allowed to run rampant. More and more Americans are living in poverty and suffering without adequate health care. Outside of this country, the unfortunate recipients of the United State's "benign hand" are being driven ever closer to the brink of extinction. This all makes the incident in Texas seem quite small. Furthermore, the assailant there had at least enough humanity to take his own life as well.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Ahhh, the notes. Better than a bowel movement and half as smooth.

Lots of different people have different ideas on what should be done with dead bodies. Some people want to be buried, some want to cremated. There are people out there that want to have their ashes tossed in the ocean (that can't be very sanitary, imagine eating some steamers or clams or something and finding some guy's Timex?). Personally, I don't want to be just burned. I want to be smoked, too.

I got the strangest letter this week. It wasn't signed of course and I hate that but this person wondered "if graffiti of the week was always going to be pseudo-academic scrawls and quotes by those the society at large deems academic or can anybody play this game?" Gee, the last one was a little ditty about the Road Runner, at least I don't consider that academic. Basically the rules are: send me graffiti.

Speaking of Graffiti of the Week, this week the entry comes from the hallowed halls of the Fine Arts Center. "Life is a joke and death is the punchline." Boy, we've been getting deep lately haven't we?

I hear the GEO doesn't want to pay its fees, sounds like a good deal to me. How do I get in on this?

Marc Elliott

Here's a good example of how the state treats students. Let's say the students raise some cash either through collecting a student activities fee or maybe by running say ... lemme think ... a daily student newspaper. Okay, because we're all a bunch of skeevy public school kids, the state requires that we keep all our money in trust funds to keep us from spending it all on beer and other household necessities. Okay, now they make us conduct all of our transactions through these trust funds and then charge us for the service they provide (that is, the privilege of using their trust funds). On top of that, since they're holding our money all the time (we never get to see actual cash, just these slips of paper called "P.O.s"), they also keep any interest made from the money. Cool, eh?

Here's something fun to do for all those out there that watched and enjoyed all of the Friday the 13th movies. Go somewhere where they play their muzak way too loud, drop to the floor with your hands cupped over your ears and scream "MAKE IT STOP! MAKE IT STOP!" over and over. Or try it in your favorite lecture class.

Jody wanted to be in the column.

If you think life pulls some crazy stunts, let's talk about love. Now love is one aspect of life that makes some pretty weird crap hit the fan. Take Michael Cooper and Nicola Love, for example. These two just tied the knot Saturday. Where did they meet? Well they were on the same plane when it was being held hostage by Iraq in August 1990. Better than single bars? You decide.

Once a year everybody gets a chance to wear some funky digs and run around collecting candy, sounds great.

"Fun with Algae" — the cutting edge in Christmas gifts.

All anybody really needs to be happy is a grassy hill on a sunny day, a good book and a member of the opposite sex (depending on your preference) you really enjoy spending time with. Well, maybe some beer and a sports car too, but I could deal.

That's all folks! So if you think I'm just a total loser that looks way too much like Judge Reinhold or if you have a submission for Graffiti of the Week or even if you just have something to say, please, write in and let me know. Just drop off all correspondence at the classifieds desk at the Collegian offices addressed to: That Big Jerk Marc Elliott.

Remember (I can't believe I'm resorting to writing this one): "I've fallen and I can't get up!"

Acappella myths dispelled by Flirts

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

The Flirtations
Campus Center Auditorium
Sunday Oct. 27th

"I saw them walking down the street, singing in Provincetown to advertise their show. I didn't get to see them, but now I will," said Meg Hull about the five-member, multi racial, gay-male acappella super-group, The Flirtations.

Using their clever wit, riotous jokes, and smooth harmonious vocals, The Flirtations kept the audience glued to their chairs until the standing ovation at the end of the performance.

Although the auditorium was packed, the older, more mature community crowd seemed to preside over the more scattered amounts of students.

"I don't know about other people, but for me, it's kind of like a reunion," said Jagannathan, a physics teacher at Amherst College. I'm running into people that I haven't seen in a long time."

"How many of you have seen us before?" called out a Flirtations member. Most of the audience cheered. The group referred to the rest of the audience as "Flirt Virgins".

The Flirtations really lived up to their name. Before they even started to sing their first number, they were asking for single males in the audience who were "willing to play on the side". Puerto Rican Flirt member, Aurelio Font, was generously seeking anyone interested in his two lesbian sisters. "They both look like me," he joked, "With slightly less of a mustache."

Their first song was sung to the 50s tune "At the Hop," but the words were changed for a more personal and political touch. While the lyrics, "Bop 'till you drop, shop for a top" got some laughs, the lines "you gotta come out if you want to get down" aroused applause.

By no means did their political and social statements substitute for talent. The cheesy, tough-guy falsetto I envisioned in typical acapella was quickly dispelled. The molasses-smooth bass of Cliff Townsend along with the other members' ringing melodies seemed to rip off the roof and show the stars in their romantic 50s-style love songs .

"Mr. Sandman" was a hit with the audience as Flirt Michael Callen hammed it up with squeals and screams at just the right time. Ironically enough, this group's most vivacious member has had AIDS for about nine years. Callen has authored a book about his experiences called Surviving AIDS. Pleading Mr. Sandman for not just any guy, the Flirts asked for "no one psychotic or Republican ... Bring me a queen".

The show was emceed by a staff member of the UMass Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns, JoElla Costello, who got the audience rolling herself with her exaggerated Texan drawl, constant references to the BGLAD calendar "under your butta," and her own wet noodle version of the "Flirt Greeting".

The Flirt Greeting, which was described by The Flirts as either a greeting or a harsh judgement, consisted of a fully extended dropping of the arm out toward the greeted one, accompanied by an ecstatic cry and wiggling fingers. The effect was so cute that everyone in the audience had to demonstrate their individual technique. For those that needed more practice, The Flirtations suggested a support group for "heterosexuals who are trying to be queer."

"I find myself too butch to do this at all," said bald, bespeckled Flirt member, Joe Arterton, who previously lived in Northampton and participated in the Smith College Theater Department.

Showing their more serious side, The Flirtations sung a song for former Flirt member, T.J. Myers, who died of AIDS last summer. Their sweet, strong harmonizing in "My Buddy" was just enough to create a powerful, but not too weepy mood. Pausing at the end of the song, the audience held back immediate applause as the group fought back their tears.

Aurelio Font woke up the audience with laughter as he called himself a "lesbian wanna-be". His next song was dedicated to his lesbian great-aunt who became a district attorney in Puerto Rico. "Their words rang so true as they whispered I love you" was just one Font's childhood thoughts recalling "las mujeres enamorada".

Southerner Jummy Rutland reached back to his high school days of torture in a fantasy song about homecoming. The song took a surprise attack turn, evolving into Julie Brown's "The Homecoming Queen's Got A Gun" in which Jimmy had to take the dead queen's place.

"The university is very lucky to have Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns lead by Felice (Yeskel)," said one of the members of the group before their finale.

After the standing ovation, the audience jumped back into their seats for an encore number which seemed to be the Flirtations theme song. "We'd go straight to the top if we change our image," they sang, but, "We're gonna do it anyway."

Buddy Guy to play the Horse

By ROLAND COGGIN
Collegian Correspondent

Lucky fans will be treated to a blues experience that few New Englanders have witnessed when Buddy Guy plays four shows at the respected Northampton club Tuesday and Wednesday. His amazing singing and guitar work promises to touch the soul of all who see him.

"An appreciation of good music is more important than a knowledge of the blues to enjoy him live."

Buddy Guy started playing in Louisiana at an early age as the son of a cotton picker. Inspired by bluesmen like "Guitar Slim" Jones and B.B. King, he left for Chicago to make a name for himself and meet the city's great players. He earned a reputation as one of the best guitarists in Chicago during its peak in the 50s by competing in "Battles of the Blues," but he wasn't making enough money to feed himself. In a famous moment in blues history, Muddy Waters, an idol of Buddy's, got him some food and a recording deal, starting off his string of session jobs and solo recordings.

Buddy Guy has received the most praise for the raw power of his live performances. Almost twenty years before Jimi Hendrix, he was playing behind his head, with his teeth, and wandering into the audience as he played. He has written dozens of classic blues tunes, soulfully singing like a man who has paid his dues.

Guy has never been known as widely as the younger players he influenced. Eric Clapton (who calls him the best blues guitarist alive), Jeff Beck, and the late Stevie Ray Vaughan have all raved about Buddy and have told of the effect he has had on them. Some critics claim he is the man most responsible for the Blues Invasion of the 60s. Yet he only seems to be appreciated by small circles of guitarists and blues fans.

Buddy Guy may finally win the respect he deserves with his first album in twelve years, Damn Right I've Got the Blues; which includes guest appearances by Clapton, Beck, and Mark Knopfler. He has come close to capturing the sound and intensity of his live performances on a studio album, and people are noticing. In his appearances at Clapton's famous Albert Hall concerts, he has become notorious for bringing the house down with his show stealing act. He can be heard on 24 Nights at Albert Hall, the great double live album, along with a host of other blues talent.

The chance to see a living legend in a local club should not be passed up. At 55, Buddy Guy shows no sign of slowing down, and dazzles audiences with the same playing and showmanship of his younger days. An appreciation of good music is more important than a knowledge of the blues to enjoy him live.

If you can afford the $17.50, check him out at the Iron Horse tonight at 7:00 and 10:00, or Wednesday, Oct. 30 at the same times. Call 586-8686 for more info. See you there if I win the lottery.

Rippopotamus & The Mal Thursday Experience
Pearl Street Night Club
Saturday, Oct. 26

Two of the area's favorite local bands returned to Northampton's Pearl Street Night Club last Friday night, and — to say it straight from the beginning — both proved that they earned their popularity legitimately.

The night was opened by the five-member Mal Thursday Experience, playing a humorous mixture of sixties-rock, punk music and even blues and jazz. A good example of this was the opening song, a grooving version of Miles Davis' "All Blues".

The driving force of the band was drummer Nelson Bragg; his powerful, enthusiastic playing quickly inspired the other four members of the band to reveal their impressive abilities: guitarists Chris Souzy and Ezra Gale started lending an ear to each other, exchanging riffs and lines, their sounds merging and reinforcing each other.

Brent Nielsen on bass — who hardly played a solo during this concert — was equally attentive, his basslines full, round, well-considered and always on the beat. Mal Thursday, the burlesque head of the band, supported his four musicians with broad chords on his organ and after some initial restraint his voice became voluminous and clearly audible.

The band had its best moments while playing extensive solos, producing crashing, sparkling iridescent soundwaves engulfing the whole dancehall.

After a short break the eight musicians of Rippopotamus showed up with the classical bass-drum-guitar-vocals rock ensemble enlarged by a four-man horn section. The bands music was an incredibly effective synthesis of big band swing, rhythm and blues and rap enthralling the listeners. Songs like Marvin Gaye's ballad "I heard it through the grapevine" were changed into rocking, stomping, up-tempo funk-rap songs that forced the audience to jump up and dance, transforming the club into a boiling musical cauldron. The outstanding soloist and bass player Allyn Martin supplied the band with the necessary funky slap licks and gave hammering, evolving solos a la George Clinton.

Very precise and forceful also was the horn section, giving quick rhythmic unison riffs as well as more complex polyharmonic lines. Singer Michael Stevens should also be mentioned, his humorous style matching perfectly the bands' unpretentious full force sound. On the whole a great concert night, the audience being absolutely delighted by their local musical heroes.

Black Affairs

Avery to discuss Black health

By SONDRA SUTTON
Collegian Staff

On November 4 in room 168 of the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts, the Black Mass Communications project presents Ms. Byllye Avery.

Avery is the founder of the National Black Women's Health Project. The NBWHP is a self-help and health advocacy organization committed to improving the health of Black women.

The NBWHP began in 1981 as a pilot program of the National Women's Health Network and was incorporated as a non-profit organization in 1984. Since that time it has become an internationally-recognized grassroots advocacy organization run by Black women, for Black women.

The creation of the project stemmed from a lack of information and services for the health care of Black women, and also from the fact that the information which is available is difficult for Black women in low income to take advantage of. In addition, the project was founded because the overall needs of Black women have been ignored.

The project promotes healthy changes in lifestyles, changes in family, and work relationships and also changes in the ways Black women perceive themselves.

NWBHP's approach was developed with the understanding that Black women's health problems are aggravated by extreme stress caused by socio-economic factors such as poverty, racism and the impact of increasing rates of crime in the communities in which they live.

Although the project was created with the Black women in mind, the project also encourages Black men to take better care of themselves as well as paying attention to stress factors which also have a tremendous effect on their health as well.

Avery will discuss various health problems for which Black women are at greater for, as well as discussing the AIDS epidemic, and the effects it has and will have on Black women. Avery askes both Black men and women to attend the lecture.

Ms. Byllye Avery, who will speak at the University of Massachusetts on November 4, in room 168 Campus Center.

Who are we anyway?

There are many ways that we, as Black people, catorgorize and divide ourselves.

For example, we describe ourselves as being dark skinned, light skinned, or brown skinned.

We have either "good hair" or "nigger naps." We are educated, ignorant, or street wise.

We are Northerners, Southerners, or West Indian; and each group thinks that they have something up on the other.

Michelle Cannon

Dig a little deeper and you will find that the above mentioned groups divide themselves even futher. For example, Northerners are either from the city or the suburbs and suburbanites are considered to be weak.

Southerners are either from the city or the country, and country people are thought to be slow.

West Indian people never refer to themselves as just West Indian, because they might be associated with another Caribbean country. They always define themselves by their country of orgin; Dominicans, Jamaicans, Antiguans, Trinidadians — the list of divisions goes on and on.

Additionally, on this campus there are also "jocks" and "non jocks," "Greeks" and "non Greeks." It gets very tiring trying to figure out who belongs to these groups.

I know that some of you are reading this and saying "What's wrong with being proud of your culture?" There is absolutely nothing wrong with being proud of your culture. It and other factors are what make up you personality; a unique individual. There is, however, something wrong when pride turns to arrogance and people get dissed because of who they are.

What I'm trying to say is, respect yourselves and each other. It doesn't matter how long the hair or how fair the skin. It doesn't matter where you are from, what sport you play, what kind of car you drive, or what organization you belong to.

WE ARE ALL BLACK! or African American, what ever you choose to call yourself. I think that we as a race need to look beyond all the other stupidness, and remember that very important fact.

Believe me, there are other people out there who are not about to forget that you are.

Yo, What's Up?

ALANA productions in the making

By SONDRA SUTTON
Collegian Staff

How many of you are juniors or seniors, and you have not had any hands on experience within your field of study? How many of you are first-year students and sophomores who would like experience in your field?

Well, you are in luck. The Department of Academic Support Services is providing you with this opportunity with new ALANA video project.

When interviewing Suncear R. Screetchen, one of the projects organizers, she said that they are looking for people who are interested in video production, scriptwrighting, performing, as well as marketing and advertising for other persons to be apart of the project.

The video project will be viewed on the University's cable system. A various amount of original entertaining, educational and informational programs will be produced by the project.

Some of the projects up and coming programs include a music video show, news and talk shows as well as the taping of concerts, sport events, plays and various events which happen throughout the University of Massachusetts and the surrounding Five-College area.

Those who are interested should contact Kimya Warfield, another project organizer or come by 208 Whitmore Administration Building. Kimya is excited about the project and hopes many members of the ALANA community becomes an active part of the project.

Screetchen said, "This project could be a very positive step for the ALANA community on campus, but it can not succeed without the support of the ALANA students."

DON'T WAIT UNTIL IT IS TOO LATE!

"Sister, Sister I feel good about you"

I am a Black Man. Every breath that I take is black, every step that I take is in blackness. Black is a way of life not just a color of skin. Black is the only life that I know, and it is the only life that I want to know.

I am a Black Man in a land where the flag stands for oppression, racism, war inequality and thievery. Do you actually expect me to stand and salute this?

I live in a White man's world, which is on a constant mission to destroy my race. Drugs can be stopped, if we put a man on the moon it is possible to stop drugs, but they want us to kill ourselves.

I am a Black Man at a White University that does not care about me or anyone who looks slightly like me.

I do not have to hear about another fight over a baseball game, I don't have to see one of my brother get jumped for food, nor do I have to read about a sister being harassed by the University police to know that this University is racially-motivated.

Some ask why I still attend the University. Well in order to succeed I must learn the way in which the White man is taught, learn to work with them, get what they get and more and learn the system that is trying to destroy me .

Jeff Lawrence

This knowledge then must be passed to younger brothers and sisters so that they know how this world really works. This not paranoia, it is the reality in which I live. Can you relate?

I am a Black Man. I love my Black sisters and salivate over no other. I believe that without my sister by my side, I surely will die. I wouldn't sell her out for money, fame, a Supreme Court nomination and surely not for a moment of Whiteness.

Sisters are to be protected, loved and respected for she is the foundation of my existence.

"Sister, sister I feel good about you."

I am a Black Man. I write for a White newspaper. I must write to my people and speak the truth. My people do not need any more lies; especially from one of their own.

This article and all others are subject to public response from all sides.

One can say what they want about my article, it was written for conversations, but I would appreciate it if all of you would not direct your personal dysfunctions to my character. Love! No peace until justice, and no justice until equality. 5000!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): The spotlight is on domestic activity. Share household chores with small fry -they love to participate. A lost article surfaces in an unexpected place. Give a loved one a second chance.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): You should enjoy a run of good fortune now. Be willing to travel; you will land right where you belong. Attending a glamourous social event is worth the price tag this evening.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Work the communication lines today. Your powers of persuasion are at a peak. Hiding your talents will hinder progress. Let influential people see what you can do. Loved ones deserve more TLC.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): You could be doing a balancing act when it comes to paying your bills. Set your sights high; will power carries you to victory! Seek the attention of people who can help your career.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Now is not the time to experiment with questionable ideas or to reveal your long-range plans. Family members make shrewd advisers. Real estate transactions are favored.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be alert to details. Financial decisions cannot be made lightly. Double-check all correspondence and payment schedules. Keeping a low profile is a good safety net now.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your instincts are excellent when it comes to financial matters. Keep spending to a minimum. Shared funds have long-range usefulness. Traveling to an exotic place is a source of inspiration.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Watch your step, so-called "bargains" may not be worth the asking price. An unpaid debt could come back to haunt you. Postpone making a major career or personal decision. Romance is chancy.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Plan ahead and everything should go smoothly. Sound confident when speaking with those in authority. Emphasize your desire to improve your skills and gain specialized knowledge.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your power peaks. Attend to pressing business now — it is risky to wait until the last minute. Touch base with key players on your team -there is still a lot to learn.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You could encounter some obstacles along the employment path. Seek several opinions when trying to solve a financial or career problem. Be aware of upcoming events in your field.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Correspondence regarding contracts and finances can help you lock up new profits today. Be a doer, not a couch potato. The emphasis at work is on finding out the facts. Take nothing for granted.

Any club sport is bound to face adversity in various forms, however the University of Massachusetts Racquetball Club appears to have overcome these difficulties through the dedication and hard work of the club's president and vice-president.

Club president Robert Ansin, a junior from Leominster, and vice-president Nathan Bearman, a senior from Birmingham, Ala., speak of the club as if it were their own child and their pride is apparently warranted.

"Last year was the first year we decided to put everything into making the club successful," Ansin said. "It's gone beyond our wildest imagination."

The club has over 40 members, is currently ranked number one in the Eastern Region and ninth nationally. That is no small feat when opponents such as Penn State, Syracuse University and West Point are taken into consideration.

The strong competition aside, Bearman prefers the term "team" over that of club because of the numerous workouts, practice sessions and conditioning that racquetball requires.

"We try and cater to the people who miss that element of team sports," Ansin said. "We're an athletic team."

The team practices two hours per day, four days a week and also has weekend bike rides and various workout sessions.

All funding comes strictly from fundraising and the success of such drives is clearly evident in the fact that representatives form the racquetball club went to Phoenix last year to compete in a national competition. Still, recognition and respect are hard to come by for the team and Ansin finds that hard to swallow.

"They were there [in Phoenix] representing the University, and I didn't think it was fair to the team [that there was no recognition]," Ansin said.

However, neither Ansin nor Bearman dwell on the fact that their sport is often overshadowed by the varsity teams, instead they continue to try and promote the game played between four walls, where the small rubber ball travels in excess of 150 miles per hour.

"It's no problem to start playing racquetball when you're in college," Bearman said. "And it's not the kind of sport you have to stop playing when you're out of school."

The sport has seen a recent growth in popularity, from television coverage on ESPN to the prospect of racquetball becoming an Olympic sport, according to Ansin.

"There's a lot of money being put in behind the scenes," Ansin said.

Racquetball is extremely fast-paced and Ansin explained much of the skills involved require proper judgment of angles and limited movement.

"I like getting hit in the ass with the ball," Ansin joked. "Seriously, it's a great way to stay in shape and it's easy to get a lot better rather quickly."

Bearman said he enjoys the one-on-one competition involved in the sport.

"It's more one-on-one than any other sport besides wrestling," Bearman said. "I also enjoy helping out others who are just starting, trying to teach them the sport."

Men harriers place second at A-10's

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team placed second at the Atlantic 10 Championship Meet Saturday.

Bob Donker of West Virginia was the top finisher over the five mile course at Van Cortland Park in New York. He won the race in a time of 25:37.

Donker's performance helped West Virginia take the team title in the meet. The Mountaineers scored 34 points.

UMass scored 62 points to take second. They were followed by Rutgers, with 90 points, Rhode Island, with 93 and St. Joseph's, with 101.

"I felt as though we would probably finish second," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "I thought we could beat the rest of the teams in the meet. The only way that we could have won is if we had had an outstanding race from our entire top seven."

Matt Simon was the top finisher for the Minutemen. He placed sixth in 26:16.

Other runners scoring for UMass were Pat Reed, who placed ninth in 26:29, Pat Ryan (14th, 26:43), Keith Willis (15th, 26:48) and Kevin Greenhalgh (18th, 26:57).

"Matt Simon, Pat Reed and Pat Ryan ran an outstanding race," O'Brien said. "Most of the other runners on the team had only an average day.

"West Virginia earned the title. They had a great day from all their runners."

O'Brien said that the second place performance Saturday, on the heels of a second place finish at the Eastern Conference Meet the week before, should put the Minutemen in a pretty good position going into the New England Championships Nov. 1.

up, still holding the ball, like nothing happened.

Atlanta's base-running blunders — Dave Justice allegedly missing third base in Game 2, and Smith not scoring on a double in Game 7.

Generally excellent fielding by both teams.

The Metrodome — love it or hate it, it was a factor. The Twins are 8-0 in World Series play there.

The Tomohawk Chop — love it or hate it, it was a factor. After being the National League's doormat for so many years, Atlanta's fans deserved to behave however the hell they wanted. If they make the Series next year, then we'll talk about banning it.

CBS provided a multitude of great camera angles and good announcing from Jack Buck and Tim McCarver.

Except for a strike zone that at times bordered on the size of a stamp, the umpires did a tremendous job, especially Terry Tota calling Mark Lempke safe on Harper's elbow tag in Game 4. You would be hard pressed to find a better call all season.

Atlanta's young pitchers keeping their cool under such tremendous pressure.

Atlanta's hitters leaving 52 men on base, Minnesota, 47. Atlanta's diminutive Mark Lemke's three triples.

Twins' center fielder Kirby Puckett, a genuine good guy in a league of crybabies, shedding his Games 1-5 slump to homer in the 11th inning of Game 6 to win it.

Jack Morris. In an era of million dollar starters getting yanked in favor of pitch-for-peanuts middle relievers, think of what the veteran workhorse did in Game 7 — 10 shutout innings on three days rest. At 36 years old. An amazing performance.

Major League Baseball is over for another season. It will be a tough off-season for baseball fans everywhere. But let's keep one thing in mind—pitchers and catchers report for spring training on February 21st. See you somewhere in Florida.

suffer The Curse of The Bambino, and consequently he's celebrated two titles with his beloved Twins.

Right after the Twins won, I called him and told him how lucky he was, and how I wish I knew the feeling. I felt a bit like President Bush probably did when he called Twins manager Tom Kelly just a few minutes later.

I was most impressed by the performance of Series MVP Jack Morris. Morris had been one of the best pitchers in baseball since he hit the scene in 1977, but with every start he'd made in the past couple of years, I thought he'd be ready to call it quits at any moment. He just didn't seem to have it anymore. Regardless, the Twins handed him a bundle to join their cause this year, and he responded by winning 18 games during the regular season, 4 in the post-season, and for a grand finale, he threw a 10-inning, Game 7 shutout victory that will forever be regarded as one of (if not the) greatest pitching performance in a World Series game.

Not that he'll mind a whole lot, but Gene Larkin didn't exactly receive the fanfare he deserved following Game 7. Larkin came to bat with one out in the bottom of the 10th with the bases loaded, and hit a long single to left field that scored Dan Gladden for the game winner. CBS didn't show the replay once. Sure, they'll show the replay of a first inning, routine ground ball three or four times, but why bother showing the hit that wins the World Series a laborious second time?

Larkin wasn't interviewed by Jim Kaat in the clubhouse afterwards, either. He had gone 1-for-3 in the Series prior to the biggest at-bat of his life. The only non-pitchers who had batted fewer times in the Series entering Game 7 were Al Newman (1-for-2) and Javis Brown (0-for-2). Talk about your unlikely heroes, Larkin made me forget all about Mark Lemke.

Last-to-first series is one for the books

Twins 2nd title takes me back Braves loss leaves empty feeling

In 1984, I moved to Arlington, Mass., a suburb west of Boston, and I immediately became a Red Sox fan. Upon my first visit to the wondrous Fenway Park, I fell in love with the Old Towne Team.

But before moving to Arlington, I lived in Southeast Minneapolis, just a hop, skip, and a jump from the Metrodome, home of the 1991 World Series Champion Minnesota Twins. From 1980, when I saw my first game at the old Metropolitan Stadium in which the Twins beat the Oakland A's, 20-11, until 1983, my last year in Minnesota, I was a big-time Twins fan.

Ted Kottler

Once I headed East and became a Red Sox fan, I didn't exactly stop being a Twins fan, but I couldn't really savor their 1987 World Championship. I must have still had the bad taste in my mouth the Red Sox left me with the year before (heck, of course I did, it'll never go away).

But, I was proud the Twins had come a long way from the early 80s when players like Hosken Powell, Roger (not Scott) Erickson, and Pete Mackanin filled the Twins roster. These guys were some pretty mediocre ballplayers, and they never helped the Twins amount to much.

I fondly remember when a slim Kent Hrbek broke into the league in 1982, and was the leading candidate for the American League Rookie of The Year until Cal Ripken, Jr. really heated up and Hrbek tailed off a bit. At the time Hrbek was my idol and that of most other nine-year old boys that I knew. Today, a somewhat chubbier Hrbek is still a fan favorite in Minnesota, and it's nice to see that my first true idol has now played for two World Championship teams.

Back in 1982, I would have guessed the Red Sox would win a World Series before the Twins did.

In 1987, I was also pleased to see the Twins take it all for my Dad's sake. He's been a baseball fan all his life (he attended Game 7 of the 1960 World Series, in which Bill Mazeroski hit a solo home run in the bottom of the 9th inning to give the Pittsburgh Pirates a 10-9 win and a 4-3 series win over the New York Yankees, the only series that ended with a home run), but he didn't become a Twins fan until I did, when he took me to that first game 11 years ago. The only difference, though, is that he's still a Twins fan. He wasn't as foolish as I was to TWINS WIN — The Minnesota Twins' Jack Morris is hugged by teammate Chuck Knoblauch, center, as the Twins celebrate their 1-0 win over the Atlanta Braves in Game 7 of the World Series Sunday night. Morris, who pitched 10 innings during Sunday's game, was named the series' Most Valuable Player.

With health permitting, I hope one day to sit down with my children and grandchildren and deliver the age-old "when I was your age" spiel.

Yep," I would say, "that Series in '91 was something else."

There isn't much left to say regarding the 1991 World Series that concluded Sunday night. Over the past 11 days we've been bombarded with all the cliches that exist to describe "Cinderella story" teams, close games, etc. But one was inevitable, and sure enough, after Game 7, it reared its ugly head.

"It's a shame someone had to lose."

Kevin Herlihy

The World Champion Minnesota Twins and the runners-up Atlanta Braves treated us to the most exciting Series of my 22 years on this earth, and maybe of all time. At the beginning of the Series, who would have thought that these two last-place-to-first-place teams would provide such gut-wrenching action?

Five one-run games. Four games decided in last at-bats. Three extra inning games. Does anybody know C.P.R.?

The Braves are my team. Thanks to television's catering to the east coast market, all games started at 8:30 in the evening. Sunday night I acted as if my entire life hinged on every pitch. It was excruciating. When it ended I tried to sleep but only tossed and turned for two hours.

Without sounding like a sentimental fool, I felt a loss when Barry Larkin singled over a drawn-in outfield, ending the Braves' bid at glory. A loss felt not only for my beloved Braves, but for the last baseball game of the season.

I gobble up baseball information with voracity. Peter Gammons' baseball page in each Sunday's Boston Globe is the best pile of sports stuff I've ever seen. I'd plunk down $1.50 for that page alone. It's a baseball junkie's dream.

From the 1991 World Series, these moments (in no particular order), along with others, will stay with me for a long time to come:

Kent Hrbek blatantly pulling Ron Gant off first base in Game 2.

Kent Hrbek receiving death threats from way too serious Braves' fans for said pulling.

Lonnie Smith absolutely plowing over Twins catcher Brian Harper, who bounced

Proposal gets mixed reactions from coaches

Editor's note: This is the third of a four-part series depicting the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The proposal to continue men's soccer for another season received mixed reactions from coaches and administrators yesterday.

While all the coaches support continuing the program, some felt as if the part which asks them to fund up to 30 percent of their budget within two years and 15 percent next year was unreasonable.

"I don't think (we can fund 30 percent), not if we're going to stay in the upper echelon of Division I lacrosse programs," said UMass lacrosse coach Ted Garber.

The soccer program was cut from the Athletic Department's budget this past spring. However, they were able to raise enough money so that they could come back for what has been termed their "terminal" season.

The initial proposal calls for the Athletic Department to fund $14,583 of the required $40,583.

Athletic Director Frank McInerney said he had not yet had a chance to look at the proposal.

When told that the proposal asks the Athletic Department to fund $14,583, McInerney had no comment.

Associate Athletic Director Elaine Sortino could not be reached for comment.

"We can't push this thing," McInerney said. "It will have to wait in line with the other things we have to take care of."

Al Bleau, the president of the University of Massachusetts Men's Soccer Association made the proposal which suggests that the revenue come from all the programs raising 30 percent of their budget through fundraising, gate admissions, TV, radio contracts and contributions.

However, the only sports which generate money through ticket sales, television and radio are football and men's basketball.

"[The proposal is] probably a good idea," said men's basketball coach John Calipari. "In our season ticket sales, we probably bring in $200,000. In some programs, raising 30 percent is going to be tougher."

Baseball coach Mike Stone said, "Thirty percent, that's quite a big chunk. I haven't been approached by anyone in the administration and until I am, I prefer not to make any comment about it."

In order for the soccer team to put a team on the field next season, they need to start recruiting soon. But they can not recruit if they don't know whether or not there is going to be a team.

For the time being, coach Sam Koch has been told by the administration not to recruit. His contract expires after the final game of the year, according to McInerney.

"Time is a factor, we need to get some recruits," said Frank Kylish, a soccer parent.

A decision on the future of men's soccer needs to be made quickly, Bleau said.

"Budgets are pretty tight as it is," said men's gymnastics coach Roy Johnson. "I think we're already funding up to 30 percent because we've upgraded our facility."

Calipari said that the way funding for the Athletic Department happens at other schools is that the football and basketball teams bring in most of the money. At UMass the only sport that makes money is basketball.

"I think basketball is doing its part in providing for other sports," Calipari said. "Can we do more? If I can, I will."

REVISED BASKETBALL TICKET POLICY

NOTICE: The University of Massachusetts Department of Athletics in accordance with the Athletic Ticket Office has revised their policy regarding the issuance of men's basketball student tickets. All student seating will now be GENERAL ADMISSION.

1) GENERAL ADMISSION student tickets will be handed out from 7 a.m. - 3 p.m. in the lobby of Curry Hicks Cage three days before each home game. (Example: The tickets for Sunday's game against Marathon Oil will be handed out starting at 7 a.m., Thursday).
2) A VALID UNDERGRADUATE I.D. will be required to pick up a ticket. A drivers license is not sufficient.
3) Each student is entitled to just ONE ticket.
4) Your I.D. will also be needed to get in the night of the game along with the ticket.

Palestine willing to negotiate with Israel

By MONA ZIADE
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — In a marked departure from decades — old hard-line attitudes, Palestinians signaled Tuesday that they would settle for autonomy instead of demanding immediate statehood.

Faisal Husseini, the PLO-approved supervisor of the Palestinian negotiating team, said statehood remained the ultimate goal. But he said Palestinians would negotiate with Israel in the Middle East peace conference that opens Wednesday about limited self-rule for the 1.7 million Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Evident from Husseini's statement was that statehood has become the target of more realistic hopes, rather than a condition that Israel would never accept. It underlined the evolving pragmatism among Palestinians, considerably weakened by the changing international political environment.

The Palestinians will demand Israel freeze settlement construction in the land seized from Jordan and Egypt in 1967, but will stay at the talks in Madrid no matter how tough the bargaining, delegates and advisors said.

The conference opens Wednesday with the Palestinians attending in a joint delegation with Jordan. They hope to have an independent team when bilateral talks begin between Israel and its adversaries — Jordan, the Palestinians, Syria, and Lebanon.

The 14 Palestinian negotiators are led by Haidar Abdul Shafi, a 71-year-old physician from Gaza. An advisory committee headed by Husseini is overseeing the official delegation.

Asked what the Palestinians were shooting for, Husseini said: "Autonomy for an interim period that will move us, Palestinians, from a people under occupation to a people with full independence and a Palestinian independent state that will later join in a confederation with Jordan.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and President George Bush have a quick chat after Bush's arrival at the Soviet embassy in Madrid yesterday. They will be convening the Mid-east Peace Conference today.

Israel rejects the notion of a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. But Israeli officials have said an agreement could be a key achievement of the Madrid peace negotiations.

For an interim period, the Palestinians would accept the self-rule which they violently opposed when it was first offered during the Israeli-Egytian peace process in 1978.

The extent and duration of autonomy would be left open to discussion.

Advisors to the delegation attributed the new pragmatism to political changes — the Palestinians lost the Soviets and Eastern Europe as power bases after the collapse of communism, and the PLO's backing for Iraq in the Gulf War cost Palestinians the friendship and financial backing of Arab oil states.

Hanan Ashrawi, the Palestinian delegation's spokeswoman who also was involved in the pre-conference negotiations with Baker, stressed that Jewish settlements were "one of the greatest obstacles to peace."

But one Palestinian advisor said that although freezing construction of settlements was important, it was no longer a condition. The advisor, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Palestinians were determined not to be defeated in the first round "by demanding something we cannot get."

Provost candidates meet public

Question and answer session to enlighten students

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students will have the opportunity to become familiar with the three candidates for vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and provost at an open meeting today in 904-908 Campus Center.

Acting Provost Glen Gordon, Associate Dean of Academic Affairs Norman D. Aitken and Stephen H. Gehlbach, dean of the school of Public Health, will present brief presentations and then participate in a question-and-answer session.

The schedule of meetings will include Gordon at 2 p.m., Aitken at 3 p.m. and Gehlbach at 4 p.m.

The meetings have been scheduled by the Provost Search Committee, consisting of faculty, staff and student representatives. The committee issued a call in July for written applications from within the campus community.

Frederick Tillis, chairperson of the Provost Search Committee, said while the committee began screening applications on Sept. 16, the deadline was extended several weeks to accommodate faculty and staff who were away for the summer.

Tillis, associate vice chancellor for Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity, said it was necessary to hire from within the campus community, both to ease the transition period for the person who takes the position and to yield someone familiar with the budgetary problems the University is undergoing.

Tillis said recently he was unable to give an exact time for when the position would be filled, although he indicated it would be sometime in November.

Kent cigarettes under scrutiny for 1950s filters

By ERICH SMITH
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — A man who switched to Kent cigarettes because he believed they were healthier developed a rare form of cancer from inhaling asbestos from the cigarettes' filter, his lawyers argued yesterday in federal court.

In response, lawyers for Lorillard, Inc., the maker of Kent, and Hollingsworth & Vose, the maker of the filter material, said the companies acted responsibly when asbestos was used in Kent's "Micronite" filter in the 1950s.

Robbery no treat for Sweetie's

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

There no tricks or treats involved on Monday afternoon when a North Pleasant Street candy store was robbed of $200 by an alleged armed assailant.

Although the Town of Amherst Police were not able to give the name of the establishment, the manager of Sweeties was later able to confirm it was the store.

David M. Palmer, 34, whose last known address is given as 72 High St. Greenfield, was arrested a short time later by the Town of Amherst Police and charged with armed robbery.

According to the Town of Amherst Police, at approximately 3:45 p.m. they received a call an armed robbery had just taken place.

The store clerk stated the suspect had entered the store and wandered around for a few minutes. The suspect then proceeded to approach the clerk from behind and press an object into her back.

The victim told police the suspect then told her he had a gun, although no gun was seen, and he proceeded to take at least $200 from the register. Officers later picked Palmer up on Church St. who fit the description given by the victim.

According to police, the suspect admitted to the robbery but denied the fact a gun was involved. At that time an undisclosed amount of money was returned.

Palmer is being held at the Hampshire House of Corrections on a $1500 bail, according to the police.

In an unrelated robbery, Sweeties in Northampton was robbed by an unknown assailant on Friday. Northampton Police said no arrests have been made and they are following up several leads.

Pee-wee could get off with no record

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Prosecutors today offered Paul Reubens a plea deal on indecent exposure charges that would leave the "Pee-wee's Playhouse" star with no record of guilt. His lawyer said he expected him to accept it.

"It's an offer that's very difficult to refuse," said defense attorney Ronald Dresnick.

Under the proposed deal, made public at a hearing today, Reubens would plead no contest and the state would not seek a judicial determination of guilt. There would be a $50 fine plus court costs and 50 hours of community service locally.

Reubens, who created the Pee-wee Herman character that appeared in movies as well as television's "Pee-wee's Playhouse," grew up in Sarasota and lives in Studio City, Calif. He was excused from attending the hearing because he was filming a movie.

Reuben's attorneys are scheduled to return to court for a hearing Tuesday to tell the judge the actor's decision. The maximum penalty he could have faced under the second-degree misdemeanor was 60 days in jail and a $500 fine.

Protestors picket haunted house

Church depicts woman in hell for having an abortion

DENNIS, Mass. (AP) — Furious protesters are picketing a church-sponsored Halloween haunted house that portrays a woman being sent to hell for having an abortion.

Inside the display, an actor in a bloody nightgown writhes on a stretcher, screaming, "I want my baby. Where's my baby?"

Another actor, dressed as a physician, hands the woman a handful of simulated blood and tissue, shouting: "Here's your baby."

Amy McGillen of Harwich, who said she was "horrified" by the depiction when she viewed it on Friday night, is among the protesters now picketing the haunted house and trying to persuade others to stay out.

"What offended me the most was there was absolutely no warning that this was going to be coming up," she said. "You go in there and are taken through a haunted house, and then suddenly you're pushed into hell and have to stand and listen and watch this propaganda about abortion."

The display is operated by the Victory Chapel of Christian Fellowship Church. It opened Friday and is scheduled to continue through Halloween.

"We're out to reach people with a gospel message and donate the proceeds to a worthy cause," said Jack Gaeta, associate pastor.

"We're up front about this. We have nothing to hide."

But officials from the organization that was slated to receive the profits from the $2-a-person admission, the Cape Cod Child Development Program, Inc. said they may refuse the money.

"We're opposed to violence and we're opposed to frightening children and not telling people what they're getting into and we certainly don't condone the method of fundraising," said Phil Sheerin, the organization's executive director.

Sheerin said he had "absolutely no idea at all" that the haunted house would encompass an abortion message.

Gaeta said the protesters are entitled to their opinions, "as long as they don't block access to the driveway and don't endanger anyone in the street."

He said visitors under the age of 13 are not admitted to the haunted house unless they are accompanied by an adult.

At least one teen-age girl was so shaken by the exhibit on a visit Saturday that she asked to leave the tour, the Cape Cod Times reported.

A protestor, Peggy Lilienthal, said she would not want her three teen-aged grandchildren subjected to the abortion scene, no matter what their position on the issue.

"I don't question anyone's right to express an opinion. I do question whether its right to spring something like this on people without warning," she said.

"If you have a moral message to give there are lots of ways to do that. If you have to resort to trickery and deceit to get that message across, something is wrong with the message."

Another visitor complained to the police, the newspaper reported, but he was told the church was not violating any laws.

Economists: tax plan not the right ticket

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — A panel of economists said Tuesday business tax incentives, such as those promoted by Gov. William F. Weld, would do little to bring the Massachusetts economy out of its doldrums.

Economists from Harvard and Babson Universities, as well as the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston told a legislative forum that tax credits alone would not make Massachusetts more attractive to businesses.

Joe Greene, an accountant who represented the Small Business Association of New England, said a tax credit geared toward job creation might help spur employment.

But Greene, saying his views on the topic were his own, not the association's, said the state's biggest problem for business was what he said was a poor public elementary and high school education system.

Herman "Dutch" Leonard, Baker professor of public finance at Harvard, told the forum sponsored by the Legislative Caucus for Economic Growth, that most academic studies show that business tax credits don't work very well.

Leonard said taxes are overshadowed as a business expense by items such as transportation and labor costs.

If tax incentives are targeted to specific businesses, he said, they discriminate against other industries, and if they are broad enough to help most companies than they are prohibitively expensive.

"They can't be very big or they are hugely expensive," Leonard said.

Leonard said Massachusetts will remain a high-cost state for business with or without tax credits and must assure that business gets value for its money.

"We better have a very skilled labor force. We better have higher productivity," he said.

Robert Tannenwald, an economist with the Federal Reserve Bank who headed a study in the 1980s of the Massachusetts tax system, said, "It's almost impossible to target incentives as designed."

Tannenwald said the one plus tax incentives could have is improving the cash flow of businesses caught in the credit crunch, and they could have a psychological impact on business.

Peter Kozel, an economics professor at Babson, said other costs, such as workers compensation and health care, which are higher than the national average in Massachusetts, may have more impact on business decisions than taxes.

Kozel said businesses may also view Massachusetts as a high tax, low service state because of the increased spending during the administration of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis went to human services programs instead of education and transportation.

Kozel said the Massachusetts economy is in serious trouble and has lost 330,000 jobs in the past 3 years.

Tax credits, he said, wouldn't do much to turn that situation around.

Greene said Massachusetts should improve its public education system and said tax limiting Proposition 2 1/2 is hurting the ability of cities and towns to pay for their schools.

Greene took a more positive view of tax credits, saying as an accountant, he has seen business decisions made on the basis of the bottom line.

Gay legal, civil rights at issue

LSO attorneys shed light on recent laws

DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Legal Services last night held a presentation concerning gay and lesbian legal issues.

As part of B-GLAD week and sponsored by the Legal Services Center, Sheila Casey Kelley and Thomas Coish of legal services outlined recent rights gains for gays and lesbian in Massachusetts.

Kelley spoke of the recent health care issues and how gay and lesbian couples should take certain precautions about what could happen in the case of a medical emergency.

Citing the Sharon Kowalski case, Kowalki's lesbian lover was denied hospital visitation following a disabling car accident by Kowalski's family, Kelley explained how gay and lesbian couples should make legal documents protecting their wishes in case of a disabling accident.

Kelley specified the Massachusetts Health Care Proxy law, the Durable Power of Attorney and the medical directive as three main actions that gay and lesbian couples can take to help protect their wishes.

The Massachusetts health care proxy law allows for a third party, whom the disabled has previously selected, to make health care decisions when the patient is incapacitated.

The durable power of attorney document allows a third pre-specified party to make legal and financial decisions after the patient has become incapacitated.

The medical directive states a person's wishes for or against types of medical treatment, such as artificial life support, surgery and other medical situations that could occur during incapacitation.

"You could get hit by a car tonight, so the sooner that you have them the better." Kelley said.

Kelley also said these steps are not guaranteed because gay and lesbian couples don't have the married rights of heterosexual couples, but these papers help build a foundation in case of a legal situation like the Kowalski case.

Coish outlined the housing laws, passed in the 1989 gay civil rights bill, stating it was now illegal to discriminate against someone because of their sexual preference.

"Prior to 1989 gays and lesbians has no rights concerning housing discrimination." Coish said.

One way of protecting victims is through a testing process, where after an allegation of discrimination is brought to the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD), testers are sent in under cover to the landlord seeing if actual discrimination has taken place.

Coish and Kelley ended the presentation stating any University of Massachusetts student can seek further advice from the University Legal Services Center.

Outbreak of false alarms in Southwest plagues students and fire officials

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

About 180 students in James Hall in Southwest awoke at 2:13 a.m. yesterday morning to the shrill piercing of a malicious false fire alarm. It has become a common occurence in Southwest, said the associate fire prevention officer.

David Beaudin said the Southwest Residential Area has endured 40 malicious false alarms since the beginning of this semester.

"We're just getting beat on these false alarms," Beaudin said. "We want it to stop." He said all false alarms since September have come from Southwest.

In contrast, both Northeast and Orchard Hill have had a total of 36 false alarms in the last five years, he said.

Beaudin did say Southwest houses more people but added statistics still show an unbalanced rash of malicious false alarms plaguing Southwest. "This semester, it seems so lopsided. I can't explain it," he said.

University police have only prosecuted 3 people this semester for pulling an alarm, Beaudin said, since it's difficult to catch people in the act.

The John Adams Tower in Southwest has been hardest hit by the false fire alarm epidemic — 13 since the start of the semester. The tower had 20 all of last year, Beaudin said.

"The people [who pull the alarms] are punishing everyone," said Eric Bergren, a senior political science major and a resident assistant in John Adams. He said two alarms were pulled within 10 minutes of each other on Saturday morning.

"If anyone ever got caught, I think the residents would take care of him," Bergren said.

Panel: GLB community needs unity

By JENNIFER NAUMES
Collegian Correspondent

Arising individualism and differing goals and strategies, is one of the problem area the gay lesbian and bisexual communities in the 1990s will have to face, according to four panelists speaking about the political agenda for the GLB communities Monday night.

The forum, "Lesbian and Gay Politics in the 1990s" discussed tactics for advancing the lesbian, gay and queer liberation movement.

Sean Sullivan, a UMass student and former chairperson of the Political Action Committee, said he is presently taking advantage of the University's resources to gather knowledge before taking direct action in the movement.

He said he, "wishes the end of oppression of all groups," although he recognizes the importance of differing views, he said concentration on unity will interfere with getting things done.

Sandy Goodman, a lesbian and feminist activist, works at the Battered Woman's Shelter in Northampton. She addressed the crisis of women suffering and dying daily as a result of male violence and aggression towards women.

She said she is against the gay control over setting the political agenda, for there is not enough attention to women's problems in the gay movement.

She said she wants the AIDS movement to fight as well against the male physical coercion women are subjected to.

Chris DeSaulniers, a gay AIDS activist working at the Family Planning Council in Northampton, said internal conflicts hinder successful action. To be successful, he said, one must first accept oneself.

He said the construction of the AIDS Quilt shown this weekend in Springfield, Mass., as an activating tool for the gay movement. He said he wishes to help all oppressed people, especially women.

Amy Stamm, a member of Act-Up, an AIDS coalition to unleash power, and Queer Nation, a direct action political group. She is working on a project to form an LBGA Community Center in Northampton

World in Brief

Sunspots, turbulence knocks out power line

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Sunspots and other solar turbulence sent a "geometric storm" toward Earth, knocking out a power transmission line between Canada and New England, scientists said.

William J. Brennan, a spokesman for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in Boulder, said solar flares send particles carrying magnetic charges into the Earth's magnetic field.

Such geomagnetic storms can cause switches in power distribution networks to malfunction and transformers to burn out, he said Monday. They also can interfere with high-frequency radio communications and threaten electronics aboard satellites.

Joseph Hirman, forecast operations manager at NOAA's National Space and Environment Center, said the transmission line problem between Canada and New England was the only serious equipment failure reported.

Power networks in Western states have been experiencing variations in voltage levels, he said.

Sunspots, additional flaring and resulting geomagnetic storms can be expected throughout the week.

Doomsday clock keepers move hands backward

CHICAGO (AP) — The keepers of the Doomsday Clock are moving back its hands to reflect the decreased threat of global nuclear war, but they won't say how much.

The new setting will appear in the December issue of The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. The clockface appears on the cover each issue and reflects the editors' judgement of how far away the world is from nuclear destruction.

The clock has stood at 11:50 p.m. since March 1990, when it was moved back from 11:54 p.m. to reflect Eastern Europe's revolution changes and Mikhail Gorbechev's reformist policies.

During the publication's 46-year history, the clock came closest to nuclear midnight in 1953, after the United States tested the hydrogen bomb.

"We've made a decision about moving the hands back, but I can't confirm how far it will be," Alan Lonstein, assistant editor, said Monday.

Underwater carver soon to be husband

CLARK LAKE, Mich. (AP) — Tim DeGrazio didn't win any awards for his underwater pumpkin carving abilities. He gained a fiancee instead.

Nearly 20 other divers over the weekend cut and carved under the 54-degree waters of Clark Lake in a contest for the ugliest or best-looking pumkin.

DeGrazio carved: Will you marry me?

Debbie Frederick, his sweetheart, was filming his underwater efforts when he turned his entry toward the waterproof camera.

"She must have had a mask leak when I showed it to her because she started getting water inside," DeGrazio said.

DeGrazio and Frederick plan an above-groud wedding in Las Vegas next month.

Bush forbids nearly all trade ties with Haiti

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush today issued an order prohibiting virtually all U.S. commercial transactions with Haiti as a means of pressuring that country's military rulers to restore democracy.

All transactions were excluded except certain types of humanitarian assistance.

The order, issued in Madrid where Bush is attending the opening of the Middle East peace conference, is consistent with an Oct.8 Organization of American States resolution calling for a hemisphere-wide embargo against Haiti.

The OAS, with U.S. support, is demanding the restoration of Jean-Bertrand Aristide as president of Haiti. Aristide was deposed on Sept. 30.

Bush exercised authority granted him under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act. His order will take effect on Nov. 5.

A White House statement said Bush has concluded that the "grave events in Haiti that are continuing to disrupt the legitimate exercise of power by the democratically elected government . . . continue to constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security, foreign policy and economy of the United States."

Other officials said the order does not apply to certain categories of food commodities. Haiti is the hemisphere's poorest country and is heavily dependent on outside support for its food needs.

On Monday, OAS officials said Haiti's interim government will allow an OAS mission to travel to Port-au-Prince to discuss the possible return of Aristide.

Woman killed at art exhibit

485 lb. umbrella sculpture pins woman to boulder

By MICHAEL FLEEMAN
Associated Press

FORT TEJON, Calif. — The artist, Christo, his two nation umbrella exhibit ended by the death of a spectator, said his artwork is part of real life and he must "live with the consequences of the real world."

"I will live with that tragedy to the end of my life," Christo said Monday after returning from Japan to the mountain pass where one of his 485-pound umbrellas tore loose in a storm and killed a woman Saturday.

Lori Keevil-Mathews, 33, of Camarillo was thrown against a boulder by the flying umbrella, one of 1,760 yellow umbrellas planted by the artist in Tejon Pass, which carries Interstate 5 over mountains north of Los Angeles.

The California umbrellas were a counterpart to 1,340 blue parasols unfurled in lush valleys in Japan. Christo, known for his mammoth environmental works, called it "The Umbrellas: Joint Project for Japan and U.S.A."

The exhibit was scheduled to close Wednesday, three weeks after they went up. But workers began to close the umbrellas immediately after Ms. Keevil-Mathews was killed. Many were toppled by the wind.

Kern County officials, concerned about their financial risk and legal responsibility in the fatal accident, said Christo had at least $2 million in liability insurance on the giant project.

Christo's wife, Jeanne-Claude, said she had called the victim's husband. Christo said he planned to meet with the family at an appropriate time, and he will dedicate a book and film about the project to the dead woman.

that that cigarette could have caused Mr. Ierardi's disease," said Lorillard attorney David Hardy.

Philadelphia stockbroker Peter Ierardi switched to Kent cigarettes nearly four decades ago because of an advertised claim that the Micronite filter was safe, said his lawyer, Tom Johnson.

He quoted from a Kent advertisement from the 1950s: "If you worry about the hazards of smoking, here is the cigarette for you." He also quoted from a later ad that call the filter "safe, harmless, dust-free and pure."

From 1952 to 1956 the Kent filter contained crocidolite asbestos.

"The evidence will show electron-microscope photos of the filters after they were tested in a lab.

"You will see the particles of crocidolite hanging off the end of the filter, waiting to be sucked into the lungs of someone like Peter Ierardi," he said.

Johnson said Ierardi has incurred medical bills of $165,000.

Hardy told the jurors he would ask them to "put yourselves in that time frame. Think of things as they were then, rather than as they are now."

Hardy said in the 1950s asbestos was not considered to be as hazardous as scientists now know it is.

"Asbestos in World War II was an amazing product," he said. "Crocidolite asbestos was the filtering product in gas masks that protected American soldiers from poisonous fumes."

Scientists and industry realized in the 1950s that asbestos could cause health problems, "but quantity was the key," Hardy argued.

"There was no evidence that asbestos caused problems in other than heavy, heavy exposure" experienced by miners and asbestos workers, he said.

He also said experts would testify that Ierardi could not have contracted mesothelioma, an incurable form of cancer, from exposure to Kent cigarettes.

Iraqis discover 44 soldiers buried alive in two graves

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq yesterday found the bodies of 44 soldiers who were buried alive by U.S. forces along the Saudi-Iraqi border during the Persian Gulf War, Iraq's state-run news agency said.

The Iraqi News Agency said the bodies were found in two mass graves in an area where American troops crossed the border, crushing bunkers with tanks.

A pathologist determined the Iraqis dead of suffocation, the agency said.

"Foreign Minister Ahmed Hussein sent a letter to the Arab League secretary-general, Ismat Abdul-Majeed, to inform him of this ugly crime by the American forces," the report monitored in Nicosia said.

The foreign minister demanded a U.N. investigation, the agency said.

Last month, reports in several U.S. newspapers quoted American army officers as saying that M1-A1 tanks from the Army's First Infantry Division overran Iraqi trenches and bunkers, plowing them under with Iraqi soldiers still alive inside.

The assault took place Feb. 24 along a 10-mile front north of the border preceding an infantry attack. The officers said most of the Iraqi soldiers saw the tanks coming and surrendered, although possibly thousands perished inside their bunkers.

In late February, a U.S.-led coalition drove Iraq from Kuwait following its 7-month long occupation of the emirate.

Learning a few lessons about what makes real friendship

Many people possess many things, like a car, expensive clothing, a large bank account. Above all of these material objects there is only one thing that holds more value and importance. It is something that people today seem to take for granted, seem to lie on, beat on, wound and betray.

It is a friendship. Society moves so fast it seems that people do not care about friendship, do not appreciate it. They use it as a cure for loneliness, a game when bored, until life picks up, when it is almost forgotten.

Throughout my entire life there has been one thing that I hold most sacred. Something I would sell for no amount of money, something I would drive hundreds of miles for, something I would die for. It is a friend.

In this time people always seem to be rallying for equality, petitioning for clean air and preaching against prejudices. One may think these people are saints. Although this may hold true, more and more I have discovered that these same people who advocate justice would in the same day turn on a friend. Does this not seem hypocritical? How can you beg and plead for world decency after doing something so harmful, so cruel to someone you care for? How can you willingly allow something to happen that you know could crush a friend?

I go over and over this question in my mind until my head pounds and my stomach aches from the disgust I feel when I think of how often people I call my friends seem to find a better deal with a boyfriend, a sorority and in selfishly indulging in other personal pleasures.

If anyone has lost a friend who they cared about and confided in, there is a certain type of hurt that is felt. It is so different than anything else. It is something that digs deep inside and leaves you awake at night wondering if this person was ever really your friend to begin with. Maybe it was just something to pass time with or maybe it's just the fact that friendship holds no value to them.

Manejah Morad

I feel the problem is people don't understand friendship. They don't understand how turning on a friend or allowing a friend to be hurt is something that lingers on forever in the heart and soul of the victim, eating away at what makes him or her pure, innocent.

So far, after almost two and a half years at this University, I have learned a lot of things. But what I have learned the most is about people and how a large percentage of them, sorry to say, are in life for themselves. They would risk it all, including a friendship, just to reach one more step.

It is not money or industry that makes up the backbone of this world, it is the people. It is not the racial tension we need to be looking at to correct — it is ourselves.

The more people who I trusted and thought cared about me drift away the more I realize what a good person I am. No, I may not give to Greenpeace but I respect people I care for and would never, for all the money in the world, for all the temporary laughter and pleasure I may receive, for nothing allow anything to hurt them.

In the end, after all those who want out are gone, you are left with yourself and if you're lucky just a few good friends. I am privileged enough to be left with just that.

Believe it or not, my point is not to complain or to appeal to anyone's sense of compassion. I want only for everyone to do as I have done and look upon those who you consider your friends and hold on to them and pray that through time they will prove to be just that — a friend.

Although this process may leave you hurting, it is always the outcome that will make you stronger. And after several years have passed full of bad and good times, you look and see at least one familiar face standing beside you, consider yourself the luckiest person in the world.

For you possess something so golden, so exceptional, one could go as far as to call it an endangered species. You have true friendship, something that would whether any storm, stand tall through any battle, wipe any tear. It is to my friends that I am grateful. It is to my friends that I give all my love to, for it is these friends that make me a decent person.

Respect your neighbors

This might be first time you have ever read one of my columns and I hope you cherish it forever. I try to think of myself as the voice of the whole student body.

In this regard I hold no racist grudges against anybody, but I would be lying if I told you all I was not prejudiced. This brings me into my first topic. I cannot understand how people can tell me with a straight face they are not prejudiced. Everybody is prejudiced whether they like it or not. We are not able to form these opinions ourselves, but rather have them formed for us.

Mark Preston

Our parents and our friends are the major contributors to our formation as human beings. And with that formation comes vices that include our prejudices. So the next time you are engaged in a conversation where racism and prejudice are intertwined remember this column and determine the answer yourself.

If I have to wake up at 2:30 in the morning again and go outside in a false fire drill I am going to kill someone. I live in a tower and we have already had 13 fire alarms. Everyone I have talked to is getting quite annoyed over this weekly procedure.

The frustration climaxed this weekend when my building had two consecutive alarms Saturday morning. I hope whoever is pulling these alarms smartens up. Believe me you are making more enemies than friends.

Why does Housing find it necessary to sweep the building after an alarm has been pulled consecutively in the same night? If they would only realize they are punishing the innocent by making them stay outside in the cold for up to an hour. To punish six hundred participants for the act of one is just plain ignorance.

Respect is one of the most underrated qualities a person can possess. This brings me to my third point in a whirlwind of ideas. Why do people treat their bathrooms and the maintainers like dirt? Nobody enjoys going into a bathroom that reeks of urine, and is full of water.

For that matter nobody enjoys cleaning up someone else's vomit. Come on everybody, get with the picture and try to show that you deserve to be in college. Your floormates and the maintainers are people too. Show some self discipline and trash your room, not the bathroom.

I have found the hidden hot spot on campus. Everybody has heard about it, but not too many people know where it is. It's called the Top of the Campus Restaurant and Lounge. The food is good and inexpensive and the atmosphere is superb. The lounge, on the other hand, is a delightful place to kick back and watch a sporting event. Located on the 11th floor of the Campus Center, it's easily accessible and a clean fun place to go. Have a good week and remember these four words: no false fire alarms!

Undergrads should support GEO

Ugh! Those fluorescent posters are everywhere: "GEO is a union!" What does this sudden inundation of bright colors mean? It means that we are locked in an impasse, and that each day brings this campus closer to a strike.

Inevitably, we undergraduates will be faced with a choice. Do we cross the picket lines or not? Many of us have not come up with an answer yet, only more questions. . .

The GEO will never win, why bother supporting it? In the spring of 1990, GEO members staged a two-day work stoppage. The administration made many of the same threats they are making today, but with broad undergraduate and faculty support, were forced to concede that they were wrong and grant GEO's requests.

This is none of my business, why should I get involved? It is our business. Graduate students are responsible for 50 to 60 percent of the teaching at UMass, and without them undergraduate education would be seriously compromised. Also, the health fee costs GEO is objecting to directly affects many of us covered by the University health policy. Working class people are quietly being priced out of health care on this campus.

The TAs have no right to go out on strike. Why should I be forced to miss classes? If the administration were more willing to sit down and be reasonable, we wouldn't have to miss classes. Some of the anger that I hear aimed at TAs would be more aptly directed at an administration that is leaving some of the lowest-paid, hardest working graduate employees with no other choice but to strike.

As far as missing classes goes, nobody is forcing us to do so, only asking. The more undergraduates honor picket lines, the more the administration will realize GEO has broad-based support, and the sooner things will return to normal. This support is imperative.

We all pay good money to go to this University, and I for one want to be able to attend the classes I pay for. However, not at the cost of GEO. This is a time for some solidarity. If we were to abandon the GEO now, we would all lose. But by sticking together, we don't have to. For once, let's show them that the little guy with the numbers can win, and that the big guy with all the power isn't invincible. Together, we can do it!

Patron's license taken uptown

On the evening of Thursday, October 24, 1991, I went to Charlie's. My mistake.

As I had been to Charlie's several times before I was used to the ritual of producing proper identification upon entering the establishment. This particular evening I handed the gentleman at the door my license. After tilting and squinting at my license for a few minutes he requested that I wait a "sec." He took my license and, to my understanding, showed it to someone else.

Let me describe my situation: I turned 21 in September of this year. My Massachusetts state license displays a red strip and an "under 21" as when I renewed my license I was, indeed, under 21.

Within a few minutes the gentleman returned and said, "I have to keep this," as he placed my license in his pocket. I was beginning to get confused. Did he explain to me why he had to keep my license? NO! Did he test me on any of the information on my license? NO! All I knew was that he had to keep my license which to my understanding is against the law unless the person doing so is affiliated with the law. When I began to dispute what was going on he told me that the next step was to call the police. I encouraged it.

Now I was beginning to get annoyed and I wanted my license back!

I approached the bartender I believed to be in charge although she never identified herself as being so. When I asked her why no one was explaining anything to me or asking for other forms of identification, she replied, "Oh! Well, now I'm asking for backup." I handed her my valid student ID, two major credit cards, a health plan card, a calling card and a bank ATM card. "Is this all you have?" she asked. "Well, the police will be here soon."

When the police officer arrived, the bartender pulled him aside and spoke with him briefly. The officer asked me to step outside where I was greeted by four more officers. One of them called my license number in to be "checked" while another looked at my license for 15 seconds and said, "This looks fine to me, I'm leaving." Ten minutes later everything was deemed fine and with a wave of his hand the officer let the bartender know I was "okay."

Now I don't want to sound unreasonable. I understand what is at stake for the establishment if someone who is under the age of 21 was served alcoholic beverages. My general complaint regards the manner in which I was treated during this entire fiasco. I was treated as the "bad guy" because I wanted my license back. They acted as though I was out of line for not sitting back and letting the bouncer at Charlie's keep my license for no reason.

I never received an explanation or an apology for the treatment to which I was subjected.

Now obviously the staff at Charlie's felt that it was necessary to call the police to the "scene" when those five officers could have been somewhere else, somewhere they were needed. I was given a hard time not at Rafters, not at the Pub nor at Delano's but at Charlie's no less.

Other People's Money worth it, Shout isn't

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

"Do you know what I love more than money . . . other people's money . . ." So begins Danny DeVito in a wickedly funny, yet uneven moral tale of greed, money and love: Other People's Money.

Based on the off-Broadway hit of the same name, Other People's Money stars Danny DeVito (Twins) as Lawrence Garfield, a Wall Street shark who is eyeing a small Rhode Island wire and cable company for a corporate takeover.

The company's owner, Gregory Peck (in a career-resurrecting performance) is adamant about fighting DeVito, so he enlists the aid of his daughter, played by Penelope Ann Miller (The Freshman), a smart and sassy lawyer. What follows is a battle of wits; one between DeVito and Miller, fighting their obvious attraction while trying to outfox each other.

The other battle for the company is a moral one: will and should DeVito close the plant for profit, causing the loss of jobs, for the sole sake of the "game" ? Furthermore, is his love of money greater than his love for Miller?

Critically acclaimed director Norman Jewison (Fiddler on the Roof) has assembled a stellar cast. Most of the film's success can be credited to the comic ability of Danny DeVito. He seems to have a hit his peak playing these type of loveable rascals. But this is definitely not a replay of his roles in Romancing the Stone or Ruthless People. Rather, Other People's Money takes it one step further. DeVito really loves money. He doesn't sap out at the end and get sentimental. Business is business — and he's willing to lose Miller in the process.

DeVito's chemistry with Penelope Ann Miller is an essential key to the plot. These two characters must be so attracted to each other that they forget what side they're on. The little insults and innuendoes that fly between them seem forced, and well-rehearsed. Their scenes are supposed to be reminiscent of Tracey and Hepburn or even Sam and Diane but end up looking constrained. Miller is not a bad actress. For her this is quite a departure from the usual goody-goody she has played in films like Kindergarten Cop and once she finds the right co-star, the sparks will really fly.

Gregory Peck is perfect in his role as the crusty but loyal owner of the wire and cable company. His impassioned speech to the shareholders to not sell to DeVito is moving and true. But the pint-sized DeVito counters with an equally affecting speech. The argument left me switching sides right up until the voting results were announced.

Special mention should also be given to veteran character actor Dean Jones (as Peck's business associate). For what could have been a nothing role, Jones made it remarkably honest. However, this is not the case with Emmy nominee Piper Laurie ("Twin Peaks"), who sleep-walks through her role as Peck's wife.

Because it originated on stage, some of the motions and acting seem too overboard for the screen. Some minor characters would have been hilarious on stage, but stuck in the movie it comes off as bad over-acting.

Most likely, if you have seen the play, you won't like this movie. However, if this is your first encounter with Other Peoples Money, definitely check it out.

Grade: B+

OTHER RECENT RELEASES:

Shout — In this horrible retread of Dead Poets Society, Footloose and bad prison dramas, James Walters plays The Bad Boy Who Bucks Authority To Play Guitar. He's surrounded by even more generic characters: The Evil Boys' Home Warden who is out to get Walters, and his virginal-but-fiesty daughter played by Heather Graham (Drugstore Cowboy). Five bucks on who you think she'll fall in love with . . .

Looking very lost is John Travolta, who in his heyday, would have no doubt played The Rebel Without A Clue. Now he's old enough to play The Mentor With A Past. He teaches the kids Rock and Roll and gets flack from the warden. He, too, has a love interest, Linda Fiorentino (Queens Logic), but she's in the movie for about five minutes total.

But she's there long enough to have a Jealous Ex-Boyfriend who just happens to be the corrupt sheriff. You think this is bad? I had to see it!

You'd think that at least the music would be pretty decent. After all, it's the Dirty Dancing generation, right? Wrong. Bad music, bad acting, bad script, bad directing. If you don't see one movie this year, let it be Shout.

Blue collar issues of 70s displayed in Working

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

You can't eat for eight hours a day nor drink for eight hours a day nor make love for eight hours a day — all you can do for eight hours a day is work. Which is the reason why man makes himself and everybody else so miserable and unhappy.
William Faulkner

Studs Terkel, author of the book, Working, used this quote from Faulkner in the opening pages of his book. Terkel's book investigates the real America — the men and women which make up the labor force here in the United States.

The UMass Theater Guild takes the book one step further with the musical version of the same name.

The book is the collection of 130 people talking about what they do and how they feel about it — including everyone from the hooker to the priest.

Terkel wrote his book in the 70s, and this script is indicative of the Carter Era — strikes, inflation and gas crises Nonetheless, the jobs that people do — and what they view as work — will always be a question and an issue.

Today, the issues revolve around unemployment benefits and sexual harrassment, which in the 70s (remember recession and the Equal Rights Amendment) seem almost identical. Obviously, this show has not lost it's timeliness nor can it be considered obsolete.

In the musical, 19 performers undertake the parts, the roles, attitudes and work ethics of the corporate executive and the housewife, singing or talking about the lifestyle and type of work which take up about 40 hours of their week.

The stage, two platforms joined with a ramp, carry the symbols of American industry — steel girders and tires, with a touch of scaffolding to round it out.

This is show of and for the people — filled with people doing what they always do best — talking. It should be what every senior should never miss — talking about the inevitability of May, graduation and the work force.

Working will be in the Student Union Ballroom tonight and Thursday. Curtain time is 8 p.m. Tickets are $4 for students and $6 for the general public. Tickets are available at Tix Unlimited next to the SUB.

Creepy flicks to gore up the week, other stuff

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

Hello, movie lovers, and welcome to another installment of the Campus Cable Connection. This week we have a real Halloween shocker — the horror movies picked by residential area government are actually good! There are also quite a few other flicks that you won't want to miss this week, so here are the movies that will be showing beginning Wednesday, October 30.

Pet Sematary — Dale Midkiff, Fred Gwynne, Mary Lambert. Screenplay by Stephen King, based on his best selling novel. It's not as good as the book, but some magically gruesome moments make for a better-that-average film about a family who stumbles upon an ancient Micmac burial ground. 1/2

Friday the 13th Part 1 — Betsy Palmer, Adrienne King, Harry Crosby. Stay clear of the seemingly endless sequels, but the original is a rare horror treat about a series of gruesome yet innovative slice and dice murders at a summer camp before the little ones arrive. A surprising twist in the plot at the end adds delicious flavor to the "gore galore". And just when you think it's over. . . ***

The Omen — Gregory Peck, Lee Remick, Billie Whitelaw. Directed by critically-acclaimed horror master Richard Donner, The Omen deals with the coming of the anti-Christ. Who would have ever thought the devil to manifest himself in an adorable little boy? Some intensely gripping moments, such as when Peck discovers the "666" brand under his son's hair, and the ensuing physical conflict, and the scene in the hospital, and . . . well, I won't give it all away — just watch it. (Oscar-winning score by Jerry Goldsmith.) 1/2

Rocky Horror Picture Show — Tim Curry, Susan Sarandon, Barry Bostwick. Cult horror classic that always seems much better when you see it in Cambridge, but what the heck. A fine film anyway about a straight couple, Janet and Brad, who stumble onto a weird transvestite town of Transylvanian wackos. The music is unforgettable. Let's do the time warp again! ****

Tales From The Darkside: The Movie — Deborah Harry, Matthew Lawrence, Christian Slater. A young boy is imprisoned by a woman with the same sustenance preferences as Hannibal Lecter. He tells her three horror anecdotes to keep her from serving him as the main course for dinner. The tales are somewhat tame, but the last one packs a punch. Stories by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Stephen King and Michael McDowell. 1/2

Transylvania 6-5000 — Jeff Goldblum, Joseph Bologna, Ed Begley Jr. Ridiculous movie with, well if it had a plot, I failed to recognize it. I just sat in front of the screen with my mouth half-open in disbelief that a producer had actually shelled out money for this disaster. THIS WEEK'S MEGA BOMB! 0 stars.

In "Tales From the Darkside: The Movie," David Johansen plays Halston, a professional killer hired by a desperate millionaire to get rid of a murderous pet cat. Watch and be scared.

The Stunt Man — Peter O'Toole, Steve Railsback, Barbara Hershey. Dazzling, award winning film about a fugitive who accidently murders an ace stunt man on a movie set. O'Toole, who is brilliant as Eli Cross, offers to shade him from the police if he'll replace the stunt man. An eloquent black comedy. ***

The Good Mother — Diane Keaton, Liam Neeson, Jason Robards. Somewhat tiresome and drawn-out adaptation of the Sue Miller novel about a woman who finally finds sexual fulfillment in her life, but risks the ability to raise her daughter well in the interim. Keaton, however, is first class as always in the role. 1/2

L.A. Story — Steve Martin, Victoria Principal. Somewhat confusing and bizarre story about extreme "yuppiedom" in Los Angeles. Martin fans will like it, but just mediocre for the average movie-goer. **

Lawrence of Arabia — Peter O'Toole, Omar Shariff, Alec Guiness, Anthony Quinn. Biography of T.E. Lawrence, this classic goes way beyond the realm of a great film. Seven Oscar were won for this champion, and made O'Toole an actor to be reckoned with. Unfortunately the movie loses some of its power when shown on a television set, it really needs to be watched on a big screen. THIS WEEK'S TOP CHOICE! ****

Pump Up The Volume — Christian Slater, Ellen Greene, Scott Paulin. Slater plays a young rebel who is fed up with society and deals with it by making his own radio show, dominating the airwaves much to the perpetual confusion and outrage by the parents and surprise of the teen-agers. ***

Robin and Marian — Sean Connery, Audrey Hepburn, Robert Shaw. Robin Hood is now middle-aged in this somewhat dry film. He returns to Sherwood forest, reignites the flames with Maid Marian, and battles the ever-villanous Sheriff of Nottingham. The all-star cast can't hide the fact that the film robs us of the original magic of Robin Hood. *1/2

Against All Odds — Rachel Ward, Jeff Bridges, James Woods. Remake of Out Of The Past, with a heavy, drab plot and, to an extent, unsatisfying. An unemployed jock accepts a job from an ex-teamate to find his girlfriend who has run off to Mexico. A couple of great action scenes, but not enough oomph to save it. **

Catch-22 — Alan Arkin, Martin Balsam, Richard Benjamin. Screen adaptation of Joseph Heller's famous novel based on insanity within the army during World War II. The movie is long and drawn-out, but the acting shines. 1/2

SUPERMAN MEETS BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN — Kathleen Turner and Christopher Reeves discuss the oppression of the National Endowment of the Arts.

■ HCSN

Das Boot — Jurgen Prochnow, Herbert Gronemeyer, Klaus Wenneman. German film (The Boat), about a German U-boat during WWII on a certain mission. The film effectively and tastefully displays an anti-war message. If you liked The Hunt For Red October, you'll love Das Boot. A real action/adventure thriller. ****

Eating Raoul — Paul Bartel, Mary Woronov, Robert Beltran. Amusing black comedy about a couple who lure wealthy swingers to their apartment and kill them. They figure, hey, it reduces the amount of perverts in the city, and gives them money to help finance a restaurant. Very original. 1/2

Hairspray — Ricki Lake, Sonny Bono, Divine. Director John Waters goes all-out in this bizarre flick about the integration of a teen TV dance program in 1962. The satire is touchingly nostalgic as well as witty. One to watch! 1/2

Some Kind Of Wonderful — Eric Stoltz, Lea Thompson, Mary Stuart Masterson. Director Howard Deutch and producer John Hughes have re-made Hughes' Pretty in Pink with a sex-reversal. This time, Masterson is in love with Stoltz, and it takes him the entire movie for him to realize that she is better for him than rich and glamorous Thompson. Not bad, and better than average music. 1/2

sex, lies and videotape — James Spader, Andie McDowell, Peter Gallagher. Writer-director Steven Soderbergh took first prize at the Cannes film festival for this spicy flick. Intriguing movie about a snotty, successful lawyer who takes his frigid wife's sister as his lover, and welcomes his old college friend for a visit. Little does he realize the effect all this will have on him. 1/2

Witness — Harrison Ford, Kelly McGillis, Alexander Gudonov, Danny Glover. Romance/thriller set in Pennsylvania's Amish country about a young boy who witnesses a murder in a train station, the cop assigned to the case, and the Amish widow he falls in love with. Powerful drama, intense action, and passionate romance combine into one beautifully developed and well-made movie. ****

WOODY, I'VE ALWAYS FOUND YOU OFFENSIVE, BUT I HAVE TO SAY, YOU'VE JUST TOPPED...
JOANIE, JOANIE, LIGHTEN UP!
I'M JUST KIDDING! I'M A KIDDER, YOU KNOW THAT! AND KIDDING ASIDE, THE LAST FEW WEEKS I HAVE LEARNED A LOT ABOUT WOMEN AND THEIR CONCERNS!
IT'S BEEN AN EDUCATION. ON SOME LEVEL, I'LL PROBABLY NEVER "GET IT," BUT AT LEAST I'M TRYING!
UH... WELL, WOODY, IF YOU REALLY MEAN THAT...
WAITER! THERE'S AN ALIEN HAIR IN MY SOUP! HA, HA, HA!

Quote of the Day

"The neighbors were startled by the cries that woke up the whole district as many as eight times in a single night and three times during siesta, and they prayed that such wild passion would not disturb the peace of the dead.."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Someone could try to stir up trouble at work. Keep a low profile around difficult associates. Romance is worth taking a chance. Secret financial dealings could bring big profits.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): People will seek your skill and savvy today; help out wherever possible. A group gathering presents you with an opportunity to shine. Higher-ups are more approachable than in the recent past.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): You are in a powerful phase, busy building a bright future. Listen and learn when influential people do the talking. Be willing to extend yourself to help someone in need.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Gaining the support of influential people will help you pursue your interests. Instant rapport develops between you and someone who works behind the scenes. Do not rock the financial boat.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): A favorable time for pinning down things at work - duties, rewards and routines. A long-range financial venture looks very promising. Avoid putting all of your eggs in one basket. Pursue romance.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Go all out to widen your circle of acquaintances now. You can set a new record in terms of career and social growth. People at a distance play an important role in your finances.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Clarify your financial aims. Conservative values will stand you in good stead. Do not be swept away by glamorous notions. A loved one wants to share an important secret. Delightful surprises await you!

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The emphasis today is on sharing both possessions and knowledge. Be clear about what you want from other people. A loved one's impetuous actions could threaten your peace of mind.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22- Dec. 21): Cultivate people of high rank or great wealth—you could be looking at a new world of prosperity. Share the limelight with those who deserve it. A promise will be kept.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If communication lines break down, wait until another day. Take a long look at what you want and where you are going. Loved ones are very supportive when you explain your goals.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Positive financial signs prevail as the month ends. Polish your job performance and influential people will see you in a new light. A promotion is possible.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Focus on recent progress in a partnership; perhaps you can resolve some old grievances. Legal matters could require expert advice. March in unison with your allies. A small gift helps romance along.

• If I could remember the 1975 World Series I would surely compare this 1991 Fall Classic to it. But I can't so let's just say that anything involving a team from Boston has to be better than anything involving a team from Minnesota.

• My friend Marci guarantees that the Celtics can't be contenders without Kevin Gamble on the floor. It's hard to disagree with her especially when you look at Gamble's contributions last year. Fifteen points per game and all out hustle definitely can't hurt. Sign him, Red.

• Hoop season begins with an exhibition against Marathon Oil on Sunday. Winner gets one year's free supply of home heating oil, loser has to deliver it.

• Think the Bruins need the services of Cam Neely? Mike Milbury looks like he's about ready to lace up the skates again if Rick Bowness can't get some more production from the troops.

• Penn State University is offering a course in golf management intended to fill the nationwide shortage of golf instructors presently on the links. Perhaps a focus on recruiting more school teachers might also be beneficial. Priorities?

• There's a secluded place about two miles from UMass that has the most beautiful trails winding along a Rolling Rock-like bubbling stream.

I could give the name and location, but part of the beauty is the serenity. One walk across the fallen leaves and under the bare branches at this time of year depicts the essence of fall in New England. (This quiet moment alone with nature has been brought to you by the good people at the Collegian sports desk.)

• Seibu beat Tokyo four games to three in the Japan World Series. (Spanning the globe to bring you the constant. . .)

• Holly Hellmuth is up for the Hermann Trophy as the nation's top female soccer player. If the award was based on leaping ability alone, there would be no one in her class.

• My pool game has gotten progressively worse but I keep blaming it on the warped cues and crooked tables. There's one local bar that has square balls and another that controls the eight ball with a magnet. That's just my opinion.

• I'm getting ready for the lunacy of Dick Vitale and the excitement of watching East-West Somewhere State knock off Duke in college basketball.

• Be sure to keep your feet in bounds and your eyes on the ball.

We'd like to show you a path that often holds the greatest reward.

Rewarding careers for people who care.

Down the road a few years from now, you're going to be glad you chose a career path today that's right in the heart of Boston. It's Northeastern University's Boston-Bouvé College of Human Development Professions – the smart choice that leads to a greater reward for people who really care.

The graduate programs offered by Boston-Bouvé College provide you with a wide range of career opportunities in health, sport, and leisure studies, rehabilitation, counseling, communication disorders, and education.

Our faculty have received national and international recognition for their research, teaching and service to others and to their profession. Boston-Bouvé College has well-established clinical affiliations with some of Boston's leading medical, educational and research facilities.

Study may lead to a master's degree, certificate of advanced graduate study (CAGS), or doctoral degree. Most programs are offered on a part-time as well as full-time basis, combining classroom theory with practical hands-on experience. Courses meet in the late afternoon and early evening, so students can continue to work.

Graduate programs are offered in the following areas:

Audiology
Clinical Exercise Physiology
College Student Personnel Work & Counseling
Consulting Teacher of Reading

with that same feeling that I experienced. Part thrill, part horror, part excitement and part pride. Once you do it, nothing is quite the same.

The Parachute Club has an office at 309 of the Student Union and works out of Tri-State Aviation in Turner's Falls, in conjunction with the Massachusetts Sport Parachute Club. It is that club that provides the instructors, jumpmasters and the all important, parachute packers.

On a Thursday night in late September, 11 UMass students and myself spent five hours learning the ins and outs of parachuting. At the beginning of the meeting you sign a form that basically gives your life away. If your parachute doesn't open and you die it is not their fault. No matter what happens, you can't sue.

With that setting a mighty somber tone we learned over and over what to do if something went wrong. From simple line twists, to not having your canopy open, to landing in the mighty Connecticut.

At one point we were out in the hallway practicing our jumps. As I looked down the hall I saw three RSOs. The Republican Club, Animal Rights Coalition and the Parachute Club. Of all the clubs I had to join, it would be the Parachute Club. My parents would be proud of me joining the Republicans, I am registered to vote that way anyway and who could argue with Animal Rights. I mean, nothing wrong with saving a few seals and all.

But no, I in my infinite wisdom pick parachuteing. I didn't think the parents would understand when I told them I told them of my new hobby. My mother always said it is good to get involved, but I doubt she had this in mind.

That Sunday we went early in the morning to the airport, about 20 minutes from campus. There we had ground instruction for a few more hours, practicing our landings, our arches and once again our safety procedures. By this time we were familiar with such odd terms as P.L.F., toggles, main canopy, archthousand, end cell closures just to name a few. By the end of training, I was fired up and ready to go. Unfortunately, the wind was also up and I couldn't skydive that day.

However, when my day finally came it was well worth the wait. My roommate, Matt Tryder, and I went out to the airport and were able to jump in perfect weather, over spectacular foliage.

There are certainly some precarious moments when you question your sanity, like when you climb in the airplane and realize you won't be landing with it and that there will be no stewardess bringing around the drink cart with the honey roasted peanuts. It is worth it though.

The leap was better than I dreamed it would be. After the initial rush of overcoming the natural fear of jumping from a plane, (when you get down to it, it is a really dumb thing to do) and the quick prayers that your canopy will open, you get the incredible feeling of flying. And that is one great feeling.

As you cruise along at a few thousand feet you have a sense that you are in control. That somehow you have outsmarted nature by beating gravity and flying like a bird. It is a feeling that is extremely addictive. And the view can't be beat, ever.

After being instructed on which way to turn and where to head for my landing I had to concentrate again. As I neared the target area I felt a sense of disappointment that it was almost over and once again fear that my landing might not be smooth. That fear was not necessary since I landed standing up, with about the same amount of shock as jumping from a chair.

I couldn't have been more wired when I landed. No narcotic could have given me that feeling, and there weren't even any side effects. Everyone in Butterfield give up the pipe and try the canopy, you won't be disappointed.

Matt and I jumped for joy, got in a truck and rode back to the airport to celebrate with our friend, Jobie Collins. And that night we all got drunk. As I see it, when you drop 3,200 feet from the sky, it's Miller time.

The other night I finally told my parents what I had done. No good son or daughter would tell them before and make them worry. My father asked me if I was off my rocker, but then listened with interest. My mother said her heart stopped beating for a second but then was proud of me for doing it. Both thought I should do it again. Which I probably will.

Anyone looking to join myself and around 40 of your fellow UMass students, for the time of your life, should head down to the Parachute Club headquarters; new student classes start up in the spring.

Comparing women's soccer to men's

Editor's note: this is the last of a four-part series depicting the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team.

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

There is great disparity going on between the University of Massachusetts soccer programs.

The women's team is celebrating it's tenth-straight year of being nationally ranked, and is battling for a NCAA Tournament bid and with a young team (only two seniors) the future looks only brighter.

On the other hand, the men's team is playing out it's terminal season, albeit with great success. The team needs to somehow raise $40,583 to play next year and they have the Athletic Department telling the coach not to recruit anyone new and the current players to transfer to other schools.

The reason for this disparity is money. An object the University, the Commonwealth and the Athletic Department have very little of.

"The problem is with the state," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "If there were no problems with the state, we wouldn't be having this conversation."

So everyone is suffering, why then has the women's program been one of the most successful in the country, while the men haven't had a winning season since 1985?

"It's history," UMass midfielder Amy Trunk said. "By having all of those winning seasons, players know that the women's team here is one that you want to play for. Players all over the country want to come to UMass. The men haven't had that history, but maybe now they do. The men are playing with a lot of heart."

"The women's team at UMass has a tradition that everyone knows about," UMass forward Kim Eynard said. "It is a tradition that players want to be a part of."

Both Trunk and Eynard were highly-touted high school players, who came from out of state to play for UMass.

"Success builds tradition," UMass men's soccer coach Sam Koch said. "The men have had that success in the past but not lately. Also, although I'm not sure of the facts, there is a big difference in the amount of scholarship money between the two programs."

One of the reasons the women's team has been able to build a tradition, is that when the program was started in the late 70s there were not many other competitive women's teams. Massachusetts was able to get the jump on the rest of the nation.

"If you look back at when the team was started there were probably only a few other competitive teams," UMass Associate Athletic Director Elaine Sortino said. "We made an early committment and built a strong team before anyone else. We were a top team from the start, now the challenge is to stay that way. Women's soccer is the fastest growing sport in the NCAA, and we beat a lot of schools to the punch, by starting early."

Rudy said, "UMass started at the top in the 70s. When this team was started, there were only seven or eight teams making a committment to women's soccer. Now almost everyone is doing it."

There are 91 Division I women's soccer programs in the United States, there are 194 Division I men's teams, according to the NCAA. Thus, the men's team have more schools to compete with.

"It is difficult to build that tradition, but not impossible," Koch said. "There are plenty of good players in Massachusetts and you have to start by getting them and then try the rest of the nation. With the lack of scholarships, you have to find kids with who money isn't the object. Although UMass has a good reputation out of state, the job won't be an easy one."

While many are excited about the women's team's continued success, no one likes the loss of the men's program.

"It's wrong, they've proved that they can be competitive against anyone," Trunk said. "It is a shame when they're just getting back to being a good team."

"Obviously, it is very emotional for everyone involved," Rudy said. "The administration is ultimately taking the hammer on this and I feel for them because they come out as the bad guys. I feel bad for everyone associated with that program. The men have always been known as a tough team and this year they are getting the wins. Under pressure the cream rises to the top and I think that is what you're seeing over there. It's too bad they can't use this year to grow on."

Unless $40,583 is raised we will never know if the men are on the way to building a soccer tradition that could rival the women.

Men's soccer looking for strong performance

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

Today at 2 p.m. on Lower Boyden Field, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team will attempt to take a giant step in its remarkable quest towards a berth in the Atlantic-10 Tournament.

The Minutemen will face Fairfield University, and while the game itself will have no bearing on UMass' A-10 standings, head coach Sam Koch understands its importance.

"We want to finish [the regular season] strong," Koch said. "Every game that we play from here on in, we're preparing for a chance to play Rutgers again [in the Atlantic-10 Tournament]."

Fairfield boasts an 11-4 overall record and is 6-2 in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference.

UMass' last match was a grueling loss to nationally top-ranked Rutgers, 6-2 on Sunday. Koch feels his team played well in the match, especially on offense, but there are aspects of his team's game he hopes to see improved, namely defense.

"Against Rutgers, we didn't defend in numbers like we can, because we were trying to score," Koch said. "We need to continue to play well offensively, but we have to tighten up the defense."

UMass' record stands at 7-4-4, 3-3-1 in the Atlantic-10, good for 10 conference points and a current fourth place standing. If the season was over today, UMass would face Rutgers again, in the tournament's first round. However, it isn't over.

On Nov. 2, while UMass is hosting a make-up game against Dartmouth, George Washington will host West Virignia in a battle of A-10 rivals. The fate of the Minutemen's post-season hinges on this contest.

West Virginia has nine A-10 points. A win over George Washington, while it would be an upset, would give West Virginia 12 conference points, and UMass would be ousted from the A-10 Tournament.

George Washington is in second place in the A-10, six points behind Rutgers, which has 18 points. West Virginia is mired in fifth place with only nine points. Heavily favored George Washington needs only to defeat or tie West Virginia to secure UMass' tournament bid.

If the Minutemen nail down the fourth spot in the A-10 Tournament, an obvious question arises. How do they beat Rutgers? Koch seems to have the answer.

"Score more goals than they do," he said.

Scott's Shots, cleaning the locker

While the letters are still pouring in from the inaugural "Scott's Shots," we thought it appropriate to clean out the locker once again.

• I'm going to miss Joe Morgan, or at least his snazzy answers to stupid questions. He left us one last gem when a reporter asked if he would lose any sleep over his firing.

David Scott

"The only time I lose sleep is when I eat garlic," the ex-skipper said. "That really cranks me up."

Me too, Joe and I'll bet Butch Hobson will find quite a few things that crank him up in his rookie managerial season.

• The crowd of over 400 people that showed up for the UMass men's soccer game this past Saturday should serve as some indication to the athletic department that cutting soccer from the budget is plainly and simply — D-U-M-B.

One of the great ironies of the whole soccer situation is that there is still talk of starting a hockey program. Who's making these decisions? Calvin and Hobbes perhaps.

• The neighborhood bully dog, Rock backed out of the title fight with my dog, Bo. Word on the street is that Bo's knockout of the collie down the road had Rock shaking in his dog house.

• Sammy Martin was released by the Patriots last week and picked up by the Colts. From the worst team in 1990 to the worst team in 1991. Sorry Sammy, but at least Indy has a dome stadium.

• I still like what the Pats are doing this season despite Hugh Millen's momentary lapse of reason last Sunday. Sure Hugh screwed up but at least he had the chance to screw up, last year the Pats would have sat on the ball with two minutes left.

• It's not too difficult to envision Jerome Bledsoe catching on with some NFL team, the guy can flat out run.

• It would be a crime if the UMass women's soccer team doesn't get a tournament bid and the feeling here is that Briana Scurry could shut out any team on any given day.

Skydiving, a great thrill

"Do you still want to do this," I was asked.

I nodded my head confidently, even though I wasn't.

"Good, . . .and good luck," he replied.

The door of the airplane opened quickly and 80 mile an hour winds hurled into the tiny aircraft. I looked down and saw the Connecticut River 3,200 feet down. It was beautiful, yet horrifying.

Dan Wetzel

"Put your feet out on the step," my jumpmaster instructed.

I did as I was told, as a million thoughts went through my head. I kept eye contact with the jumpmaster, like he said to do.

"Climb out onto the step."

I pulled myself out onto the step, fighting the wind and gripping onto the wing so I wouldn't fall. I inched to the end of that step, as instructed. And when he said go, I didn't hesitate, I went. As I started to drop 32 feet a second I knew what sky diving was all about.

LaFreniere honored by A-10

X-country coach of the year

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

The season keeps getting better for Coach Julie LaFreniere and the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team.

Not only did the team capture their first Atlantic 10 Championship on Saturday, but LaFreniere was also named the Atlantic 10 Coach-of-the-Year following the meet.

"I'm very excited, and it's quite an honor," LaFreniere said. "The women are the ones who won it for me, so they deserve most of the credit."

The award, voted by the A-10 coaches, comes in a season which has seen the Minutewomen compile a 4-3 record, despite being ravaged by injury.

"This season's been really tough, we've had a lot of injuries, and she [LaFreniere] has really kept our spirits up and pulled the team together," Kelly Liljeblad, a Minutewoman harrier squad member, said.

LaFreniere, now in her fifth season at UMass, is the first recipient of the award which was previously only given to the men's teams.

"I guess it's even more special because it's the first year the conference has given it," LaFreniere said. "But what really means a lot to me is that it was voted by my peers."

"She really deserves this," Liljeblad said. "She's really a great coach, but she's more than that, she's a friend too."

University trades hot sex for cool cash

By CHUCK U. FARLEY
Collegian Phallic Buritto

The administration has been running a work-study male/female prostitution ring out of Washington Tower for almost a year now, according to Vice-Chancellor Vivaladifference, an inside source who wished to remain anonymous (but too bad).

The prostitution program was started last year by former President-Chancellor Joe Buffme and continued by Chancellor "don't call me Dick" O'Godyes to help "combat the loss of slush fund revenue."

Entitled "Doin' it for U.," the program involves sending male and female work-study students out to "service" members of the community who promise to donate "large amounts of cash in easy to carry bags" to the University of Massachusetts.

"One enterprising one person managed to get three costumers to leave the University everything after they kick off," O'Godyes commented. "One of those customers did die in fact. . . with a big smile too."

"Don't tell anyone I said this, but the prositution program could be responsible for the governor's recent turn-around on the importance of higher education funding," Chancellor O'Godyes said.

When asked if the program might be just a tad illegal, O'Godyes replied that if sex is illegal in this country, he'll be on the next plane back to England.

"Everybody wants a little nookie now an then," he said.

O'Godyes added that the program could be offered as a course in the physical education department.

"Hey, it makes me sweat," he said.

Many students find the program a welcome alternative to other campus jobs and don't seem bothered by the fact that they have sex for money.

"It's better than working in the D.C. dishroom, that's for sure," said one program participant. "And the customers tip a lot better. Personally, I think of it as a public service. Not that I do it in public, but that everybody wins out. University gets some cash, the customer gets an orgasm, and I get some cash and an orgasm. Cool beans."

The programs founder Buffme said he was merely harnessing energy already in use at the University.

"The program allowed young, well-formed men and women to do what they would have done anyway, get drunk and do the wild thing, but instead they'd do it for the good of the University," Buffme said in a recent centerform interview. "And it looks great on a resume."

Duffey ended his term at the University last semester and moved to Washington D.C. where his wife lives in order to "get some quality sex" and take a position on the American University custodial staff "because it pays more."

Photog gets in bus' way

Street gets cleaned, first time in years

By SQUASHED REYNOLDS
Collegian Stiff

An ill-fated Collegian photographer was squashed flat by a PVTA bus yesterday.

The bus, driven by Christian Jones was Northbound on North Pleasant St and struck Josh (Interim) Reynolds at 5:45 P.M.

Reynolds had wandered onto the street, camera in hand, only seconds before he was struck by the Belchertown Rd. route.

"It was kinda' funny," said Tammi Blithe horrified onlooker, "He said, 'Ooh, lookit' the duckies', and then Wham!"

"Whatta mess," said Al Sluggard, a Physical plant worker called to the scene. "I hate it when their shoelaces get all tangled up in the axles like that."

University officials said they would not file charges for damage which Reynolds did to the front of the bus, but did present the next of kin with a $57 cleaning fee.

Jones said that in his three years of driving for the PVTA this was his first confirmed kill.

"I'm not allowed to stop for students after I've pulled away from a bus stop," said Jones.

Leo Procrustean, the University's Dean of arbitrary regulation, confirmed that Jones acted according to PVTA rules.

"Oh, that's just [expletive] great," said Preston Forehead, Collegian News Monger. "That makes two this year, what is this Spinal Tap?" "We really need another head shot of whats-his-face at a podium, Why did he have to get killed after layout?" Forehead continued.

"You'd better put your news slaves back to work," advised Managing Head Cheeze Joe Bob Elliott, "otherwise the graphics department will fill up the empty photo spots with [expletive] pictures of bats n' stuff."

At the darkroom Reynold's associate editor (and behind the scene department savior) Jeff Fliegen was visibly saddened to hear of the event.

Though he asked not to be quoted, Fliegen expressed heartfelt regret that none of Reynold's equipment was salvageable.

Messiah visits coffee social

Police ask: 'Who does that guy think he is, God?'

By Christian Stye
Collegian Heretic

Witnesses claim Jesus Christ attended a GLB coffee social last Friday in the Campus Center. Campus Security spokesperson J. I. Rome has released a statement that a man wearing a white dress and sandals was escorted off campus that day. Rome says this person claimed to be "Jesus Christ" but could not provide appropriate identification.

According to witnesses who asked that their names and religious affiliations be witheld, a man wearing "a flowing white robe" entered Campus Center room 803 around 3:30 p.m. Friday afternoon.

One woman, who said she is bisexual, said the man didn't identify himself until asked by someone present at the coffee social, then "he said he was the Savior and asked if he could have some coffee and broccoli spriga with dip."

"His face sort of glowed," the woman said, "and he smiled at me as helped himself to some food. He felt so warm and kind that I didn't even stop to think he might be crazy. I didn't even question him."

According to Rome, security officers said they noticed "a man in drag" enter the campus center and decided to follow him. After they saw him enter the GLB coffee social, Rome said officers conferred and decided to request a show of identification from the individual.

Rome said the man told the two officers his dress "was seamless and had no pockets" and that he didn't have a way to carry a plastic I.D. card.

When officers explained to the man that without an I.D. he would have to leave the campus, Rome said one of the officers wrote in his report that "a card just sort of appeared Guess what?

This is not the usual boring rag you have come to know and love. This is not the normal piece of trash your professors make fun of and lists your friends in the police log.

IT'S A PARODY, YOU BONEHEAD!

So, enjoy all of the laughs and tacky stuff in the outside four pages of this 28-page pile of garbage — and if you have any problems, stop calling up here and telling us the paper sucks.

Get off your lazy ass and just try and find us! Most of you slackers don't even know where we are, so do us a favor and just stay home.

And if you bunch of losers couldn't tell it's a parody, then stop smoking those funny cigarettes and eating contaminated mushrooms and note the date on the front page of the paper is right (for once).

For Your Fucking Information

FYIs are far from public service announcements. As a matter of fact, we couldn't care less about what you want us to print. So don't even bother sending them in to us, because you can be assured that we, along with everyone on this campus, don't give a flying fuck about your stupid organizations and pointless meetings! NO ONE CARES!!! Especially the typists. . .

Thursday, October 31

Meeting — There will be a meeting sponsored by the Old Farts Association of Amherst at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall. Come help us decide how many other ways we can screw over UMass and its students. No one under 60 admitted.

Meeting — An open meeting will be held in Whitmore to discuss more ways to waste the University's money while simultaneously hiking tuition beyond its already astronomical limits. Only the naive, rich and ignorant need attend.

Open Fire Drill — A celebration of the long history and growing tradition of pointless fire drills in the Southwest Area will be held all night long. Come show your friends how many times you can pull the alarm without getting caught!

Open Massacre — An event sponsored by The Nostradamus Organization to Panic Everyone (NOPE) will be held in an L-shaped building, near a pond, near a construction site, near a D.C. named Hampshire, near a lot numbered 32, near a sewage plant, near a building named Boyden in a New England College. Those with very sharp weapons and automatic machine guns are invited to attend. All others are advised to go home or hide somewhere off-campus — this event is inevitable!!!

Instruction — "How to Steal Lounge Furniture. . . Without Getting Caught! An experienced panel will discuss the strategies of effective theft and successful camouflage of lounge furniture. This discussion will be held at 8 p.m. in the empty sixth floor lounge of Kennedy.

Discussion — A panel of psychiatrists will be discussing "Guitars and Amplifiers: What To Do With the Fool Who Thinks He Can Play. . . and Quite Obviously Can't!" Various methods of destruction of the guitar and other prized belongings of the pseudo-guitarist will be discussed. Anyone with annoying, loser, non-guitar playing floormates invited to attend.

Rally — Sick and tired of the piss-poor food from the Dining Commons? There will be a rally and protest against New England Style Scrod scheduled to convene on the steps of Berkshire Dining Commons at 6 p.m. A riot and torching of the D.C. will follow. All are welcome!

Workshop — Learn how to be just like that fool in class who can ramble on for hours without having a clue of what the hell he's talking about. We'll teach you how to become the most hated by your fellow classmates while simultaneously becoming the T.A.'s pet!

Tour — An in-depth tour of the Campus Pond and its sludge will be held at 12 p.m. An up-close look at the various forms of diseases and bacterial infections within the confines of our very own University swamp! Scuba diving suits and radioactive suits are mandatory.

Rome said that the officers were not fooled, however, "because the man's sticker did not have a valid sticker for the Fall semester."

much less a student.

"Well, I guess I'll be chokin' the preverbial monkey," said Senator Joseph Blow, "This is a democratic process and I will do whatever the masses tell me."

Area Government representatives demanded the motion sent to the residential areas for approval. Nobody could find the rules governing this, leading to a recess which allowed SGA officers to quickly fabricate some rules and print an ammended constitution. No senators had a copy of the old constitution on hand, and were quieted by the new rule:

"Masterbation motions should be decided by the Senate body, as they are the most knowlegable in that area."

The Board of Governors immediately took action, offended by not being addressed on the question of Masterbation Week. They had the locks on the SGA office changed and reassigned their space to the Student Union fourth floor rest rooms.

"There is a time and a place for masterbation," said BOG member Diane Tadouit, "I cannot tell the SGA when to masterbate, but the bathrooms certainly are the place to be."

Women's caucus members filed with student judiciary immediately after the BOG decision, saying the separation of office space between men and Wowmyne was unconstitutional.

"I'm not too concerned," said Tad Vein of the BOG, "Nobody ever hears from Student Judiciary anyway. By the way, is anybody on that board? Where are they?"

After the vote was taken, the senators proceded to pull down their pants in support of the motion. Just then Chancellor O'Brien entered the room to address the Senate on complaints that they are not treated as adults.

"Well, most have them have certainly gone through puberty," he said. "Except for President Gaggme, they are all endowed with curly hair on their genitals."

O'Brien did not stay long, offending the student representatives.

"We are going to show our empowerment, er, maturity by holding Masterbation Week excersizes at Whitmore," said one senator.

Beer, blood, booze and other stuff makes for a wild bash

By Rick Zolisera
Collegian Staff

At just past midnight, Jeff approached his roommate who had keg duty and asked for a refill. "Great party, huh Brian!" Jeff stated enthusiastically. "Awesome, Awesome," said Brian "there are so many people here."

All around them in the basement of their Bridge street house, hundreds of dancing ghouls swung their bodies to the rhythms of the reggae punk band called the Dead Pie.

The basement floors and walls were layered with damp musty corn stalks, discolored leaves, hay-filled dummies hanging by knooses and poetry which read "I want to fill your heart with my fingertips, I want to wash my larynx with your bitter sweet blood."

Jeff stood swaying back and forth. A large cloud of dust from the earth floor beneath the corn stalks had risen into the room like a morning fog. The Dead Pie roared to his right, guitar chords ripping through the house and bouncing off the stone walls of the basement like a Tyrannasauras Rex's screech.

Jeff turned and looked at Brian. Brian had begun a conversation with a women dressed as candy. Jeff smiled as she pointed to a friend and escaped from Brian's side. "Oh well," said Brian as he lifted his beer to his lips. Jeff smiled and toasted his friend.

The crowd had begun to push forward upon the disgruntled lead singer of the Dead Pie. Ari stopped in mid-song asking the cast of ghouls before him to "Please get back." A tall large blonde man dressed as Lucipher with a pitchfork volunteered to be a bouncer and began pushing the crowd back as he bobbed up and down with the beat.

Upstairs in Brian's bed, three of his friends opened up a Milton Bradley's Wija. It had been a year since a friend of theirs had taken his life by jumping over a 300 foot ridge known as cliffside.

"I miss Andy," Jill sighed as she placed the candle on the nightstand beside the bed. "I do too," said Jill. "Do you really think this will work?" questioned Eric who held a beer in one hand and a cigarette in the other.

"Maybe," said Amy. Eric sat quietly as the other two finished the final preparations. Like most of the guests tonight he had taken a generous handful of mushrooms. A short wave had just passed him as he pondered the scenario of calling upon his lost friend.

Jill turned off the light. The candle cast an even glow about the room, slightly illuminating their faces. Together the three held the board upon their knees and began the slow circling movement of the game piece. Around and around the game piece floated until finally resting upon a blank section of the board. The closet door slammed suddenly as the candle light flickered.

"Andy?" Jill asked, her voice shaky, the hair on the back of her neck standing at attention. The game piece floated to the Y position. "I knew it, I knew it was him," cried Jill breaking into a slight sob as a tear trinkled down her cheek. "How do we know for sure?" asked Amy.

Eric looked up. The shrooms had returned grabbing his chest from within him forcing the adrenaline throughout his body like a piston. "Hey," said Eric "are you getting laid?" The board shook violently. The candle flickered in the sealed room. "What is it like?" asked Jill. "Does it hurt?" "I don't like this shit!!" said Eric jumping from the bed turning on the light. "No" screamed Jill "Andy !!! Andy!"

Downstairs the band had begun another hypnotic tune, the crowd was moshing, the dust was beginning to choke Brian as he poured the beers. A bloody figure approached the keg bar. The figure looked up at Brian, puffy hollow eyes, black and blue streaks upon his face, a large scrape in his shoulder revealed through his torn shirt. A Boston red sox hat on backwards. "Wanna beer, buddy," Brian asked as he pumped the keg.

The figure was silent. Brian felt himself shiver as the hairs on his arm pointed towards the moon. "Wanna drink?" Brian said again looking up for the first time into the figures eyes.

The figure looked into Brian's gaze and smiled. "No" he said in a low rumbling, "just visiting!"

The full cup of beer slipped through Brian's fingers. He stood shaking and wet his mouth gaping open as the band finished its last note.

Madrid peace conference commences

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Israelis and Arabs opened historic talks today aimed at overcoming four decades of hostility and war in the Middle East. President Bush implored them to strike a deal centered on territorial compromise and permanent treaties.

"Peace in the Middle East need not be a dream," Bush said at the dramatic opening of the first peace talks in a generation.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev forcefully seconded the call for compromise. "It would be unforgivable to miss this opportunity," he said.

In a chilling reminder of the Middle East's bloody politics, an Iranian lawmaker influential with Lebanese terrorist groups said today that all peace conference participants should be killed.

But such extreme opposition to the conference was the exception, not the rule, in much of the Arab world. "The battle for peace begins," said a banner headline today in Jordan's biggest newspaper, Al-Rai.

Syria, Israel's most implacable foe, hewed to its traditional hard line. After the ceremonial opening of the conference, one Syrian official in Madrid said Syria might pull out of the peace process unless there are key Israeli concessions.

But many in Madrid were expressing optimism despite deep differences. "I think on the whole this has been a very good day for the prospects of peace," Israeli Deputy Foreign Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said after today's session.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Amr Moussa, the first Arab delegate to address the gathering, said the conference heralded "a new era in the Middle East." Egypt is the only Arab country to have ever made peace with Israel.

In his speech, Moussa demanded recognition of the rights of Palestinians, denounced Jewish settlements in occupied lands and insisted Israel should not "exercise a monopoly" over Jerusalem.

The status of Jerusalem, which is holy to Jews and Muslims alike, is one of the bitterest issues confronting the conferees. Israel annexed the eastern portion of the city after capturing it in the 1967 Middle East war and has vowed it will remain united forever as the capital of the Jewish state. The Palestinians also claim the city as their capital.

As the talks opened, the splendor of Spain's Royal Palace and its rich tapestries could not make the underlying

Hearing horrors of homophobia

Students, officials offer solutions to fight epidemic

By DAVID MASSEY

University students and officials gathered yesterday in the Campus Center to discuss the growing epidemic of homophobia in the residence halls and proposed practical solutions.

Over 40 people came together at this human relations forum entitled "Homophobia in the Residence Halls: What we can do?" moderated by Grant Ingle, director of the Office of Human Relations.

"What we're looking at is a community problem," Ingle said. "We want to share information."

Larry Moneta, associate director for residential education, said the harassment of lesbian, gay and bisexual students in the residence halls is a growing epidemic.

"Violence seems to be a growing phenomenon," Moneta said. "There's every reason to be afraid." He said homophobic graffiti, direct physical and verbal assault and harassment by voice-mail are all increasing at alarming rates.

Although Moneta called the problem "frustrating," he said solutions need to originate from within the residence halls.

He said housing services has "an unwavering commitment to social justice."

Candidates meet students

By JASON GEORGE

Three University of Massachusetts officials seeking the position of provost met yesterday with a small group of undergraduate and graduate students to express their views on the role and responsibilities of the position.

Acting Provost Glen Gordon, Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Norman D. Aitken and Stephen H. Gehlbach, dean of the school of Public Health, each gave a short statement and answered questions in a series of open meetings sponsored by the Provost Search Committee.

The position announcement for provost lists the responsibilities of the position as "planning and developing academic programs, fostering the academic growth and development of faculty and students, formulating and executing academic policies, and budgeting for and administering academic programs and related institutional activities."

All three candidates noted the importance of defining the mission and role of the University in the context of the Commonwealth's fiscal problems and the resultant shrinking of resources available for higher education.

Gordon, who has held the position of acting provost since early June, said while the University is entering a "new era," it is important to have top administrators who possess a sense of the history of the institution.

"We're entering a new period — we have a new University system, a new funding period," Gordon said. "We also need a sense of stability. It makes sense to have someone [as provost] who's been here a while."

Having been a professor and an administrator at the University for 27 years, Gordon expressed his dedication to the University in a written statement that said "[UMass] aspires to be the flagship campus,

Nostradamus rumors gain international fame

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

The rumors that the sixteenth century French astrologer Nostradamus predicted a mass murder to take place at a New England college sometime this week have swept campuses on the east coast and have attracted worldwide attention.

CNN, the French press agency and a Los Angeles radio station have all carried the story. Versions were printed in The Boston Globe, The New York Times and USA Today.

Localized Nostradamus rumors have circulated on college campuses as far as Syracuse University in New York and Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pa.

On the local front, a UMass police officer was posted Tuesday night in the lobby of the residence hall rumored to be the site of the future mass murder.

Campus officials said yesterday that security tonight will be as rigorous as past Halloweens, which is traditionally tougher than everyday standards.

An Easthampton astrology expert, Kate Severinsen said in reference to Nostradamus' supposed prediction, "Don't put too much weight on it."

Severinsen said it is impossible for astrologers to make precise predictions like those described in the Nostradamus rumor.

"All astrologers can do is make their best guess based on the planets certain forces and energies," she said. "It is impossible for an astrolger to predict with one hundred percent accuracy because there are too many variables."

University of Massachusetts professors have cited different reasons for the rumors' far-reaching appeal.

"Usually we think rumors spread when there is uncertainty and anxiety," said sociology professor John P. Hewitt. "Rumors of this kind are interesting to people."

"When people are interested in a rumor, they tend to pass it on," he said.

Hewitt explained that "facts get shaped, modified and altered" as "people invent facts."

"Once it starts it is not easy to stop," he added.

Journalism professor Howard Ziff said news stories like the those sparked by the Nostradamus rumors "feed on themselves — just as rumors feed on themselves."

Ziff said the interest from the media stems from "stereotypes of young [college] people. . . that they are silly."

Communications professor Donald Carbaugh said, "Our insecurities show through when people take it seriously. We can feel more threatened today than in the past."

Deadbeat dad goes to prison

AP photo

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Holding court papers, Gregory Morey glares back at the camera while on a court elevator after pleading guilty Wednesday to two counts of failure to support his children. The Scottsdale man, known as the nation's worst deadbeat dad, owes more than $108,000 in child support according to authorities.

PHOENIX (AP) — A man known as the nation's worst deadbeat dad was sentenced today to a year and a half in prison for failing to pay $108,000 in child support and interest to his ex-wife.

Superior Court judge Robert Gottsfield said he imposed the sentence on Gregory Morey as a warning to other fathers.

"A message must get out that its a crucial, crucial thing to support our children," the judge said.

Morey, 35, also was sentenced to three years' probation for failing to support his three children for a decade.

His case has drawn widespread attention since his name appeared at the top of a national list of fathers delinquent on their child support payments. Publication of the list assembled by the National Council of State Child Support Enforcement Administrators, a professional group, prompted him to surrender.

Morey, a restaurant manager, pleaded guilty Oct. 2 to two felony counts of failure to pay child support, and under an agreement with prosecutors a third count was dropped. He could have faced a maximum of three years in prison, 1 1/2 years on each count.

His divorce decree had ordered him to pay $600 a month -$200 for each child -beginning in September 1982.

The state attorney's office said Morey owed $74,000 in back payments and $34,000 in interest.

Morey, who lives in Scottsdale, had agreed to pay $66,600 in restitution, excluding interest.

His former wife, now Susan Aldrich, urged a stiff sentence, even though it delays the start of payments while Morey is in prison.

Commission pleased with safety planning at Pilgrim plant

By JOHN DIAMOND
Associated Press

ROCKVILLE, Md. — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission said Wednesday it is pleased with safety planning at the Pilgrim nuclear power plant in Plymouth, Mass.

Despite complaints from some local officials and one private citizen about inadequacies in the planning process, NRC Chairman Ivan Selin said Pilgrim operators have cleared up many of the problems that surrounded safety planning.

It's just extraordinary how fast the progress has been at clearing up these issues," Selin said. Closing the afternoon meeting about an hour earlier than expected, he added "Sorry to bring you down here for such a short presentation but if it goes smoothly there's no reason to drag it out."

The meeting amounted to a progress report for the four-member commission. Last July, the NRC confirmed its earlier finding that emergency plans at Pilgrim are adequate.

Critics of the plant had charged the NRC's approval of the emergency plans was based on incomplete, misleading and even false information developed by its field staff in late 1988. The information was crucial to the commissions's decision to allow the plant to reopen after a nearly three-year shutdown.

The 675 megawatt plant continued to operate while the NRC reviewed its own regulatory processes and while Edison launched an intensified effort to complete its emergency planning. By July the NRC was ready to give its approval.

Two town officials from communities near the plant told the commission there remain some unresolved safety issues.

Duxbury, Mass. town manager Thomas Groux questioned the adequacy of a shelter in Wellesley, Mass., designed to house evacuees from a nuclear emergency. Groux also raised questions about whether an emergency transportation plan would meet local needs.

"The town needs much more comprehensive information concerning numbers of busses, assurances of availability and time of arrival when called," Groux wrote in a letter to the NRC made public Wednesday.

"We do not believe any of our plans or procedures are final or fully adequate for our residents in the event a real incident at [Pilgrim] takes place."

Kingston board of selectmen member Clive Beasley said the proposals for helping the handicapped and local school children in an emergency are inadequate.

Beasley quoted Kingston resident Susan Dunlop, parent of an elementary school student, who said "How could we ask bus drivers from safe areas to endanger their lives by entering the evacuation zone to transport people?"

Duxbury resident Jane Fleming, an active opponent of the Pilgrim emergency plans, petitioned the NRC to reconsider its decision. Selin said the petition would look at her complaints.

The Edison official responsible for Pilgrim safety planning procedures insisted that that if an emergency took place this week, the utility and state and local officials would be ready to respond.

Guatemala drowning in despair, says speaker

By MADANMOHAN RAO

Miguel Quiej, a Guatemalan Indian, spoke yesterday afternoon to an audience in the Campus Center at UMass on the current situation in Guatemala, 500 years after Columbus.

Quiej, a Quiche Indian, is one of the founding members of CONDEG, the National Council of Displaced Persons of Guatemala. He spoke through an interpreter, George Gary.

"500 years after the Europeans came to Guatemala, we see the United States and Spain embarking on celebrations of 500 years of 'encounters' between two worlds," Quiej said.

"For us, it meant 500 years of exploitation, misery and thievery of our culture; 500 years of massacre, displacement, and marginalization of the Mayans; 500 years of creation of widows and orphans," Quiej said.

"And the massacre and bombings continue even today," he said. "The scorched-earth policy in Guatemala has led to the burning of houses, destruction of crops, and theft of our possessions."

"Many try escape the violence by fleeing to the mountains, where they die of illness, cold and hunger," Quiej said. "The army pursues them, and the bombings and machine-gunnings continue."

Miguel Quiej

Displaced Guatemalans work either in subhuman conditions on plantations for less than a dollar a day, or move to huts on the outskirts of cities, Quiej said.

"Many don't have identification papers, and their children cannot enroll in schools because they have no birth certificates," Quiej said. "The authorities in the villages refuse to give us documents, because they fear we may demand our land back."

It was out of this suffering and discontent that CONDEG was born, Quiej said. "Through CONDEG, the displaced people gave the President of Guatemala their demands — return to places of origin, and recovery of ethnic and religious identities."

"However," Quiej said, "these demands were forgotten by the president, and kidnappings and assassination of leaders continued."

Recently, on October 7-12, a 27-country conference was held in Guatemala to consolidate the struggles of indigenous people all over the Americas, Quiej said. "We have decided to plan a work stoppage throughout this continent as a statement of solidarity and unity," he said.

The Guatemalan government has already started a

Police and Fire personnel responded to the 2nd floor of Melville Residence Hall on Tuesday evening for a fire involving a burning mattress and pillow. As students evacuated the building, the fire was extinguished.

Officials said the cause of the fire was a clamp-on light too close to a pillow. The estimated value of damage is $125.

Report rips Turnpike Authority

Discovers wasteful practices and a 'hidden agenda'

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Turnpike Authority is a "wasteful anachronism" that has prolonged its own existence, according to a report released Wednesday by Inspector General Robert A. Cerasoli.

The report accuses the authority of squandering toll revenues on employee perks and pursuing a "hidden agenda" to prolong its existence.

"I think the turnpike authority should be eliminated, but that's a policy decision in the hands of the governor and Legislature," Cerasoli said. "How they do that is up to them."

Gov. William Weld wants the authority privatized.

James Aloisi, the authority's general counsel, said he had not seen the report, but said he expected it to be critical.

"If it's a negative report, that comes about as much of a surprise to us as if we were told the sun will rise in the east tomorrow," he said.

The turnpike authority was created by the Legislature in 1952 to build the 135-mile-long road that serves as the major east-west thoroughfare through the state.

It also operated the Sumner and Callahan Tunnels in Boston.

The agency was supposed to cease operations, eliminate the tolls and transfer its facilities to the state Department of Public Works when the bonds sold to finance the construction were retired.

"Just the opposite has occurred," the report stated. "The turnpike authority has taken steps to prolong its existence. Survival has become the authority's hidden agenda."

The report cited a 1990 bond sale through the Massachusetts Industrial Finance Authority as an example of how the authority accumulated more debt to stay in business.

The report said the authority has used the accumulation of indebtness, explained by the need for vital repairs, to perpetuate its existence.

The report also criticizes "wasteful" employee perquisites, including a sick leave policy that reward the agency's 1,102 employees for good attendance in one calendar year by picking up their full health insurance costs the next year; charitable contributions funded by tollpayers, and payments to catering services for employee outings.

Aloisi defends the benefits as appropriate for a modern transportation agency.

Holiday stays with you

Yippie! It's Halloween, the one day that lets you revert back to your childhood year after year. You may have outgrown believing in Santa Claus, the Easter Bunny, and the Tooth Fairy, but you will never be too old to stop believing in Halloween.

Jana Brady

As a child, Halloween meant orange and black art supplies and the creation of various ghosts, goblins and ghouls. Several black cats, witches and pumpkins came to life during the class' craft sessions as well.

It meant glow-in-the-dark prized in cereal boxes, carving jack-o-lanterns, baking pumpkin seeds, listening to scary music and hoping for a full moon on October 31. It meant raking leaves with the family and stuffing Dad's old flannel shirt and too-small overalls, from when he was "in his prime," to make a scarecrow named "Leafy."

It meant a gathering of the neighborhood kids for hot apple cider, a hanging donut eating contest and bobbing for apples in ice cold water. It meant hearing eye-widening, spine-chilling, garishly frightening ghost stories, and then going to a well-staged haunted house maze.

It meant daydreaming in class while awaiting the afternoon costume party and upcoming evening events, and doodling spooky images in the margins of your paper along with the word "BOO!"

It meant tricks and treats, decking out in Halloween garb and going door to door for something good to eat.

It meant returning home all rosy-cheeked and tingly, due to a combination of the brisk autumn air, and the fact that Mom had insisted you wear thermals under your costume for the nighttime candy quest. It meant evaluating the goodies afterwards and categorizing them by type or brand name. Mom would check the apples for razors and allot the house's leftover, non-handed-out treats to Dad as a reward for trick-or-treat chaperoning.

It meant watching Linus sit in the pumpkin patch for yet another year while scarfing down a ton of candy corns and candy bars gathered from the around-the-block marathon.

As a teenager, Halloween meant something different. It meant being embarrassed to participate too extensively in the above activities.

It meant the end of elementary school craft sessions and costume parties. It meant going to the junior high dance instead, where the boys and girls stood on opposite sides of the gym googling at each other. It meant Halloween pranks, like egging houses and smashing pumpkins, were cool and that you were a nerd if you raised an opposing voice to such behavior.

As an adult, Halloween may have yet another definition. Today we think more about hay rides, horror movies and masquerades. We play the part of the chaperone or candy-doler, rather than the trick-or-treater (although some of us haven't outgrown that role yet either).

One thing hasn't changed, though. No matter how old we become, we never have to lose the ability to show our holiday spirit and feel as excited and carefree as a child for a brief moment or two.

What better time to begin to do so than Halloween? Who or what are you going as this year?

Jana Brady is a UMass student

Changes in Halloween

It is Halloween and I am two years old. My parents have dressed me up as Raggedy Ann. I am wearing a curly red wig and a blue and white dress. Pink blush is swirled on my cheeks and there are brown freckles dotting my nose. Pictures of bright colored candy fill my imagination and I am as happy as a clam.

Felice Cohen

It is Halloween and I am eight years old. This year I am dressed up as a witch. I found an old black cape in my attic and my dad helped me make a tall, pointy witch's hat out of black felt, wire and glue.

I found an old broom in our garage and my neighbor said I could borrow her jet black cat, "but just for a picture." My mom painted my face green, with make up we made from a recipe in an old witch's book I found in the library.

I am excited to go trick or treating and collect goodies from the neighbors. In school they taught us that we are supposed to discard all apples and double check all wrappers for tampering.

It is Halloween and I am twelve years old. My best friend's brother let me borrow his uniform (in exchange that I promise to let him sit next to me on the bus for a week). Complete with shoulder pads and a helmet, all I have to supply are the grunts.

Returning home, the candy spills out from my pillow case, which I started using last year (ever since the plastic bag I had developed a hole, and it wasn't until four Snickers bars and three Good and Plenties later that I realized this unfortunate dilemma).

Eagerly I convince my little sister to pool her sugary treasures together with mine, and from there we divide up our wares "equally."

As my parents watch on, my dad busy capturing the moment on film and my mom handing out toothpaste, I gingerly con my sister out of all the best picks.

"Oh, you won't like those, they have nuts," or, "Don't you remember the time you ate one of those and felt sick all night?" at which point she hands over the decadent delights.

Watching my pile grow at twice the rate of hers, I know at that point I was meant for a career in business.

[By the time my sister caught on to what I had been doing to her for years, I had since given up trick or treating. But she had never gotten angry at me, since at that point she had begun scamming our youngest sister.]

It is Halloween and I am sixteen years old. I don't have the desire to dress up, let alone the time. I think I will spend the evening writing a history paper. But of course when my sisters arrive home, bags filled with candy, I'll inspect their goods.

It is Halloween and I am eighteen years old. I am at UMass and it has been a long time since the idea of trick or treating filled my thoughts.

Instead, college offers more exciting things to do. I can go "trip or treating" at Hampshire college, throw eggs out dorm windows at passers-by or drink till I drop with my floor mates. But I will go to the library and study for my mid-term.

It is Halloween and I am twenty-one years old. No longer living in the dorms, the temptations of funneling, egging or tripping have all but disappeared.

Instead, I am left remembering the times when Halloween meant dressing up as my favorite cartoon character, eating candy until I went to bed with a stomach ache and earning a disappointed look from my dentist.

Could this mean I am finally growing up?

Well, enough contemplating . . . anybody got a candy bar?

Nostradamus and UMass: Expert tells dorm to party!

My first response when I read about the alleged Nostradamus prediction of a murder in an L-shaped building on a hill that just must be James Dormitory was to laugh. Especially when I heard that some UMass students actually believed that Nostradamus, a 16th Century astrologist/prophet who wrote some vague, (we're talking very vague) projections of future world cataclysms would actually have bothered to tune in to this little tiny campus. (And I thought people who live in Boston were conceited!).

Trystan Skeigh

But, then, when I realized folks were actually taking this foolish rumor seriously, I decided to go to the library and look up Nostradamus, since I felt absolutely positive that nothing this guy could have said, in his rhyming 16th Century couplets, could possibly have anything to do with this campus. Unfortunately, the two books on the shelf were too accurate to help me. They were published in the original 16th-Century Italian.

So then I decided to ask an expert, local astrologist Kate Severinsen in Easthampton.

She was flabbergasted when I told her about the rumor.

She said no astrologer in the world, dead or alive, could possibly make the kind of precise prediction suggested by this rumor. She also stressed that astrology itself is an imprecise science.

"In astrology, one has to understand that the planets represent certain forces or energies—different forces are expressed in different ways. When planets conjunct or intersect, sometimes there is force, or tension. All astrologers can do is make their best guess when those two energies conflict—whether it's in a person's astrological chart, a nation's chart, or a college's chart..." Severinsen explained to me over the phone.

I doubted that the unknown source of the UMass Nostradamus rumor had access to a James dormitory astrological chart,(in fact, I doubt whether one could even make one — could you imagine how many hours it would take to chart each individual resident, then do the building, then look for intersections?) and I also felt doubt about Nostradamus' ability to foresee a problem occurring in a little college dormitory on the coast of New England, so I asked Severinsen what she thought about Nostradamus and UMass.

She said "It's my understanding of Nostradamus and prophets like him that they go into a dream state and see images — considering the fact that he was looking 500 years into the future, he couldn't possibly have understood what he was seeing. One can't put much weight on it."

Severinsen went on to explain that when astrologers like Nostradamus look into the future on the "astro-level" all they can sense are "shared fears and tensions." She stressed that no astrologer can know what form those tensions will take.

Severenin noted that "two kinds of people come to astrologers. One group wants to know their future definitively — the other kind want to know the possibilities and the timing around the possibilities."

I said I thought only the second group had a healthy relationship to astrology. She agreed, adding "It's a helpful tool, but it's impossible for an astrologist to predict anything with 100% accuracy — there are too many variables."

I asked Severinsen what her advice to James' residents would be, assuming Nostradamus actually did see tension at their Hall.

Severinsen said "I think they should have a really nice party and celebrate that they're alive, in a country where they have a chance to go to college, put on some great music, wear bright clothes, turn up the lights, be happy, and dance the night away."

"If the energy of tension and change is going to be there—work with it," she urged.

Life in the Campus Center: Fun, glamour and Hatch fries

"Hey Greg, where are you going?" my neighbor Dou asks. [Say "dew" — it's a nickname.]

"Guess," I reply. Instantly, Dou knows where I'm going. Not Rafters. Not lunch. The Collegian, of course.

"You live there, don't you," he says. He's right — I do live here, for all practical purposes. Any editor or frequent contributor pretty much has to.

Wouldn't you like to know what it's like to live in the Campus Center? Okay, maybe you don't, but I could care less. I have space to fill. You'll read this and like it, dammit. [Insert evil cartoon villain laughter here.]

Let's start with the most vibrant part of the Campus Center — the concourse. I have no clue as to how many people pass through the concourse, but let's put it this way — of all the people I know at UMass, I've seen them all at least once in the concourse.

It's as close to a shopping mall as you'll find on campus. UMass already has one mall — Haigis Mall — and many's the new student who asks "How many stores?"

For real mall atmosphere — a contradiction in terms, perhaps — the concourse is the place to be. If it's marketable, it's in there. Sweatshirts, compact disks, jewlery, buttons, books, sex — ha ha, caught you looking — computers and their accessories are all available on any given day.

Then there are the various tables set up by RSO's, charities and the like. Half the fun is in the various schemes groups use to get folks to stop by their tables. UMass basketball highlight films and UMass ski club highlight films are two examples. The Red Cross dressed someone up as a blood drop to attract donors.

Greg Sukiennik

The creme de la creme, though, has to go to the group that showed Bugs Bunny cartoons. A sizable crowd could be seen at said table [which RSO, I can't recall], which isn't surprising since Bugs rules.

The basement is a world unto itself. The Collegian shares with WMUA, the Index yearbook [yes, we have a yearbook] and the UMass Science Fiction Society. Quite an eclectic line-up.

If you spend enough time in the Campus Center, you eventually get to know the people who work there. Like Amy over at the Index. She's office manager and urges you to come on down and buy an Index. "They're cheap," she notes.

Or if your stomach is gnawing at you, head over to the Bluewall and buy a cookie and an espresso. Carol or Smitty will be more than willing to set you up with all-important sugar and caffeine for those late-night study sessions on the couches.

Ahh, the couches. Leaving this place in the wee hours of the morning after a long night of production, one would expect to find the place empty. Uh-uh, no matter what the hour, there is always someone watching TV, studying or sleeping on the couches. Are they really comfortable? No, but like us Collegianites, some people just can't leave this place.

No piece on the Campus Center is complete without mention of the Hatch. The Hatch isn't really part of the Student Union because it connects the two buildings, so it merits mention. What would life be like without Comedy Night, or the Jeff Holmes Big Band? More importantly, what would life be like without dollar drafts? In moderation, of course.

When I signed my soul over to the Collegian, I told myself I would spend as little time there as possible. It looked like a nice hobby for my spare time, and good resume material. But now I live here, eat here, study here and on rare occasion sleep here.

Know what the strangest part is? I actually like it.

Egg tossing and pumpkin-smashing not much fun

Yes, it's that time of year again. The one holiday which we, as college students, have never forgotten, Halloween. I, unlike most of my peers throughout childhood, have always hated this holiday.

I guess I never saw the point in dressing up in a sweaty costume that smelled like the pleather interior of a Pinto and running around the neighborhood begging parents for candy.

Todd Kane

Let's talk about that candy now. It always seemed to me that my house was the only one on the block that gave out respectable yummies. I always dreaded the house that was giving out "Smarties" or "Dum-dums." There was also one stupid individual who gave out popcorn balls which were almost always guaranteed to fail the "Mom inspection" at the end of the night.

"Egging" houses always seemed to me to be the best way to spend an evening. Ruining the house of your neighbor was always something my parents stressed to me as one biggest character-builders in life. What could be more barbaric than a bunch of pre-teens out on a rampage armed with dozens of eggs stolen from the local Stop & Shop?

Assuming that the point of Halloween was a chance for little kids to go out and collect candy from neighbors, I feel that anyone over the age of thirteen should not be allowed out of the house. I mean seriously, how many of you who went out after this age had candy on your minds. That's right, none. You wanted to egg some poor nerd's house on the assumption that this person's "nerditude" was a fault of his parents.

Revenge was another prime motivator for eggings. Like that jerk Timmy who stole your baseball mitt, his house was screeching for an egging! Or how about that weird family down the road who used to turn out all the lights and refused to recognize the holiday? When I think about all the things I used to do on Halloween merely due to peer pressure, I cower and repent. You see, a twelve year old knows that if he doesn't go along with "the gang," he and his house will be victims of their wrath.

So, if any of you can relate to what I'm saying, then why does Halloween continue to be such a popular holiday? I guess for college students, Halloween is just another excuse to go out and get drunk in disguise.

Ah, yes, the Halloween party, another part of this holiday full of concepts which I don't understand.

Who invented "bobbing for apples?" This individual must have been intoxicated. Gee, there's nothing I'd rather do than slam my face into a tub of ice water in an attempt to gather up an apple between my teeth. No wonder this country is in turmoil, our leaders are all ex-apple-bobbers!

I always enjoyed carving Jack O'Lanterns. I liked to sit down and create horrible faces and always took my time cutting carefully. Of course, then I would get dragged out by my buddies on a mission to smash everyone else's creations. What a grisly, loathsome holiday.

It was never even any fun getting ready to go out because Mom and Dad would always be reminding you of the sick people in the world in hopes that you would heed their advice and not eat any of your candy until they had a chance to look at it. One time I went out alone when I was about nine years old and had the experience which warped my view of Halloween forever.

We had just moved to Port St. Lucie, Florida and I was convinced that I was familiar with the area — I was wrong. I set out in my pirate costume with a flashlight and my phone number which my parents insisted that I carry "just in case." I wanted to prove to them that I was a big boy by having a successful, solo Halloween journey.

It was about ten minutes before I got completely lost. My breathing got heavier and shot back into my face due to my tight mask. It wasn't long before the inside of my mask was totally soaked from condensation which smelled like the Snickers bars I had eaten earlier that evening.

Weeping, I went to a house and called my father. I gave him the address and asked him to come pick me up. I was five houses down from my house. What a loser I was! There I was in the front seat of the car with my father laughing at me. I'm probably the only person in history to get lost a hundred yards from their own house.

So, for those of you who plan on going out tonight, have a good time. I'll be sitting in my apartment with all the lights out refusing to recognize the holiday. I would rather watch Thursday night FOX-TV than participate in a holiday which I have always hated. I wish the Grinch would have stolen Halloween!

A brief note on the editorial policy —

Just a quick reminder to all interested in submitting stuff for publication on the editorial page:

If you want us to look at it, type it (double-spaced). We'd really really appreciate it.

If you would like it printed keep your letter under fifty lines — if you write anything longer, we may print it but we'll chop out a plethora of your work and you'll have just wasted extra effort.

If you would like to submit cartoons, use black or blue felt-tip pens — ballpoint doesn't look as good. Please draw on an 8 1/2 by 11 inch sheet of white typing paper too.

Submissions should be brought to the Collegian in the Campus Center catacombs . . . follow the scent of copy fluid and espresso. We'd like to hear from you.

It takes both sides to end racism

The article entitled, "Sister, Sister, I feel good about you," [Collegian, October 29] contained some thoughts that concerned me. Hence this response to a few of those ideas.

First of all, I am not Black, nor do I claim to be an expert on the plight of the Black man in a White-dominated society. I agree that Black men and women are wrongly discriminated against in many ways every day in this country. I do not agree however that this "White man's world" is, in Jeff Lawrence's words, "on a constant mission to destroy my race." By using mass generalizations you denominate me and everyone associated with this University a racist. Contrary to what you may believe, my being White does not preclude me from the problems that you seem to think only concern Blacks.

In the article you ask if I, as the reader, can relate. I suppose, based on the difference in our cultures as well as living inside of different colored skin, the answer would have to be no. But the very same question could be asked of you: can you relate? Can you relate to the fact that there are White people who are ashamed of the color of their skin for the atrocities that have happened in the past and continue to occur? It is not easy to associate yourself as a White person when there are people like David Duke getting air time on the national news every night.

The idea that we, as people of different race and culture, cannot relate to one another is the fundamental problem. In your article you state, "Black is the only life that I know, and the only life that I want to know." That thinking can only further the void between us. The goal is EQUALITY, and that can only come about by closing the gap. By me attempting to truly understand, to the extent that I am able, your views and and needs and for you to do the same takes cooperation, not isolation.

The article did have many good points, and I do not intend to direct my "personal dysfunctions" to your character. There certainly are many things that need to be changed in our society, and racial attitudes is on the top of that list. But it is far too easy, and counterproductive for everyone, if you allow ignorant people to make you a racist in reaction to their racism! There needs to be drastic alterations made in the very fibres of our beliefs and values. Things must change, for Black and White people alike. And speaking for myself, I believe we can be of help to each other in the process. Not as a Black or a White person, but as a Human Being.

Men should help defend clinics

This Saturday, reproductive rights organizers will be defending three clinics in Boston and Brookline. Operation Rescue is planning major blockades to try to prevent women's access to abortion clinics as part of an escalating effort to deny women, especially those who cannot afford private medical care, the right to choose. The clinic defense has been initiated by the National Organization for Women and other women's groups.

Operation Rescue is only one manifestation of a comprehensive attempt by men to maintain control of women's lives and suppress freedoms that women have already won for themselves. Over the last decade, the Reagan-Bush administration has made a consistent attack on these freedoms, evidenced by their Supreme Court nominees, Clarence Thomas being the most recent example.

Men, as a whole, seem to perceive the reproductive rights issue as a women's struggle. However, we feel it is necessary for men to resist our own and each other's attempts to control women's bodies and lives. Any men who are interested in participating in the defense of the clinics in Boston on Saturday and/or organizing against sexism in the future, please come to the Graduate Student Lounge at 3:30 on Friday, November 1.

tensions. One Israeli delegate said she tried to shake the hand of a Lebanese negotiator, but was snubbed. Other than that, handshakes were simply avoided.

By their presence, Bush and Gorbachev lent their influence and prestige to the talks, the first since a 1973 parley in Geneva collapsed in a day.

Ahead lay months or years of delicate talks designed to move ancient foes away from the brink of war. "Peace will only come as a result of direct negotiations. Compromise. Give and take," said Bush.

He laid out a timetable for an Israeli-Palestinian settlement, urging a completion of terms for limited self-rule on the West Bank and in Gaza in a year's time.

Trying to coax the two sides to take chances, Bush assured them that subsequent negotiation on a permanent settlement would be "determined on their own merits." The apparent U.S. message was that an interim arrangement could be experimental and not binding on the final situation.

Gorbachev said success was only possible if no one side sought victory over another. All must seek a "shared victory," he said.

Hanan Ashrawi, the Palestinian spokeswoman, welcomed "the conciliatory nature" of Bush's speech opening the conference. It reflected a U.S. policy of "take it one step at a time," she said after delegates broke for lunch.

However Mrs. Ashrawi and fellow Palestinian leader Faisal Husseini expressed disappointment that Bush did not come out firmly for Israeli withdrawal from the occupied lands and recognition of Palestinian national rights.

Yossi Ben Aharon, a top aide to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, praised Bush's "balanced, positive" approach, and expressed satisfaction that Bush called for "territorial compromise," rather than a land-for-peace formula.

The distinction being drawn by the Israelis was not immediately clear. "Territorial compromise" could mean the land must be shared, whereas "land for peace" is read by many Israelis as suggesting they should give up all the occupied lands.

■ homophobia

Felice Yeskel, director of the Program for Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Concerns, said homophobia in the residence halls is "an ongoing concern, an ongoing struggle" but added it will never totally disappear from the campus.

And the situation is getting worse, Yeskel said. "Research trends show that students arrive at the University with increasingly homophobic attitudes," she said.

Trystan Skeigh, the Collegian's Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Issues editor and a senior journalism student, said gay, lesbian and bisexual students need their own floor to guarantee their personal safety.

"Every gay and lesbian student who lives on a floor with hatred suffers in pain," Skeigh said. "Gays and lesbians don't feel safe here. They need a home."

Jason McDonald, a sophmore undecided major, said he received numerous death threats all last year from a student on his floor. Although he requested a single on another floor, he was denied the request and assigned to live with a roommate who was "extremely homophobic."

"I don't feel safe living on this campus," McDonald said. "I have received a great deal of harassment — death threats, knocks at 3:00 a.m., face to face confrontations." He said the harassment continues today.

Sean Sullivan, a sophomore inquiry program major and a resident assistant in Cashin House, said Housing Services must implement improved security procedures and stricter policies for dealing with students who harass others.

"There's too much patience for students who don't understand," Sullivan said. "I think the University has to realize that Speaker's Bureaus are wonderful but they're not enough."

He said when he left his floor for a week for personal reasons, he returned to discover incidents of vandalism on his floor. "The students couldn't deal with having a gay RA," he said.

Dan Hagan, a detective in the University Civil Disorders Unit, said many instances of homophobic threats are criminal acts and the perpetrators can be prosecuted.

"When someone can be identified, we'll be glad to help investigate," Hagan said.

Students and officials also brainstormed and produced ideas to deal with homophobia and other hate crimes in the residence halls. Some of the major ideas:

- A mandatory course for all students to deal with issues of racism, sexism, homophobia, anti-semitism, etc. This "Civility 101" idea was recommended by the Hearst report in the wake of the Southwest riots of 1986. It has never been implemented.
- Improved judicial procedures to swiftly prosecutes perpetrators of hate crimes.
- Improved training of all Housing staff, especially resident assistants.
- University-wide posting of the harassment policy.
- A specific floor to offer GLB students safe housing.
- On-going drop-in GLB support groups in residence halls.
- Homophobia sensitivity training for campus police.

equivalent to the lead campus in other major state university systems."

Gordon said the idea of a flagship connotes "the major university in a state." The UMass-Amherst campus is trying to "carve out a mission as flagship — as the comprehensive university of the state," Gordon said.

Aitken, an economist who has held numerous positions at the University since he began as an instructor of economics in 1964, said he feels he has a "record of caring for the student experience."

Aitken pointed to the work he has done in revamping the registration process in the economics department, his work in studying student satisfaction and retention at the University, his work in administering the University's General Education program and his role in starting the University's Center for Teaching as examples of his "record of getting things done and filling the needs of students."

"[The University's] future is threatened if we don't take action," Aitken said. "We haven't gotten the message out to the state about how good we are."

Gehlbach, dean of the school of Public Health since 1989, said he would bring a "more sensitive, consensus-style type of leadership" to the position of provost.

This style could help to bring many of the various groups on campus together on a variety of issues, Gehlbach said.

Associate Vice Chancellor for Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Frederick Tillis, chairperson of the search committee, said the committee hopes to interview each candidate either next Friday or the Friday after. The committee will then issue a recommendation to the chancellor, Tillis said.

"The current president calls himself a 'man of peace and dialgue,' but the people perceive of him as an assassin," Quiej said.

Organizations like the URNG (Unity for National Revolution in Guatemala) have taken up armed struggle, Quiej said. "The government claims to engage in dialogue, while actually the kidnappings and assassinations continue."

The United States sends military and economic aid to the Guatemalan government, and so does Israel, Quiej said.

Quiej also called upon Guatemalans and other Latin Americans in the United States to support the struggle of the displaced people.

Oct. 31, at 4 pm, Quiej will speak in Seelye Hall at Smith College.

Ms. co-founder speaks

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

In 1972 Letty Cottin Pogrebin, founder of MS. magazine, stood firmly under the label of 'WOMAN,' in 1980, under 'JEW,' now she hopes that the two terms do not necessitate a choice.

On Tuesday night in the informal luxury of Amherst College, Letty Cottin Pogrebin took some 90 listeners through "The Journey of a Jewish Feminist," personal and universal dichotomies, finally arriving at her position today, complete as a Jewish feminist.

Pogrebin described her "spiritual journey" as circular, first abandoning Judaism for feminism and then questioning the feminist movement with regard to her faith, finally a reconciliation.

Her original dichotomy, in her eyes, were the opposing forces of her mother, "mystical and emotional," and her father, "a rational scholar." Her mother: divorced, superstitious, ashamed. Her father: superior, intangible. And herself in the middle.

Pogrebin told how the death of her mother caused her to abandon Judaism. "I turned my back on my people," she said. Pogrebin said her estrangment from Judaism was a direct result of the exclusion of women from the traditional Jewish mourning ceremony.

A ten-strong 'mignon' is required, nine were present, Pogrebin told her father "You can count me." Her father gave the usual position of an orthodox Jew: "You know it is forbidden."

A "spiritual crisis" ensued, for 13 years Pogrebin separated herself from any form of organized Judaism, unable to reconcile the "illogic, injustice and cruelty" of being excluded from the religious rite.

Although feminism was not a recognized force in 1955, at the time of her mother's death, Pogrebin said she now sees that her decision was a direct result of the exclusion of women, and thus a feminist decision.

Pogrebin also attributed her return to the Judaic faith to feminism: Justice for Women, "those who can do and will, should be acknowledged."

In 1978, a small informal Jewish community was without a preacher, "something came over me," Pogrebin said. "They accepted me as a leader of prayer because they had no choice." Perhaps an ironic reflection of her reasons thirteen years earlier for originally abandoning the faith, exclusion from her mother's mourning ceremony leaving her with no choice.

Pogrebin described the reaffirmation of her faith as "re-invented Judaism through feminism". A double journey representing Pogrebin's personal quest for a traditional Jewish community with egalitarian values, she feels that she has found her "spiritual home."

Now however, Pogrebin told how her struggle is by no means over, describing it as external, rather than internal. Contrary to her original belief that the feminist movement broke boundaries of race, creed and class, she described anti-semitism within the movement as "stunning." In 1975 a women's meeting in Mexico city was hijacked, by an extreme anti-semitic group, Pogrebin told how this provoked her first action as a political jew.

Pogrebin summed up her position as a see-saw, her personal dichotomy expressed in her decision to fight for feminism in Judaism, or for Judaism in Feminism, she concludes that she fights at whichever end is threatened.

Pogrebin's autobiography, published earlier this year, Deborah, Gilda and me: Being female and Jewish in America shows in depth her efforts to live in synthesis with her political and spiritual beliefs, the complicated balancing of what seem to her to be contrary forces at times.

Health educators discuss women and AIDS

BY MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Correspondent

Gretchen Krull and Deb Edelman from Health Education at University Health Services discussed Women and STD's and AIDS, attitudes and realities, at Wednesday's Brown Bag Lunch.

Krull lead the discussion with an overview distinguishing AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrom) from HIV (human immunal deficiency virus). HIV is the transmitted virus and AIDS is the condition that is diagnosed.

She went on to discuss the fact that numerous women with HIV have died without having been diagnosed as having AIDS. The Center for Disease Control had defined AIDS by studying gay men. What came to be known as AIDS therefore often does not apply to women.

For example, women have died of pelvic inflammatory disease, but as that was not one of the diseases that had been documented in the AIDS cases that inflicted the men, the women were not said to have died of AIDS. Because women are not diagnosed as having AIDS, they are not able to receive the social security and disability benefits that AIDS patients do.

The Center for Disease Control is responsible for setting the limits for diagnosis of AIDS. The reason women have been dying before they are even diagnosed as having AIDS is because only certain diseases are diagnosed as AIDS related diseases. Pelvic inflammatory disease, for example, is not one of them. Because of this seriously discrepancy CDC is changing the way in which they diagnose AIDS this January.

In the body there are cells called T-4 cells. These cells act as messengers. When a germ enters the body the T-4 cells call out other cells to deal with the germ. The AIDS virus attacks the T-4 cells, thus the body cannot defend itself against incoming germs. CDC has decided that AIDS will be diagnosed on the number of T-4 cells in the body. If the number of T-4 cells is lower than 200, then the person has AIDS. In this way they will be able to detect the presence of the disease through examining a biology that everyone has, not just men or adults.

Krull also discussed the many standards for women, and how the first clinical experiences of gay men have set the path and created many myths about AIDS. "People think AIDS is a gay disease. AIDS is a virus. Anyone can get HIV by engaging in risky behavior." Risky behavior includes any swapping of bodily fluids, even heterosexual swapping.

A fact sheet handed out during the discussion mentioned a few statistics. Only 7 percent of the participants of the clinical trials on AZT were women? Also, the Center for Disease Control refuses to collect data on lesbians and HIV disease. Women die three times faster than men after being diagnosed with AIDS, and women are twice as likely to be misdiagnosed in a test for HIV than men. These and other statistics were complied by the Work Group on Women and AIDS).

Edelman discussed various STD's. She discussed how HPV is the leading disease on campus. She also discussed the prevalent myth "I'm not going to get a disease." She talked about the reality that many people do have diseases and aren't aware of it because many diseases offer no symptoms. She discussed birth control and how "the pill doesn't take care of everything." She also talked about how condoms used with spermicide are not 100% effective. "They must be used correctly."

Krull concluded the discussion with four socio-cultural standards put upon women: The standard that women must be romantic, the procreative standard, the coital standard, and the standard that everything must be private, quiet, and serious. She discussed how "many women feel they must live up to these standards, or we're deviating." She described how "women need to take a positive approach to feel better about sexuality, and to combat standards and social norms.

Krull also mentioned the Not Ready for Bedtime Players, a group of UMass students that performs both humorous and serious skits about AIDS, STDs and other issues of sexuality. The next performance will be held November 6th in the Greenough basement.

For confidential HIV testing or STD counceling call the Health Education department. (549-2671)

The next Brown Bag Lunch will feature Conditioned Aspirations and Gender/Race/Class Relations in Colonial Zimbabwe, and will be hosted by Helen Page from the Anthropology department.

Second in series of interviews with local woman Rabbis

By HOPE SISITSKY
Collegian Correspondent

"If I had known [about women being rabbis] when I was younger, I would have become a rabbi a long time ago," said Rabbi Sheila Weinberg, Rabbi of the Jewish Community of Amherst. She was 36 years old when she enrolled at the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College in Pennsylvania. At this time, Rabbi Weinberg was the mother of two teenagers and very eager to begin her rabbinical studies. "We all studied together," she said, "They were extremely supportive."

Growing up in the Bronx in a Conservative family, Rabbi Weinberg discovered that women were permitted to be rabbis when she was 29 years old. She immediately knew that this was what she wanted to do. "Judaism was always a great interest of mine," Rabbi Weinberg said.

She received her Bachelor of Arts in teaching history at City College in New York and her Masters at the Teacher College at Columbia University. At this time, the sixties, women were not allowed to enter rabbinical schools. So Rabbi Weinberg joined the Peace Corps and went to Chile for two years. After returning, she made aliyah and worked at Hebrew University for two years. "It was during the '73 war. It was a very difficult time," Rabbi Weinberg stated.

Upon returning to the United States, Rabbi Weinberg worked as Hillel Program Director to colleges in Pennsylvania. In 1982, she was accepted to the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College in Philadelphia. While in school, Rabbi Weinberg led a conservative congregation part time and continued with them full time for three years after she graduated.

Rabbi Weinberg came to Amherst in 1989 when she was asked to be the rabbi at the Jewish Community of Amherst Synagogue. As their first full-time rabbi, Rabbi Weinberg was very excited, and she still is, two years later. "I love the people," she said, "I really do. Being with them during very significant times in their lives is a privilege."

When asked about the difficult side of being a rabbi, Rabbi Weinberg answered, "There is no vacation from being a rabbi. People have struggles around Judaism and they tend to put them on the rabbi. It's hard not to have all the answers."

As a women, Rabbi Weinberg sees her role as a challenge. "It's very new . . . we are total pioneers," she said. One of the reasons she chose to be ordained in the Reconstructionist movement is because it is very open to the feminism. "It adapts [new philosophies], works with them, and holds them. It is highly democratic," the Rabbi said about Reconstructionism. She also described it as "looking at Judaism as an evolving civilization."

Weinberg commented that Jews are living in two different civilizations, and Reconstructionism tries to combine the two. "We take tradition very seriously and are very people-oriented, as all Judaism is. The Reconstructionist Movement is not simply a religion. . . it emphasizes art, peoplehood, and a strong connection to Israel." About herself and her career, Rabbi Weinberg stated, "I found something that is very suitable for me. I am very passionate about what I do."

Feds to boost economy

By JOHN D. McCLAIN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve today let a key interest rate fall in an action that was interpreted by many economists as a new move on the part of the central bank to bolster a sagging economy.

The action was seen by many analysts as a signal that the Fed has pushed the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other for overnight loans, down from 5.25 percent to 5 percent.

If they are correct in that interpretation, it would mark the 12th time the central bank has lowered this rate since the recession began in July 1990.

The Fed influences the funds rate level by adding or draining reserves from the banking system. Today, with the funds rate trading at 5 percent, the Fed failed to drain money out of the system, an operation it would normally conduct if it wanted to push the rate higher.

David Jones, an economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., said he believed the Feb had eased.

"The Fed just let the funds rate drop to 5 percent without trying to stop it by draining reserves," Jones said.

The Fed does not announce changes in its target range for the federal funds rate and some economists said it may take a few days to be certain of the Fed's intentions.

The last time the central bank cut the funds rate was on Sept. 13, when it reduced it from 5.5 percent to 5.25 percent. That credit easing was accompanied by a one-half percentage point drop in the discount rate, the interest the Fed charges to make loans to commercial banks.

Weld administration defends prison program

BOSTON (AP) — Weld administration officials defended a program Wednesday that allows inmates convicted of serious crimes to participate in work-release programs at the Statehouse, other public buildings and schools.

The Boston Globe reported that murderers, rapists, armed robbers, drug dealers, arsonists and kidnappers are among the 800 to 1000 inmates participating in the program.

Convicts have been released during the day from county and state prisons to work on crews fixing public buildings, including the Statehouse, town halls and schools, and cleaning highways under the program.

The Corrections Department said all the inmates on work release have moved through the system to minimum security prisons and many are nearing the end of their sentences. The program, officials said, is part of the department's efforts to reintegrate inmates into society before their release from prison or jail.

Inmates service sentences for violent offenses have worked since January at the Statehouse, where each eight-man crews supervised by two unarmed correction officers.

The Globe said that after it asked for inmate records, state Department of Correction officials said it was an error to include sex offenders in the work crews and that has been discontinued.

One convict on a work crew was serving a sentence for having escaped while on furlough, the Globe said.

Republicans attacked Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, when he was the Democratic candidate for president in 1988, on the furlough issue with television advertisements about Willie Horton, a convicted murder charged with assaulting a woman while on furlough.

Last year, Weld accused the former Dukakis administration of coddling inmates.

Weld once said he was "to the right of Attila the Hun" on crime issues and wanted to introduce prisoners to the "joys of busting rock." He once advocated taking away their television sets.

David Balfour, state building superintendent, said the inmates are glad to get out and into a work environment.

"It beats sitting around jail all day. I think they enjoy it," he said.

Department of Correction spokeswoman Robin Bavaro said the department hopes to have written guidelines on screening inmates for work crews soon.

She said unwritten guidelines require such inmates to be at minimum security facilities and to show "positive behavior and positive institutional adjustment."

"We've never had an incident. It has been a very positive program," she said.

The department said the inmates have won written letters of praise from private citizens, public officials and clergy for work they have done on work-release projects.

"The governor has believed that inmates should be forced to work rather than be allowed to sit around watching television. This policy is consistent with that view," said Weld's press secretary, Ray Howell.

THE RED HOT CHILI PEPPERS

THIS WEEKEND

By TODD BOURRET
Collegian Correspondant

The Red Hot Chili Peppers have had a very rough ride to the top. In fact, when you think about it, it's a minor miracle that they have lasted long enough to headline the Springfield Civic Center this Sunday.

Always living on the edge, the Chili Peppers excessive and increasingly popular party machine came to a sobering halt a few years back when guitarist extrodinaire Hillel Slovak was lost to drugs.

Drummer Jack Irons left the group shortly after the tragedy, and it seemed doubtful that the uplifting funk-punk of the Chili Peppers would be heard again.

But singer Anthony Kiedis and bassman Flea just wouldn't let such a good thing die prematurely. After a steady succession of sit-in guitarists and drummers, Flea and Anthony finally settled on six-string wonderboy John Fruciante and drummer Chad Smith.

Against all the forces of nature, the revamped lineup recorded their most wildly successful album of their career, 1989's Mother's Milk. The Peppers quickly became MTV's alternative darlings, garnishing substantial airplay with videos for "Knock Me Down" and "Higher Ground". A big tour followed, propelling the band to new heights of funkness. Hell, they even did a commercial for Nike Air and collaborated with none other than the great Young MC.

Don't think the Chili Peppers have gone soft. Both Mother's Milk and Blood, Sugar, Sex, Magik overflow with the same positive, soulful, sexual, aggressive vibes that made them the kings (and the inventors) of the L.A. funk-metal scene.

To see the Red Hot Chili Peppers live is quite an experience. If it's your first time, be prepared for a full-fledged assault of high energy music and obnoxiousness. On a good night, they'll usually get naked. Or, if you're super lucky, they'll come onstage in their "socks" (I won't go any further, it might spoil the surprise). In any case, Anthony will be bouncing off the walls, Flea will insult you in between songs, the music will be wonderful, and you will come home with a huge smile on your face.

Opening up for the Red Hot Chili Peppers will be Chicago's Smashing Pumpkins. You were lucky if you saw them play at the Iron Horse this summer, because these guys are getting big and probably won't play venues that small again in a little while.

Their debut LP Gish is doing great, and it rules. The Smashing Pumpkins combine heavy, grungey songs with mellower, folky stuff. The heavy songs manage to remain incredibly catchy, and you'll find yourself humming along to everything else, too. I haven't seen the Pumpkins live, but if their album is any indication, they are definitely well worth catching.

Seattle's Pearl Jam will be starting the whole show off. Pearl Jam is somewhat of a Seattle supergroup, featuring members of the legendary Mother Love Bone and Green River. They're pretty new on the scene, their credentials are pretty impressive, and Pearl Jam has been receiving a fair amount of positive reactions.

My advice is to get to the Civic Center early, so as not to miss Pearl Jam and Smashing Pumpkins. Save your energy, though. You'll need it for the Red Hot Chili Peppers. See ya Sunday.

Red Hot Chili Peppers with openers Pearl Jam and Smashing Pumpkins, will play at the Srpingfield Civic Center on Sunday. The show starts 7:30 p.m.

Opening band disappear fear not scary

By DANA L. FORRAR
Collegian Correspondent

Last Saturday began like a lot of others did. I waited for my mother, cleaned my room, hoped that what I had planned was good enough. We arrived at the Iron Horse at 6:30 p.m. to see the band disappear fear open for Blood Oranges.

With low expectations and high anticipation, I watched the 7 p.m. show time come and go, waiting until the sisters Sonia and Cindy took the stage around 8 p.m. It was worth the wait.

While Sonia picked and sang, Cindy harmonized through their first tune, "Deep Soul Diver". The first thing that came to me was, is this the Indigo Girls incognito? The song finished with the bassist and drummer stepping in for the last three chords. The women took the stage like MacArthur did the islands. They jumped right into their next song, picking up the tempo, the drummer ripping it up with an off beat rythym, directing the band to their highs and lows. Sonia broke her g-string (the one on her guitar) midway through the song, losing the acoustic sound but bounced back well.

Cindy told the audience their cross country adventures over the last month while Sonia picked out an electric guitar, dropping the Indigo Girls for the night. What she picked up was a harder-edged Melissa Etheridge style, with their own folk roots underlying it all.

My mind boggled when already multi-talented Sonia grabbed a harmonica, strumming chords and alternating lines with her sister. It was somewhere along here that my date said she was buying the tape and I though of writing their review. Sonia's voice was like of Natalie Merchant of the 10,000 Maniacs, Cindy was like a prize out of an Arabian basket, dancing and harmonizing with whatever the band was playing, and disappear fear pulled off one of those few opening band coups. Fear was simply having fun, and so was the audience.

They ended their set with a Spanish tempo song, complete with tambourine, call Te Quiero (I love you). When they left there was an emptiness, but I was happily surprised to see the sisters return to the stage for an encore, a beautiful song called Box of Tissues. The song again brought back the Indigo Girls undercover theme, a song similar to their Kid Fears, slow guitar chords with escalating harmony.

The bassist and drummer came on to finish with a peaking Echo My Call, a fluid combination of Debbie's drums and Cindy's pitch, even the lyrics picking up where others may have been lacking, however slightly.

And then it was over, and all I could think of was when they might be playing again. (Nov. 16 at the Tam for those of you willing to try something new and wonderful. I'll be there!"

Lots of local music

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

Halloween has always been a busy night in clubland, hence one of the best nights of the year for local bands to hook up with lucrative gigs, earn some dough, and get some exposure with late night revelers. This year is no exception, as most of the local venues are carrying Halloween festivities into the weekend and some of the best of the local working bands are plugged in tonight. So the message here is get into your costumes this evening, bring along a designated driver, and go party.

Jabberwocky

You can start over in Noho tonight where flagship club Pearl Street is featuring world beat dance favorites Who's Kiddin' Who in their newly expanded downstairs. Pearl Street has always had one of the best Halloween parties around, and they will be offering a $200 cash prize for best costume this year along with gift certificates to some of the best restaurants in Noho. Who's Kiddin' Who have recently expanded their horn section and they are taking a break from recording sessions to play what has become an annual Halloween show for them at Pearl Street.

Sheehan's Cafe in Noho features the alive and kicking Free Press tonight at 10 p.m., and costumes are definitely in order for this one. Free Press are a fixture on the Valley scene, and aside from their appearances in almost every live music room around, they are also well known for their involvement in political causes. The cover is reasonable and frontman Rob Skelton is always unpredictable and electrifying.

Extremos, the mysterious floating nightclub, is having their annual Halloween Ball tonight at the North Star Seafood Bar on West Street in Northampton. Featured will be Angry Johnny and the Killbillies and house DJ Hit and Run, as well as a floor show featuring Sister Angel and the Order of the Immaculate Deception. There will be costume prizes for the closest to naked, least human, and most incomprehensible.

Bark Like a Dog bring their blues rock to Twisters Tavern tonight for a Halloween bash being co-sponsored by Budweiser. There will be plenty of prize giveaways so get there early and avoid the line.

Bongos to Circus, a popular UMass band, are over at the Hadley Pub on Route 9 tonight. Come in costume and only pay a buck at a door.

Rippopotmus will kick out the jams and scare up some funk at the Hatch tonight.

Jazz this weekend: see it, read about it

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Staff

Coming up in the Valley are two shows that you might want to check out. On Thursday, Nov. 7, the Kenny Kirkland Quintet will be in performance at the Iron Horse. Kenny Kirkland's recent release, a self-entitled endeavor on the GRP label, indicates a fresh lyrical sense, and a wealth of potential.

Jazz Scene

The album features cuts by Kirkland, as well as some standards. Both Jeff "Tain" Watts and Branford Marsalis can be found lending support to Kirkland's work. The quintet which will be at the Horse features a lineup of established side players, who are all also leaders in their own right.

"Tain" Watts, whom Max Roach has called the best young drummer on the scene, will lead the rythym section that also boasts young Charnett Moffett on bass violin. Percussionist Don Elias (best known for his work with Carla Bley) and Kenny Garrett on saxophone will round out the group. Kirkland works regularly with all these players, and one should especially keep an eye on how Moffett, Watts and Kirkland work together.

A week after Kirkland, comes the Benny Green Trio, with Carl Allen on drums and young Chris McBride on bass. Both Green and Allen are fine players with well documented histories, but McBride is just getting started. McBride has played and recorded with trumpeter Wallace Roney, displaying a style that has smatterings of Reggie Workman and Jimmy Garrison, as well as a well formulated voice of his own.

In this particular trio, McBride should really shine. Call the Iron Horse at 584-0610 for tix and more info on both of these shows.

The Terence Blanchard Quartet and the Tony Williams Quintet will be coming to the area in late November.

Every Monday night in the Hatch here on Campus, Music Professor and trumpeter Jeff Holmes leads his Jazz Lab Ensemble. The Ensemble is the UMass student group, and touts a strong history of award-winning performances at student expositions. The performances are free, and are an perfect way to get introduced to the music.

Lawyer and author Paul Chevigny will be in Amherst on Nov. 16 at Albion books to promote his latest work, Gigs: Jazz and the Cabaret Laws in New York City, from Routledge Press. Chevigny argued and won the case the musicians union in New York brought against the City. The suit argued against laws which were badly limiting Constitutional rights of free expression by the artists.

One example was the three musician rule, which only allowed trios or less to take the bandstand at one time, unless in an area zoned for larger groups. The laws were on the books from 1926, and were supported by claims that "jazz" music encouraged the congregation of "undesirable elements", and facilitated criminal activity.

During the 1960s, the Lindsey administration in New York relaxed the enforcement of the laws, but this trend was reversed by the Koch administration that followed. The racism behind the cabaret laws is obvious, and it is a great relief, particularly to the musician's, to have them removed. Now, the music is really flourishing in New York, and the artists are finding it much easier to get good paying gigs. The book itself details the legal and political battle which led up to the court case. It is good, interesting, and fast reading, and effectively relates information which many fans of the music may not have known.

Until next week, keep the music.

Good and evil — two new from Zoo

By LOU COVE
Collegian Correspondent

Two new releases from Zoo Entertainment grace our pages today. Both albums, Blue Train's The Business of Dreams, and The Odds' Neopolitan, have borrowed heavily from common influences, and what they do with those influences, defines the success of their music. Both bands sound a bit like Squeeze; I never thought of Squeeze as being so inspirational myself, but no matter — the key here is that one band rips them off and the other borrows tastefully.

Zoo Entertainment hails Blue Train as "Pure pop for now people." This is how I discovered that I an not a "now person." Blue Train is British synth-puke derivative dribble that should be banished to Star Search forever. They could get it on with Ed McMahon while the test of the world remains free from Duran Duran flashbacks.

The entire album is buoyed by a relentless pulse of lame pre-programmed drum tracks which will beat you into a groggy submission and keep tick-tocking along with the intelligence of a dripping faucet over insipid love lyrics like "a little horizontal exercise is better than a jog in the park." "Stay with me Baby" is painful in this respect. Pure cheese. The first single, "All I Need is You," is no homage to Squeeze, it's plain zerox. Meanwhile, tunes like "Don't ask me why" try in vain to give this disc some effortless energy , but the whole mess is one great effort to listen to, and it makes you ask why WHY?!

The answer may be that every coin has tow sides, a good and a bad, a yin and a yang. Enter: The Odds. Welcome the return of original, intelligent craftsmanship and understated, slick production. It's hard not to like Neopolitan, really. The Odds move gracefully from pretty guitar tunes like "King of the Heap," with its smart, bitter lyrics, "When something's big and beautiful give it time / I'll just make it small and dirty / Just to make it mine," to "No Warning," an edgy, melodic piece that harkens back to The Replacements brilliant Let it Be era, replete with a dreamy bridge that breaks apart in a shaky eruption of guitars.

Yes they sound a bit like Squeeze. There's a Beatles influence here, too, but isn't there one everywhere? The Odds borrow shamelessly, but they forge their own package, and it's one that moves forward, not back. Case in point: the brutal lyrics sung over a hush of acoustic guitar and a shimmering layer of cymbals, "She was down and crying / as he punched her in the mouth/ her fingers white with prying.

It's that kind of contrast between form and content, also evident in "Family Tree," a slamming tune about one man's impact on the environment, that keeps your wheels turning and your toes a 'tappin'.

Also of interest: "Wendy Under the Stars," a provocative little number about doing the nasty on the night that Elvis died. Too bad it won't get any airplay. "Truth or Dare" brings back Rubber Soul memories and singer/guitarist Craig Northey's mom plays violin to boot. Sweet, ain't it? And "Love is the Subject," (the first single) is upbeat, nicely syncopated, and should make a friendly radio introduction for the Odds rich blend of folk, pop, and tight, sharp rock and roll.

Celebrity murderer jailed

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The obsessed fan who stalked "My Sister Sam" actress Rebecca Schaeffer and shot her to death on her doorstep was convicted of murder after failing to convince a judge he was insane.

Robert Bardo, 21, faces a mandatory sentence of life in prison without parole.

"The defendant is not a normal person. The defendant may even have schizophrenia of some sort," Superior Court Judge Dino Fulgoni, who heard the case without a jury, said on Tuesday in rendering his verdict. "But. . . schizophrenics can lie in wait and can premeditate and can have the intent to kill."

The prosecution claimed that Bardo, of Tucson, Ariz., paid a detective $300 to find Schaeffer's address, got his brother to buy him a gun, took a bus to California and waited near Schaeffer's apartment in 1989. Finally, he rang the bell and shot the 21-year-old actress in the chest as she answered the door.

Bardo carried an "assassin's kit" in a plastic bag, including a postcard form Schaeffer, the book The Catcher in the Rye and extra bullets, prosecutors said. He was arrested the next day in Tucson.

For two years before he killed her, Bardo sent Schaeffer gifts, flowers and rambling letters and tried to see her at the TV studio where she worked.

As Bardo was led out of the courtroom Tuesday, Schaeffer's mother Danna Schaeffer, shouted: "Have a nice life! Have a good time in jail!"

Bardo did not respond.

Conviction of first-degree murder with the special circumstance of lying in wait carries a penalty of life without parole. Sentencing was set for Nov. 22.

Bardo admitted shooting the actress. But defense attorney Stephen Galindo argued that Bardo was guilty of not more than second-degree murder because he was too mentally ill to have planned the slaying. Galindo said he would appeal.

Deputy District Attorney Marcia Clark said Bardo wanted to gain fame as a celebrity killer.

Winds ravage New England

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

HULL, Mass. — Seas whipped by gale-force winds and swollen by high tides battered New England Wednesday, flooding the shoreline, damaging property and forcing evacuations.

Winds near the shore line gusted to over 50 mph, and wave heights were reported up to 35 feet out at sea and 15 feet at shore.

A Coast Guard helicopter plucked three people from a disabled fishing boat in 30-foot seas 70 miles south of Nantucket, then had to save three Coast Guard crewmen that had been lowered in a small boat in an earlier rescue attempt at the scene.

"The weather is so rough out there, we couldn't pick up our own boat," said Coast Guard spokesman Steve Stanford.

Ferry services were shut down, and shore roads were closed, effectively cutting off peninsular and island communities, including Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard.

Evacuations were reported in low-lying areas of Gloucester, Hull, Revere, and Nantucket. On the peninsula of Hull, students were sent home at about 1 p.m., roads were closed and emergency officials set up shelters for evacuees.

Some said the storm seemed as menacing as Hurricane Bob, which caused an estimated $780 million in damages to insured property along the East Coast when it hit Aug. 19.

"This storm is affecting us worse than Hurricane Bob from beach erosion, because of high tides," said Tony Guthrie, who was managing the Chatham Bars Inn when the storm hit.

The National Weather Service said it was braced for what could be the worst coastal flooding since the Blizzard of 1978.

In Gloucester, part of an ocean-front home on Salt Island Road was heavily damaged and an adjacent garage destroyed. Steve Aiello, a firefighter for the Gloucester fire department, said "breakers were crashing into the living room" of the home.

Power was reduced at the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant in Plymouth as a precaution.

The Coast Guard said some boats were reported washed away in Portland, Maine, but that most vessels heeded early storm warnings, including large 150-foot boats that began lumbering into Portland Harbor on Wednesday.

The early stages of the storm created a windfall for shellfish lovers in some areas. Millions of clams washed onto yards in Revere. And on Martha's Vineyard, 30 to 40 bushels of scallops washed up on the beach near Chappaquiddick. People with family shellfishing permits rushed to the area to collect as many as they could.

In Narragansett, R.I., the Coast Guard's search for a missing fisherman was hampered by high seas. Thanh Ha, 29, was believed to have fallen off a rocky point Tuesday night, Narragansett police dispatcher John DiGiacomo said.

On The Merrill Lynch Fast Track

Interviewing in the AMHERST area on November 21 & 22

Resumes will be accepted through November 8th

Meet Kevin Rendino, Carolyn Jones and Patrice Franco. They participated in the Merrill Lynch Individual Investor Intern/MBA Program and their program experience helped them advance quickly to new professional challenges. Kevin, Carolyn and Patrice will continue to rely on what they learned during the program to help them succeed throughout their Merrill Lynch careers.

The Program can help put you on the Merrill Lynch fast track. As a program participant you are offered a challenging position in one of the Merrill Lynch Individual Investor business units where you work under the guidance of a senior manager. Program positions are available in product development, marketing and finance.

Throughout the program you are exposed to firm strategy through meetings with senior management and you participate in task force projects which help a variety of business units to meet their strategic objectives. Formal classes address career development issues and help you enhance your leadership skills. You are given responsibility and accountability and your program experience will help position you for fast-track success in the Merrill Lynch Individual Investor organization.

Candidates for the Individual Investor Intern/MBA Program have outstanding records of achievement in their academics, extracurricular activities and work experience. They are interested in the challenge of the fast-paced financial services industry and want to be recognized for their accomplishments.

If you have the talent, creativity, energy and commitment to be a winner at Merrill Lynch, the Individual Investor Business Group is offering an unequaled opportunity to excel. To find out more, write us:

Professor denies threatening to kill journalist

BOSTON (AP) — City College Professor Leonard Jefferies Jr. denied Wednesday that he never threatened the life of a Harvard Crimson reporter, and accused the student of making up stories to discredit him.

"It is scurrilous, part of the media conspiracy," Jefferies said in a television interview.

Eliot Morgan, an editor at the Harvard University student newspaper, said Tuesday that Jefferies took his tape recorder and threatened to kill him if he used the quotes about two black scholars from an Oct. 18 interview at City College.

During the two-hour television interview, Morgan said Jefferies called Henry Louis Gates Jr., chairman of Harvard's African-American Studies Department, "a faggot and a punk."

Jefferies also accused Shelby Steele, a professor at San Jose (Calif.) State University and a controversial author, of not having the interests of Blacks at heart because his mother and his wife are white, Morgan said.

Neither Jefferies nor his attorney returned messages left at their offices Tuesday and Wednesday.

But in an interview on WNYW-TV's "Good Day New York," Jefferies denied insulting Gates. "There's no reason for me to call anyone those terms," he said.

He also defended his statements about Steele, saying "Certainly, anyone would have to acknowledge that if your mother is white and if your wife is white, that affects your views. . . No one attacked anything. We just stated what is an analysis."

Jefferies denied taking Morgan's tapes and said he never threatened him. "I have been the one who has been threatened to be killed many times," Jefferies said.

ROCKET FIRED AT EMBASSY — A rocket blasted the wall of the U.S. Embassy compound in Beirut, shown in this 1987 file photo, on Tuesday, the eve of the Arab-Israeli peace conference. There were no reports of injury or serious damage to the building in the Beirut suburb of Aukur, said a Lebanese guard who answered the phone at the embassy.

Orphaned bear cub wanders into hospital and gets new home

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — An orphaned bear cub that wandered into a hospital emergency room and charmed the staff is headed for a new home.

The cub, nicknamed Bartlett by the staff at Bartlett Memorial Hospital, will be flown Thursday to Bear Country USA, a drive-through wild animal park near Rapid City, S.D.

The undernourished, 20-pound black bear cub pushed open the emergency room door and lumbered inside Oct. 19 to the astonishment of patients and the staff. A staff biologist tranquilized the bear and cared for the animal at home.

The hospital adopted the cub as a mascot for children, and an artist will draw a cartoon about the bear's visit for use in cheering up young patients.

"Our people see so much unhappiness in the normal course of taking care of people, something like this catches you unaware and captures your heart," said hospital spokeswoman Anne Schultz.

Jury selection postponed in Kennedy rape case

By DAN SEWELL
Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Jury selection in the William Kennedy Smith rape case was postponed until Thursday as lawyers argued at a closed hearing over how much of his accuser's past will be allowed into evidence.

Circuit Judge Mary Lupo on Tuesday scheduled more arguments for today on the issue and on other matters, including a defense request that no TV coverage of jury selection be allowed. Jury selection had been scheduled for today.

Defense attorney Roy Black said TV coverage would make jury selection in the highly publicized case even more difficult by making potential jurors uncomfortable about speaking freely.

Potential jurors in a rape case are normally questioned about any past experiences with sex crimes.

On Tuesday, Smith's lawyers summoned for questioning a psychiatrist, two rape counselors who worked with the 30-year-old woman who says Smith raped her, an emergency room doctor who examined her, the father of the woman's daughter, and a detective.

Ms. Lupo closed her courtroom for the hearing into what about the woman's past could be used under Florida's "rape shield" laws. Such laws are aimed at protecting sex-crime victims from relentless questioning about their sexual history.

Lawyers for the 31-year-old nephew of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy have suggested the woman is unstable and has a traumatic sexual background that led her to accuse Smith falsely of raping her at the family's palm beach estate March 30.

The judge said the six-member jury will be sequestered. Opening arguments are set for Dec. 2.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A new source of financial or career opportunities opens up. This could involve people at a distance. Keep a watchful eye on the stock market. A missed opportunity will not return.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Visiting a faraway locale always seems to have a refreshing effect on you. Fortunate circumstances prevail in business and romance. You may be able to mix the two if you take the initiative.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Domestic tensions will increase if you are not entirely open about a business or career matter. Share your innermost thoughts with loved one. Recognize what is really important for your happiness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Patience is vital now. Control your irritation at delays and look for a short-term solution. Your financial assets will increase in the near future. Tell the whole truth to your loved ones.

LEO (July 32-Aug. 22): Handle paperwork promptly and you will be prepared for an emergency. Your intuition is accurate in most areas, but not where romance is concerned. Take things nice and easy in a new relationship.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use your storehouse of knowledge today but be careful who you share it with. Memories surround you. Do not let the past stand in the way of progress. Forge ahead with confidence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Weigh a financial choice very carefully. Differences of opinion need not spoil a promising relationship. A child or chatty neighbor could interfere with your concentration. Be kind but firm.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You endear yourself to a loved one by offering to make home repairs. Pay more attention to bills and investments. There may be a way to get a better return on your money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The pursuit of love and pleasure dominates today. You have a talent for being in the right place at the right time. Follow up an introduction with a letter.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A wonderful business or romantic alliance is forged. Your partner may have good new to share. Avoid buying too many luxury items. Computer technology could illuminate your path to financial success.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Difficulties in a personal relationship may be resolving themselves. You feel both surprised and relieved. Off-again on-again business talks resume. Be true to your values.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The outlook is excellent for signing on the dotted line. Bank loans, contracts, major purchases or investments — all enjoy favorable influences. Get together with family and friends this coming weekend.

Washington - Houston Super Bowl preview?

Football fans around the world will get the real treat on Sunday rather than on Halloween, when the Houston Oilers (7-1) go to Washington to face the Redskins (8-0). Many people view this week's matchup as a preview to the Super Bowl.

Roy Alexander

Who could ask for better timing? The season is half over and both teams appear to be playing up to their capabilities. After this game many fans will have the answers to their long list of questions.

Come Monday morning everyone will know that the Oilers are simply not designed to win the big games. The only good team they have faced all year is the Chiefs who were struggling at the time. This team is like night and day on the road and has a difficult time winning on grass.

Warren Moon is the most overrated quarterback in the league. His only credit is that he is suited ideally for the offense. The Oilers are packed with four of the best receivers in the league, who are often on the field at the same time. Any NFL quarterback can throw to an open receiver.

Houston must realize that a tight end is vital to beating teams such as the Redskins. Detroit, the other run-and-shoot team, decided at the end of last season to go back to using a tight end and has greatly improved their offense. A key element in winning big games is the ability to keep the ball away from opposing offenses by running the ball.

The Redskins have shown all year long they are up to the challenge by beating Dallas, Chicago and the Giants, all on the road. The Skins will manipulate the run-and-shoot by running and keeping the Houston defense on the field for most of the game.

The Patriot game should be much better than the point spread indicates. Every year the Pats give the Bills a run for their money. Remember last year in Buffalo when the Pats gave them a real scare until Thurman Thomas broke out late in the fourth quarter with an 80-yard touchdown run.

The Pats have played the best teams in the league well all season. Buffalo's defense is pathetic against the run, so Leonard Russell should have a lot of success. The Pats should concentrate on containing the passing game of Jim Kelly and preventing the big play that has become Buffalo's trademark.

Marv Cook has quietly been the best tight end in the AFC. Cook leads the team and all tight ends in the AFC in receptions with 45. Irving Fryar is second on the team with only 35 receptions. There shouldn't be much trouble handling Buffalo's weak pass rush, which will enable New England to operate a short passing game.

Dallas returns home this week to face the Cardinals after a tough loss against Detroit. Earlier this season Emmit Smith and the Cowboys ran all over Phoenix for 181 yards. Smith, however, has failed to gain 100 yards in his last three games. This has largely been due to the success of quarterback Troy Aikman.

Aikman has been rated as the team MVP by the Fort Worth-Star Telegram poll and is one of the up and coming quarterbacks in the NFL. He's thrown for over 300 yards in each of his last two games.

After a strong start, the Cardinals have been incredibly erratic. In fact, disgusting better describes their play over the last four weeks.

This week's picks in CAPS: (H) : Home (H)REDSKINS(-6 1/2) VS Oilers, LIONS(+7) VS (H)Bears, BROWNS(-2 1/2) VS (H)Bengals,(H)VIKINGS(-11 1/2) VS Tampa Bay, PATRIOTS(+17) VS Bills, (H)DALLAS(-9) VS Phoenix, (H)JETS(-7) VS Packers, 49ERS(-5) VS (H)Atlanta, SAINTS(-4) VS (H)Rams, MIAMI(-10) VS (H)Colts, (H)DENVER(-6 1/2) VS Steelers, GIANTS(-4) VS (H)Eagles

Woodside and the Minutewomen have two regular season games remaining, one of those today at 2:30 p.m. on Lower Boyden Field. After that their fate is in the hands of the NCAA Tournament selection committee.

Men's XC in Boston

Providence and BU favored

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team travels to Franklin Park in Boston for the New England Cross Country Championship Meet Friday afternoon. The race will be run on the new cross country course at Franklin Park, which will host the World Cross Country Championships in March.

The Minutemen finished sixth out of 28 teams in the meet last year. UMass coach Ken O'Brien expects a similar finish in this year's meet.

"I would say that we should finish somewhere between fifth and eighth in the meet," O'Brien said.

Providence won the meet last year and would appear to be the favorites again, as they are currently ranked fourth in the NCAA Div. I poll. Boston University, who finished second last year, should pose the greatest challenge to Providence. BU is currently ranked 11th in Div. I.

Some teams who should be battling for the next spots, according to O'Brien, are Connecticut, Boston College, UMass-Lowell, Vermont and the Minutemen. BC and UConn finished third and fourth, respectively, in last years race and should place similarly Friday.

UMass-Lowell could be the surprise in the meet. The Chiefs are ranked No. 1 in the NCAA Div. II poll. They have possibly their best team ever and defeated both BC and UMass at the beginning of the season. They should challenge for a top five place.

"I think our chances for success will relate to how closely our runners can group together in relation to our front man," O'Brien said. "If we can get five runners within 30 seconds of our front man, that would represent our maximum scoring potential."

The return of Craig Cormier should help bolster the Minutemen's depth. He missed the past three weeks of competition with a virus. While O'Brien does not expect him to be 100 percent on Friday, he expects him to be among the top five runners for UMass.

Is Bright's basketball future with UMass?

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Donta Bright, touted by experts as one of the top 10 high school basketball players in the country may be showcasing his talents at the University of Massachusetts next season.

Bright, a senior at Dunbar High School in Baltimore, Maryland averaged 18 points and 19 rebounds per game as a junior.

"He's an outstanding player, he has great skills. . . one of the premier high school players in the country," said ESPN college basketball analyst Dick Vitale. "He'll fit in fine with Louis Roe to make Massachusetts a strong team."

Bright confirmed yesterday he is interested in playing for UMass, but is also considering Seton Hall, Ohio State and Clemson.

Clark Francis, editor of Hoop Scoop, said, "He's going to UMass, it's done and over. The only thing is, he may wait until the Spring to sign."

Bright is taking the SATs on Saturday and if he doesn't score the needed 700 required by the NCAA to participate in college sports, he may go to prep school.

"The big question with Bright is grades," according to Francis. "From UMass' standpoint, he's a great recruit, who could put the program into the Top 20."

Francis described Bright, a 6-foot-6 forward, as a relentless-slasher, who has tremendous athletic ability and a great pair of hands.

"He's a very unselfish superstar," said Van Coleman, Publisher of Future Stars. "He may score 30 points or 10, but the points are usually in a positive stance towards the game. He gets his teammates involved."

Hoop Scoop has Bright listed as a second team All-American, and Street and Smith's has him as one of the top five players in the country.

"I'm not sure if he's top five, but I wouldn't argue if you put him there," Francis said. "He's definitely top 10."

Vitale said, "It also gives [UMass coach John] Calipari great inroads to the Washington, D.C. area."

Bright said, "I know Coach [Bill] Bayno, and he promised me I would get a degree at UMass."

Bright attends Dunbar High School, the same school which has produced such NBA superstars as Reggie Lewis, David Wingate, Reggie Williams and Tyrone Bogues.

"It's a lot of pressure [playing at Dunbar] because of all the great players

Jacobs' goal lifts men's soccer to win

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

Randy Jacobs scored on a direct kick with 2:33 left to give the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team a 1-0 win over Fairfield University.

"I just saw the lower left corner open and shot it low," Jacobs said.

Until Jacobs finally broke the ice, both teams had been frustrated in all their scoring attempts. Nearly every time that either team moved the ball downfield, it couldn't pass the ball effectively to set up high-percentage shots on goal.

The fierce winds that gusted through Lower Boyden Field yesterday also did not help make ball control any easier.

The Minutemen improved their record to 8-4-4, while the Stags dropped to 11-5.

"There was a lot of pressure on both teams [to move the ball] on such a blustery day," Fairfield assistant coach Al Taubert said. "It could've gone either way because we had the same kind of chances they had."

In the first half, Fairfield outshot UMass 10-4, but none of the shots truly tested UMass goalie Jon Gruber or Fairfield netminder Andy Tennant. The first half was entirely uneventful and also scoreless.

Things didn't really pick up when the second half opened. Fouls plagued both teams all day long, negating one offensive rush after another. The defenses for both teams deserve credit for some of the lackluster offense, but primarily sluggishness was the culprit.

As time ran down in the second half, the opportunities began to mount for the Minutemen. Jacobs' triumph culminated these chances at 87:27, when he sent a perfectly placed direct kick past Tennant to give UMass all it would need for the win.

Gruber was never really tested in the match, but his on-field leadership was in full effect as he chalked up yet another shutout. Gruber tallied five saves in the contest.

UMass head coach Sam Koch had stressed the importance of playing well against Fairfield and finishing the regular season strong, but he doesn't feel his team has done that.

"We didn't move off the ball well, and we didn't think ahead," Koch said. "The wind made it tough, but we've got to play better." Koch did point out certain positive elements in his team's performance.

"Jacobs had a great game. Tomas Johansson contributed well off the bench. These are positive things, and they pleased me. It's a win, and we'll take it," Koch said.

The Minutemen have three regular season games remaining, the first of which is Friday, November 1, at 1 p.m. against the Maine Black Bears at Lower Boyden Field.

Wilkos hoping to return to the playing field

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Less than two months ago, Gary Wilkos referred to his football playing career in the past tense. However, recently, he has been hinting about its future.

"I'd like to give it a try," he said. "To come back would be the ultimate mission completed."

Wilkos' story has been well-documented. The multi-talented quarterback was one of the University of Massachusetts' most celebrated players until he suffered a "career-ending" fractured vertebra in his neck in the sixth game of last season at Delaware.

Now, a little over a year later, as the fracture begins to fuse, he is "starting to taste" stepping onto the McGuirk Alumni Stadium field for one more season.

"Making a comeback has to do with my personal battle with being an athlete who just desires competition.

"If the doctor even utters the words, 'you can play again,' you better believe I'd be the first one down there with my helmet in hand," the Staten Island native said.

However, Dr. George Snook, the University of Massachusetts football team's physician, said, "There is no chance of him playing UMass football again. It's too dangerous a situation, no doctor in the country would give him clearance to play a contact sport."

Wilkos' first vertebra absorbed most of the blow by two Delaware defenders and it split in two pieces, creating five small bone chips.

Wilkos no longer wears the cumbersome neck brace that was screwed to his head in four places and his latest CAT scan indicated the distance between the two pieces, seven millimeters apart in April, was less than one millimeter.

Wilkos, who still uses a battery-operated bone stimulator to speed the healing while he sleeps, said, "There is no doubt in my mind that I'm over 90 percent, both mentally and physically.

"I feel like I've completely recovered, but I haven't really tested it or pushed it far enough to say I am."

According to Wilkos, the doctors are expecting a full recovery by the end of November.

Wilkos realizes the odds are against him returning to football, and admitted he has considered playing other, non-contact, sports at UMass.

"I would just like to be involved with any form of competition," said Wilkos, who in addition to football, lettered in track in high school and has played organized summer baseball. "What it is, it doesn't matter, just as long as I'm physically able to do anything.

"I see [baseball] Coach [Mike] Stone and it gives me the urge to play baseball and if I see [basketball] Coach [John] Calipari, it gives me the urge to play basketball."

But, whatever the case, Wilkos is an accomplished football player. Last season, in his six starts before the injury, he compiled 526 yards on the ground and passed for 733 yards, including four touchdowns. He was named the 1990 Yankee Conference Co-Offensive Player-of-the-Year.

"To sit there and watch that first game [this season], it really hit that football isn't a part of my life right now," said Wilkos, who has been on the sidelines of every UMass home football game this year.

"But I'm not going to be a sore person about it, it's a fact of life, if I didn't accept what has happened to me, I wouldn't consider myself a person."

Wilkos has battled back from injuries before. In 1988, he spent several months in traction after an off-the-field mishap which affected his back and in 1989 he played the entire game against New Hampshire with a cast on his broken left wrist.

Even though the latest injury appears to have ended his future as a football player, Wilkos still thinks about making the calls for the Minuteman offense again.

"To put on my helmet another time and know that it was for real would be something for me to be really excited about," he said. "To play in another football game would be unreal to me. I'd be thankful to just practice one more time."

Wilkos' next CAT scan is scheduled for the week before Thanksgiving.

"The doctors will be able to decide where my future is going to be. Who knows, maybe I'll never play a sport again, but I have to keep the door open. I'll be thankful for just a healthy body and mind," he said.

Woodside steps up to key women's soccer

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team makes one last surge this week to put itself into the NCAA Tournament, it knows it can count on one thing — the strong play of midfielder Michele Woodside.

Woodside, a senior from Springfield, Virginia has stepped forward this season proving to be a steadying influence on defense and a leader on offense.

"This year, I've never seen her so motivated and I've never seen her play so well," coach Jim Rudy said. "In every game she has been one of the best players on the field for either team. She just does it all for us, from stopping her player to getting forward and initiating an attack."

A four year starter, Woodside attended Robert E. Lee High School where she was All-State her senior year. Some of her teammates at Lee include current UMass defensemen Holly Hellmuth and former Minutewomen Cathy Cassidy and Becky Bozano.

"I had never heard of UMass until Becky and Cathy went here and they are basically the reason that I came," Woodside said. "I really wanted to get away from Virginia and UMass had a good team so I came."

Another player that Woodside knew, who was coming to UMass was forward Tracey Arwood, who attended a rival high school of Woodside's.

"Tracey and I were rivals in high school, we didn't really get along," Woodside said. "When I heard she was coming I called her and that made it a little easier to come up. Now we are roommates."

Woodside came to Massachusetts to play forward but after two years she moved back to midfield.

"Her junior year we realized that she could play solid defense so we moved her back and she has been marvelous," Rudy said. "She just never has a bad game, she is always playing well. I can count the number of bad games she has played on half a finger. She has been invaluable for us, she doesn't get the credit that she deserves but she is a great player."

"I'm a well rounded player, very balanced, nothing flashy," Woodside said. "It is easy to play up a little more than normal on this team. I trust the defense behind me, especially Holly. We've played so much together all through high school that we just click. I always know where she is going to be. I like this whole team, we don't have any big names but we work well together."

Chris Blackstone experiences extreme pain courtesy of the Hatch lunch tables.

Yellow Hatch table blinds and also hexes junior UMass student

By THE GREAT EARLE
Collegian Anti-kris

Junior undergraduate Klark Blackstone was said to be in "not-so-groovy" condition at Cooley Dickenson Hospital after he apparently "stared at a disgustingly bright yellow Hatch table," no one in particular said.

Blackstone's on-again, off-again girlfriend, Starlight Manhattan, stated that they were "just studying and eating some pizza pie" at the Hatch when Klark suddenly burst into tears of pain and screamed: "MY GOD AND THE GREAT HEAVENS ABOVE! I'VE BEEN HEXED!"

He also said, "Aw, fuck. I don't believe this shit." But that statement is unsuitable for printing.

Soon after Blackstone stopped kicking and flailing his arms, he was tied down and brought to Health Services. When he arrived at Health Services, professional personnel took his rectal temperature and made him cough. They them came to the conclusion that Blackstone had been "temporarily blinded" and sent him to Puffer's Pond for a quick swim and them to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

In other developments, 40 pissed off undergraduates at the Hatch put down their pizza slices and grabbed 40 axes from who knows where and proceeded to chop up the most heinous Hatch tables.

"I liked the old white ones," an unimportant source said.

It is rumored that the 40 students with the axes are moving their way toward James Residence Hall even as we speak. For what reasons, God only knows.

Police have decided not to look into this incident even though they have nothing better to do.

Mullins Arena: One really big lecture hall

By DAVE SASSY
Collegian Staff

The new Mullins Arena under construction at the University will primarily be utilized for conducting large classes because current overcrowded classrooms and a shortage of professors have made the 32,000 seat arena a necessity, University officials said yesterday. The arena will be the largest classroom in North America.

"It will be great for UMass. No more add-drop for popular gen-ed classes with this new state of the art classroom. It'll be big, but, who cares," said Ted Makuns, head of APCLB, Amherst People for the Construction of Large Buildings. "I just hope students dress accordingly in inclement weather," Makuns said.

The University plans to hold extremely overcrowded classes, like Psychology 103 and Contract Negotiating 110, in the huge arena when construction is expected to be complete — sometime next century.

The main contractor for the Mullins Arena, Leggo Construction of Pelham, is incorporating into the construction megaphones that will be available for students who want to ask the lecturer a question.

"I'm excited about it, I really am," said sophmore nuclear physics major Tim Waxman. "I could leave class early or even take a nap during class and non one would notice. Besides, going to class will be just like going to a football game."

The arena will also be equipped with a slowly revolving podium for the professor, a massive 2000-watt audio system, a large overhead projector with revolving 50-foot screen and a overhead electronic chalkboard. Tickets for classes taught in the arena will be handed out to students on registration day. In addition, some students may have to sit in obstructed view seats.

President of Leggo Construction, Don Emit, said the project will cost the University close to half a million but said it is the most efficient method to teach large amounts of students in a budget crisis. "It is smart money management on the part of UMass."

Steve Tobin, head of UBGMCS, (University Buildings Grounds and Maintenance and Construction and other Stuff), said teaching huge amounts of students at once is cost-effective and efficient.

"It beats hiring more teachers and students will still be learning the same material, just in a different atmosphere," Tobin said.

Nevertheless, not everyone is so pleased with the project. President of PETSWHSCALG, People for the Equitable Treatment of Students Who Have Some Clue About Life in General, Sally Greenfield, said the plan has not been thought out well.

"Will the seats in the arena be sufficiently padded?" asked Greenfield. "I have done field studies that prove that sitting on metal bleachers for an extended period causes Buttockitis, a hardening of the posterior." She added that such a condition, when untreated, can lead to sudden death.

"I won't let students be misled into walking into a situation where their health is at risk. Buttockitis is no joke," Greenfield said.

Doctor Seuss smoked green eggs and ganja?

Dr. Suess: children's storyteller or reefer addict?

The recent death of child story teller Doctor Suess was plagued with controversy recently on whether or not he did drugs during his profession.

Based on twenty documents that were found in the author's home, professional pain in the ass Adam Rothchild stated that the lovable doctor "definitely was smoking some green eggs and ham, if not crack."

Adam also stated that he liked chocolate bunnies.

Upon hearing this accusation, children from around the world have been meeting on school playgrounds for study sessions.

Said one very pompous, seven-year old brat: "Dr. Suess? Who the hell is he?"

Some selections available from the documents were such diverse statements as "Goobily-gobbily-grabiddy-gack, the Lorax smoked a bowl of crack," "Flippiddy-floppiddy-floopiddy-fanna, Phil fetched and fried another bannana" and "Sam I Am liked to toke."

Vanilla Ice had absolutely no comment.

There will be a seminar on whether or not the great doctor actually did drugs in Northhampton on November 8th.

Pseudo-Professor Rothchild will be there as well as scab comedian K-Rock Andrew Dice Clay will not be at the event.

Refreshments may be served, but there will be no free toilet tissue tubes for bongs sold at the concession stand; they will be sold in order to gain a profit.

That concludes my tale: there runs a mouse, and if one fetches it they can make a cap with its fur.

Masturbation rally launches movement

By MIKE MORONASSEY
Collegian Penis

A group calling themselves SPEW held a masturbation rally outside the Student Union yesterday.

The purpose of the group, named Students Protesting for the Elimination of Women, was explained by the group's spokeperson, Ivan Whackoffski.

"We're protesting for a legitimate cause," Whackoffski said. "Women always think that men just want them for their sexual pleasure. Our group is saying that we don't need them at all. As long as good old Lefty is around, who needs a woman?"

Job by S. Kyrie

Rally phallic symbol

Joe "Hairy" Hardonavich, the group's founder, said he came up with the idea late one evening while lying in his bed, alone.

"My roommate wasn't around, so, you know, I'm having a great time playing the skin flute," Hardonavich said. "And I get to thinking, why do ya need a woman if ya got full use of ya arms, and even if ya don't . . . Anyways, women always pull the hair and it kills!"

The rally's most controversial moment occured when Buster Hymen, the vice-president of SPEW, called the protesters together and said, "Come on, guys, it's time for a game of circle jerk." Hymen is a reformed womanizer who described the beauty of SPEW. He said that "it doesn't neccesarily take two to tangle."

The rally culminated when a 30 foot high penis was blown up in front of the Student Union. The protesters then began rubbing up against the phallic object vigorously until, "it blew," said witness Susan Smith.

"It was awful," Smith said. "All those men protesting in such a disgusting way. And without women. Besides, they've tried to keep us out of their groups since the beginning of time, but I guarantee, women will be allowed to join this group if we have to take it to the Supreme Court."

Smith and Hardonavich then engaged in a verbal sparring match. Smith allegedly called a "hairy-palmed sexist," to which Hardonavich responded with a "thank you."

"I told her I used to have sex with her every night for six months, and that not once did she have the decency to show up," Hardonavich said.

The counterprotesters held their two fingers up high, resembling a peace sign, only their fingers were together. When asked what the significance was, Smith replied, "What do you think?"

Witnesses say Chancellor "Dick" O'Brien won the match of circle jerk, blowing his load in 12 seconds. A spokesman for the University declined to comment.

Marshmallow fluff debate turns into nasty, violent sticky brawl in lounge

By ZUKER
Collegian Brainwasher

It was a sticky situation in the Cape Cod Lounge yesterday.

A debate on "Marshmallow Fluff: Friend or Foe of Peanut Butter" turned into a food fight which left several dead and others covered in lunchtime foodstuffs.

The debate, set up by the College of Food and Natural Resources, pitted professor Skippy Extra Crunchy against professor Peter Pan Smooth over the question of the validity of marshmallow fluff as a peanut butter sandwich flavor enhancer.

Peter, taking the negative side, outraged much of the crowd by stating that grape jelly was the only legitimate topping for a peanut butter sandwich.

Skippy, on the other hand, said Fluff had been unfairly cast as unhealthy and bad for one's teeth.

"Jelly is just as nutritionally negligible and plaque-promoting as fluff," he said, adding that "You can't make fudge with grape jelly now, can you?"

Pete, dressed in a green suit with a green hat, countered with a remarkably tedious discourse on the reasons kids and parents alike favored jelly over fluff. He cited the relative ease of serving and cleaning jelly as opposed to that "white, sugary sticky shit you think is so good on a sandwich."

Peter Pan also cited pressure from the milk lobby as a major reason for fluff's rising popularity over fruit preserves in the past 20 years.

"If it weren't for those damned Wisconson Democrats, no one would know what fluff is," he claimed. "The consistency of fluff is such that the average kid needs three times as much milk to wash down a sandwich."

Skippy, however, shot down Peter Pan's argument by noting that marmalade, another peanut butter topping, had also fallen victim to the jelly industry's "unfair monopoly on the sandwich market."

"You think you're so great," Skippy shouted as he stood and turned to face Peter Pan. "Just because you're made of fruit and not sugar and water, you think you have some superiority to other peanut butter toppings."

At that point, Peter Pan began pummeling Skippy with a loaf of Oat Bran bread. Oat Bran bread, due to it's hard consistency, unpleasant flavor and tendency to cause the runs, is considered a deadly weapon in Massachusetts.

Jif, a Food Engineering major, rushed to the defense of Skippy and poured a canister of fluff over his head. Skippy collapsed almost immediately and was pronounced dead by University Health Services doctors due to asphyxiation.

"He should've used a condom," Dr Schmable of Health Services lamented.

Jiff was then arrested by UMass police. Friends say Jiff was a person of little character and enjoyed seducing older women.

"He always said, 'Choosy mothers choose Jif,' recalled a freind who preferred to remain anonymous.

Then all hell broke loose as jelly and fluff partisans in the lounge began hurling their topping of choice at each other. University maintainers refused to clean the mess — "No fuckin' way," one said — but Dining Commons employees arrived on the scene to recover leftovers for the evening meal.

Students offered differing opinions on the debate and the melee, most of them apathetic.

"I'm all for kega — oh, this isn't a keg rally?" said Drunk N. Fool of Roach-Infested Acres, Amherst.

Chancellor Dick O'Brien said "I prefer tea and crumpets with marmalade."

Long Dong Silver accuses Thomas of letchery

PRESTON P. FOREPLAY
Collegian Staff

Long Dong Silver, whose popularity has expanded orgasmically in the past few weeks since the Clarence Thomas hearings, said last night at a Distinguished Vistiors Program Lecture he sat transfixed during the hearings and believes Anita Hill completely.

"This is a man who sent my press agent a request for my autograph," said Silver. "And he didn't want me to sign it with my right hand either."

The leading man in famous pornography films such as Hi, Ho, Silver and Take Me Away to Texas, said his 15 years in the porn industry have been both rewarding and "frustrating."

"Getting up every morning with the wife and then two, three, four, five times a day gets kind of monotonous after a while," said Silver, whose real name is Horace Smith. "But it's a living. I make 60 women and $100,000 a year."

Dragging on a cigarette throughout the lecture, Silver, who graduated form Harvard University in 1975 with an art history degree said he originally wanted to become an advertising representative for a metropolitan newspaper but found his calling in other lines of work.

"I literally opened up the Boston Sunday Globe and found a classified for 'porn star," he said. "I wasn't making much headway with the ad game and given that the difference between advertising and porn is taking off your clothes when you go into work, I decided to give it a try."

Silver's name and his films were often mentioned during the Thomas hearings for the Supreme Court. Anita Hill, who accused Thomas of sexually harassing her during their stints at the Department of Education and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, claimed that Thomas recounted parts of Silver's movies to her at the workplace.

Hill is now a tenured law professor at the University of Oklahoma.

Silver said he first heard of Hill's accusation when he was on the set of Ride 'Em, Cowboy, a porn video which features a cameo performance by Pee-Wee Herman. Herman was arrested last month in a Sarasota, Fla., adult movie for allegedly masturbating to the film. Ironically, Silver starred in the movie.

"Pee-Wee and I were just shooting the shit. You know, movie stuff. 'I liked you in Pee-Wee's Playhouse,' 'I liked your performance in Rock 'Em, Sock 'Em, Fuck 'Em,' when this [National Public Radio] report comes on," he said. " By the end of the day, I realized it wasn't only Thomas' genitalia involved in this mess but mine, too."

At this point, Silver, who referred to his penis alternately as "Pet" and "Oliver," grabbed his crotch. The audience of about 500 people roared with approval.

"I only wish Hill remembered which movie Thomas recounted," he said. "If he's a fan — and obviously he is — I'd like to know. The highest form of flattery in my business is someone recounting a scene or better yet. . . well, you guys know. . . you're in college." The audience broke out in laughter.

Silver said a few days after the hearings his agent gave him a call and told him that Thomas several years back requested an autograph.

"The only reason [my agent] remembered was because — and I admit this freely — I don't get too many requests for autographs and certainly not of that variety," he said. "We're not sure if I ever sent him a glossy with my John Hancock but I'd sure like to check his closet.

Silver then grabbed his crotch again, to the shouts and screams of the audience, which was generally well-behaved.

After the lecture, Silver answered a few questions about form positions and suggested a few tricks of the trade before a short autograph session.

Tamir Lipton, a junior journalism major, received one such autograph. "He's just my favorite star," said Lipton, who has rented many of his films. "I mean he's really got his stuff down."

Silver was introduced by Chancellor Richard O'Brien, who said that "Dong is good medicine."

SGA debates autoeroticism

By MIKKA LENNON

The Student Senate voted unanimously yesterday to support National Masturbation Week after two hours of informative debate during an emergency meeting.

Senate speaker Bob Imyourman called the meeting and explained his reasoning in opening remarks.

"We have been flagelating ourselves for so long, it seemed like the best idea to come out in support of this most cherrished of American events," he said.

Senators were startled at first and then sat through a half-hour tirade by former senator Robert Owen.

Owen screamed at the non-captive audience, claiming they all were involved in "political masturbation." Finding those last two words effective for crowd reaction, he went on for the last five minutes of his speech repeating "political masturbation" over and over, louder each time, until campus center security personel carried him out, gagged, blindfolded and restrained him by a straightjacket.

"Convincing," commented one senator.

Those appalled by Owen's outburst had their bibles out and spent a good while in conference, trying to find the word "masturbation."

"God never put the word into his sacred text, so we should not be discussing it. Humans do not masturbate," said one Senator, "that is why God gave Eve to Adam."

The vote was taken as the bible holders were in the lobby, each scanning through another chapter.

One vote against the motion was given by Ted Marvelous, who could not grasp the fact that he is no longer a student senator,

LBGA, conservatives look for truce

By KURT MOFFETT
Collegian Correspondent

Two groups of University of Massachusetts students with a recent history of antagonism are scheduled to meet today to try to begin working to settle their differences.

The Lesbian Bisexual and Gay Alliance (LBGA) and the conservative groups of the Republican Club, the Minuteman and the Young Americans for Freedom (YAF) are set to discuss four recommendations proposed by the Chancellor's Commission on Civility in Human Relations to improve the parties' relations.

First, the Commission's list of recommendations hopes to "develop a formal agreement regarding ground rules by which both will abide."

The Commission added that harassment, destruction of property, biased publications, violent threats and threatening phone calls are "inappropriate and unacceptable" to the LBGA and the conservative groups.

"We're tired of fighting," said Shawn Cotter, a member of the LBGA's steering committee. "It's a waste of energy."

Charles Delano, the editor-in-chief of the Minuteman, said "It's completely different from last year. We haven't done anything to provoke them this semester. The Minuteman is not gay-bashing."

The second recommendation deals with ending the confusion between the First Amendment and UMass' harassment policies. For example, last spring Young Americans sponsored a "Straight Pride" rally that was interpreted by the LBGA as "anti-gay." Approximately 600 protestors drowned out the speakers with whistles, chants and blaring music.

The confusion relates to whether or not the speakers were denied their First Amendment rights of freedom of speech by the protesters, and if the protestors were violating UMass' harassment policies.

"Both groups have felt misunderstood," Dave Schimmel, co-chairperson of the Commission, said. "They need to agree on appropriate and inappropriate ways to settle their disputes."

Another Commission member, Masha Rudman, said the groups should "respect

Students forced to meet UHS policy

Approximately 600 students will be prevented from pre-registering for their spring 1992 classes until they prove to University Health Services that they have met the Massachusetts state immunization requirements against measles, mumps, rubella, tetanus and diptheria, according to University health officials.

Health Services Systems Manager Judith Whitcomb said the 600 students' names were sent to the Undergraduate Registrar's office on October 25 on a preliminary list of candidates for pre-registration hold.

These students could eventually face administrative withdrawal from the University for failure to comply with the requirements, meaning a grade of "W," or "withdrawn from class" will be received for all Fall 1991 classes until or unless they are reinstated.

Students failing to comply with the requirements will be administratively withdrawn 15 days after the last day of the pre-registration period, which is November 20th.

"The one thing [health services has] been hassling with is how to get people to comply with [the immunization requirements]," Whitcomb said.

Whitcomb said that students either do not have the proper immunizations or have not filled out and sent in the health service's questionnaire sent to them during the summer.

Health service's staff sends out about 8,000 questionnaires before the school year begins, and by August they know approximately how many students will be coming to UMass, according to Whitcomb.

As of September of this year, 2,000 students still had not submitted a written record of their immunizations.

"Now we're down to 600," Whitcomb said, "but that's still an awful lot of people.

"Most people don't understand it's a state law," she added.

Dr. David P. Kraft, executive director of University Health Services, said the University can technically be fined if the state's Department of Public Health audits health services records. By state law, students must be adequately immunized before they are allowed to come to the University of Massachusetts.

Kraft said that since 1986, when the practice of sending the current health questionnaire to students was instituted, University Health Service's goal has been to get every student to comply by the end of the first month of classes.

"We've never hit it," he said.

Whitcomb said two warning letters are sent to students' "local addresses" during the first month of the school year. The first is a standard warning letter. The second letter informs students that they will be placed on pre-registration hold if their immunization record is either not received by health services, or if all their immunization requirements have not been met. They are also informed of a $25 late fee.

In an effort to make the process simpler for students, the staff has, so far, provided nine immunization clinics this semester where the required shots could be obtained for a $20 co-payment.

Kraft said the $20 fee pays for the staffing and supplies for the clinics, so other students who already have been immunized are not subsidizing those students who have not had their shots. The tenth clinic is scheduled for November 6th.

Terry Devanski, the University's health questionnaire representative, said each clinic has room for 188 appointments, and that about nine people are immunized every fifteen minutes. She added that the wait is minimal, but an appointment must be obtained. Walk-ins are rarely allowed.

"We are trying to create a better mousetrap," he joked.

UHS only accepts what is in a student's written record as proof of immunization, Whitcomb said, but "we're kind of lenient on what kind of paperwork we'll accept." She said all the students have to provide is signed, approved pieces of paper.

Kraft said students have to do one simple thing to avoid being placed on pre-registration hold.

"They need to read their mail."

UM prof. says Germany must remember past tragedy

By DEBRA KRIEGSMAN
Collegian Staff

James Young, a University of Massachusetts Holocaust literature scholar, spoke Wednesday night on the progress Germans are making on remembering their past.

A professor of English and Judaic Studies, Young spoke to a small audience on "Memory of the Holocaust in Germany Today," in the Hillel House lounge.

Young's lecture revolved around the memorials that have been built in Germany commemorating the Holocaust, and those that are being built today.

Young returned from Germany a few weeks ago, where he was invited to give advice to the government on what kind of memory they should make on the Holocaust.

"Countries generally do not remember the crimes they have committed," Young said. "It is usually the victims who remember."

He said the German government, in an effort to move forward, has realized it must look back and understand its history before it can forge a new life.

"Today Germany is hard at work on its memorials. A lot of university students work at rebuilding synagogues and memorials and museums," Young said. "They work at a memory as their parents worked at reconstruction and their grandparents worked at building the Third Reich."

While it is important for Germans to understand the Holocaust, Young said it is also important for them to understand the history of past generations.

Young said the history of Dachau, one of the more infamous German concentration camps, illustrates the dilemma many Germans are dealing with.

Dachau opened in the early 1930s as a concentration camp for political prisoners. It eventually became a fully working concentration camp which included Jews, homosexuals and other enemies of the German government. After liberation, the Soviets controlled it and immediately built memorials commemorating the German Communist Party, which staged an uprising just before liberation of the camp.

In the late 1940s the U.S. Army used Dachau as a trial center. From 1948-1955 it was open to Sudenten Germans returning from Poland and Czechoslovakia. In the mid 1950s the U.S. Army used it as a food services plant for the servicemen in Europe.

During the late 1950s the camp became public housing, and eventually had to be torn down because it had become seedy."

It was at this point that victims began to return and build memorials, he said.

But the local German community was hostile to this and the monuments were taken down, he said. A larger memorial project was instituted later, after some time had passed and wounds were given some time to heal.

Dachau currently houses quite a few memorials. They commemorate not only the suffering of the Jews, but the struggles of Germans who fought back.

Each year there are dozens of competitions inviting artists to submit ideas for memorials, Young said. These competitions, and eventual memorials bring about conversation and controverey. They get the German public talking and learning about its history.

Postal workers assist police in arrest of student

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student was arrested Tuesday by the Town of Amherst Police Department with the help of four regional postal inspectors from Hartford, Conn. on a drug-related charge.

He was charged with the possession and the intent to distribute a class D substance, marijuana.

Andrew Keesan, 20, a junior in the School of Management, whose address is given as 41 Carriage Lane, Amherst, was served a warrant minutes after the package was delivered to his house. Amherst Police served the warrant at 4:15 p.m. on Tuesday.

According to the Town of Amherst Police Department, a drug- sniffing dog picked the package out of a bulk mail room in Phoenix, Arizona. Upon further inspection, the substance was later identified as marijuana.

Federal authorities turned the case over to the police after determining that the amount was not enough to warrant a federal indictment.

The package was delivered by an undercover postal inspector to the above address just before 4 p.m. Minutes later the warrant was served by the department with the help of the postal inspectors without any incident.

Upon entering the house, police located a scale which can be used in the distribution process of a narcotic such as marijuana. Also, other drug paraphenalia was found, including "pipes" and "bongs."

Keesan was arraigned Wednesday morning at Northampton District court. Amherst Police said the matter is still under investigation.

each other's right to rally."

The Committee third recommendation is related to the second in stating that First Amendment rights and harassment policies should be publicized more through educational posters. According to the Commission's list of recommendations, if the LBGA and the conservative groups work with them and other campus agencies on these issues, then it will enlighten the entire campus.

Journalism professor James Boylan, also a member of the Commission, said "we are far removed from student life, so we have a lot to learn" about their different identities.

Finally, the Commission's list recommends that both groups work with the Student Activities Office (SAO) and faculty to plan political, social and educational activities "to ensure that these events are less destructive and more respectful of the rights and feelings of others."

Lives filled with terror and violence dwarf our concerns

As we in Amherst are fighting to lower the drinking age and prevent keg laws, people in El Salvador are fighting for basic human rights, like not starving to death.

But wait a second, do you even know where El Salvador is? Do you care?

How old are you, 19, 20, 21? Maria is about your age too. She is an El Salvadorian teenager and also of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN), which is a guerilla army in El Salvador fighting for these human rights. Maria and the FMLN engage in weekly battles against their oppressive government army.

When Maria turned 21, she got her leg blown off while fighting. When you turned 21, you were psyched because you were legal to drink, right?

Meet Ileana, who also joined the guerilla struggle at 16. her dedication was so great she was promoted to a position as divisional head of the armed forces when she was 22. You're probably going to graduate when you're 22, right?

At the age of 27, Ileana was fully rewarded for her bravery by being arrested by the government army. She was severely tortured and raped by an electric prod. You probably will want to be settled down and have a few kids by the time you're turned 27, right? Can you fathom being raped with an electric prod?

Wendy Lofgren

When I was a teenager my biggest worry was seeing who would come to my sweet sixteen party. Maria and Ileana worry about living to the next day. I believed in this universal notion that all teenagers fears consisted of blemishes and not having a boy/girlfriend. Welcome to reality.

El Salvador has been in continuous struggle between the population-backed guerillas and the dominating government army. The guerillas are fighting for food for the starving masses and education for a majority of illiterate people. The government is fighting for greed and control.

The reality of seeing your past five siblings not reach their first birthday because they die from malnutrition is what drives women like Maria and Ileana. Then again, they have no choice because their families are constantly on the run, since all peasants are considered possible guerillas and constantly persecuted.

Could you pack your things at a moment's notice, leave to anywhere else, night after night, and no you can't bring your hairdryer. Do you have the inner strength to keep going when your parents are slaughtered, your town has been disintegrated, you are raped by an electric prod? Would you even want to live?

We shake our heads, go tsk tsk with our tongues and sigh because it is out of our hands. But instead of forgetting, be aware. Learn more, about the El Salvadorian situation. This is not the only country where these atrocities are occurring. The United States actually backs the El Salvadorian regime by giving billions of dollars to these oppressive governments.

Find some inner strength like Maria and Ileana and do something about it. You can play a part by actively protesting or just writing a letter voicing your disagreement with this foreign policy. Be aware and just remember when you're out tonight getting bombed uptown, so are Maria and Ileana.

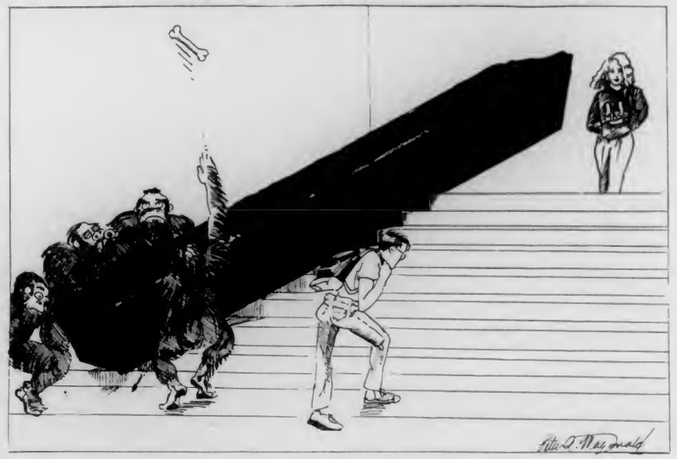
Death penalty for murderers, drug dealers



Well, there's no sense putting it off guys, and while their are bigger problems in the United States right now, there's just nothing like a good death penalty column.

As most of my faithful readers know (all two of you), I have a somewhat conservative ideology. As far as the death penalty goes, I feel it should be mandatory in the United States, not only for murderers, but also drug dealers.

These lowlifes have been perverting our country for years, with no way to stop them. Drug dealers have been addicting our young citizens with their illegal substances more and more, and President Bush's war on drugs is pretty much a joke. People have died from overdoses, which to me is murder.

Do you want to win the war on drugs, guys? Kill the enemy. It works pretty well in most other wars (see U.S. history). Besides, the drug dealers who walk our streets preying on young children, killing them with cocaine, heroin, and crack, have made the first move in the war.

Michael Morrissey

Now I know there are a lot of potheads and the like in the "Happy Valley". These people who smoke and sell their marijuana and acid to high school kids should watch their step. If their irresponsibility leads to just one death of a schoolchild, they should receive the ultimate high: death.

'Nuff said about that, lets move on to cold-blooded murderers. I love it when I see one of them plead insanity. Don't you have to be pretty insane to kill someone? I guess not, because the gullible court system of ours allows these psychos to be institutionalized, or better yet, furloughed.

Yes, Governor Weld, I'm talking to you! How dare you release convicted murderers into our schools and towns. Haven't you learned anything from Willie Horton? I was actually excited when I heard reports that Weld was going to reinstitute the death penalty in Massachusetts, but it's not going to do any good if he lets most murderers out.

People ask me, "As a Christian, how can you support the killing of a human being?" I simply reply that these killers are less than humans, and they do not deserve the respect of a human. These people have been given a chance to live in our society, and they have proven that they cannot live within the constraints of the law. Therefore, we must eliminate them. If our society isn't governed by laws, then what is it governed by?

Others say that it is more economical if we keep these people in prison for life, than if we kill them. I can easily point out the reason why. Our pathetic court system allows convicted criminals at least two levels of appeal, which ties up the system and spends our money!

We should limit all convicted murderers one chance to appeal, and then only under extenuating circumstances. That will definitely save money.

Also, in states that have the death penalty, they leave their murderers in Death Row forever, not even killing some of them. This is a travesty for the family of the deceased, who need the peace of mind of justice prevailing. I say if you're going to execute a criminal, do it within the first two years that they enter Death Row. Again, this would also cut costs.

The last line of defense that such bleeding heart liberals use is right out of the Bible. They say, "turn the other cheek". Well, I just counter this with, "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth".

We must eliminate those pariahs who cannot live in our society. They do not try to abide by the rules we have made, like, "Thou shalt not kill". The only solution is to get rid of these violent criminals. Just remember: If someone dies, then someone should fry.

Buses significantly reduce pollution problems

UMass Transit is an answer to the problem of pollution, not, at this stage, the problem of pollution. As Felice Cohen remarked in her editorial [Collegian, October 21], "a lot of people in this community rely on the buses." The transit system is designed for students, staff and faculty to use. The town also supports some of the routes, especially during the summer. For a community this size, the service is remarkable.

Consider the implications of the University void of buses. I understand your disgust with diesel fumes; I am a bus driver. If buses were removed, students, staff, faculty and town members would be forced to drive to work, class, etc. I know you are not advocating removal of UMass Transit, but I hope this will help you better appreciate what it does. Something like 18-19,000 people board a UMass Transit bus every day. What if they all drove? What if they had to buy a car to get to campus, town or the local colleges? The people who would have to drive compared to the buses on the road is thousandfold.

This "bus dilemma," as you call it, is the same across the country. I imagine that every major city, possibly throughout most of the world, uses some kind of bus system. Buses reduce the amount of smog by significantly reducing the number of cars. It is true that buses emit large amounts of gases when they pull away from a stop. Sometimes this can be avoided by not accelerating fast. Transit drivers are reminded of this and are constantly trying their best, but in most buses it is hard to control.

If you want to have a more environmentally safe transportation system, get out of your car, ride a bike, walk or — you guessed it — ride the bus. Push for more intense research into biomass fuels or solar energy. For some silly reason (I don't know, maybe capitalistic tendencies of big fossil fuel companies) this country is afraid of safer energy resources. They like the idea of digging up sludge and spewing it into the air or flooding land the size of New England and killing off a few Indians along the way. Push for more funding of public transportation so PVTA can afford adequate service and higher grade fuel.

Try calling UMass transit again. I'm sure someone can talk to you. If not, try again. We're doing the best with what we've got.

Amherst

A note to readers:

Thank you for your continued submissions of letters and columns. We appreciate it. Really, we do.

One problem arises, though. We continue to get letters to the editor well over the prescribed 50-line limit. Often remarkably well beyond.

What happens when there's a 70 line letter and only a 30-line space and we want to fit your ideas into the page? We have to cut. And cut. And cut some more. As a result, the letter in question doesn't look like itself anymore. Unfortunate, but necessary.

With this in mind, remember: when it comes to letters, smaller is better. Fifty lines is the maximum amount, not the suggested length. Concise letters fit easily, get to the point more quickly and effectively than a 100-line "letterzilla," and are more manageable for our overworked, underpaid staff.

What's more, we don't have to cut smaller letters.

Just a suggestion from your friends at the Editorial desk.

By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your artistic or musical talent attracts new attention now. Watch a tendency to exaggerate; less imaginative people will not understand your flights of fancy. Dine out tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Everything goes your way this morning. You attain your ends in generous measure. Go along with the crowd until you achieve greater success. Find some time for creative play.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Heed any misgivings and allow them to guide your decisions. Acting in haste could lead to a financial loss or squabble. Get together with someone special this evening. Make up for lost time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Curb a tendency to be frivolous or extravagant and turn your attention to the more serious business of getting ahead. Use your wits. Taking decisive action is the key to financial progress.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Think of the future before taking chances that may nullify all that you have already won. Turn on the charm and go with the flow. Romance intensifies. You know what you want.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You and your loved ones enjoy a new feeling of security now. Savings grow. Take a colleague's advice with a grain of salt. You may not have all the information you need.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Pay little or no heed to those who would have you believe that their schemes will pay you dividends. Your money could end up in their pockets! Attend a social gathering tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make your point today while you still have a chance of convincing others. There may be some questions regarding a financial angle. Accountants can provide excellent advice. Give in to romance this weekend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you decide to throw caution to the wind, you may be asking for a peck of trouble. Domestic and public relations are very sensitive. A compromise helps you mend some fences.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Although you have the ideas, you may need a partner to put them over. Do not allow your hopes to sink when you encounter delays. An upbeat attitude will work wonders.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money could be the biggest bone of contention between members of a household. Try to avoid arguments by making intelligent concessions. Tone down your language tonight or things could heat up.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do everything you can to instill confidence in your dear ones. Entertaining family, friends, and neighbors will boost your spirits.

More predictable pulp in Hughes' Curly Sue

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

John Hughes, creator of the mega-hit Home Alone and notable bombs like Dutch, has hit an all-time low with his latest — a humorless, predictable rags-to-riches tale called Curly Sue.

Curly Sue stars likable, but perennial box-office loser, James Belushi as a small-time con man who travels across the country with his young companion, Curly Sue (Allison Porter). They don't steal or break any laws, or as Belushi puts it "We don't break any of the good ones." He makes her brush her teeth and takes her to art museums in place of school. They hit upon a con to elicit sympathy, guilt and hopefully some extra bucks. Fortunately for them, they successfully con an ice-queen lawyer, played by Kelly Lynch. She buys them dinner and although she still feels guilty (she thinks she hit Belushi with her car) her snobby boyfriend comes for her and she's out of their life . . . or so she thinks.

In what Hughes would probably call an ironic twist, Lynch really does hit Belushi with her car the next day. She takes the pair to her posh penthouse to recuperate. They quickly adjust to the easy life. In standard sitcom fashion, the cute Curly Sue melts Lynch's heart. Lynch also manages to fall in love with Belushi in between an annoying sub-plot about Lynch's inability to deal with a client.

But it's not over yet. Remember the snobby boyfriend? He calls the child welfare board and Curly Sue is sent to an orphanage while Belushi is arrested! Don't get worried folks, it all works out in the end and even the snobby boyfriend gets his due.

James Belushi is getting pretty good at playing the "ordinary guy," he just needs a good script. In Curly Sue, Belushi looks tired and has none of the charm that has elevated his other films. Kelly Lynch first came into popularity with her stunning performance in Gus Van Sant's Drugstore Cowboy. Now she's hit the bottom of the barrel in Curly Sue.

Allison Porter resembles a deranged Annie in her red curly wig. You'd think she'd be the star of the film, but mostly she gets to kick people and say "hubba hubba." Stupid, yes. Funny, no.

John Hughes was never a stickler for originality, but we know from Home Alone that he is capable of making an entertaining film. Since Home Alone, he has released two films: Career Opportunities and Dutch; both were critical and box office bombs, and Curly Sue should continue the streak.

Minutewomen leave Yale out in the cold

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team was able to fight off a decent Yale team and some very cold weather to improve its record to 13-4 with a 2-0 win yesterday on Lower Boyden field.

Yale (4-10) played better than their record indicated and was able to control some of the play early in the first half. After halftime, however, Yale couldn't keep up the level of play as they succumbed to the Minutewomen's superior skills.

"I thought our coach would choose to play against the wind in the first so I expected some pressure from Yale," UMass goalkeeper Briana Scurry said. "I figured I'd be challenged because Yale would come out fired up and play tough."

Scurry was able to handle the pressure and five Yale shots as she recorded her 12th shutout of the season.

"The shutouts are nice," Scurry said. "It's more than I've ever had, even in high school. I'm kind of surprised by having this many."

Scurry was aided by a strong effort by the Minutewomen defense, especially the play of Lisa Mickelson.

On the offensive end, Massachusetts was able to get two past Yale goalkeeper Tina Pihl.

In the 33rd minute, a loose ball at the top of the penalty area was captured by Holly Hellmuth. Hellmuth was able to tap the ball over to Barbara Verdoliva, who booted it into the far-left corner.

Verdoliva's tally appeared to take the wind out of the Bulldog's sails. Until then, Yale was playing UMass evenly, but after getting on the board, the Minutewomen began to control the play.

In the second half UMass started to dominate, as they had the wind at their back. Just 2:26 into the second half, Massachusetts was awarded a direct kick from 35 yards out on the left side. Mickelson took the kick and put a hard drive on net. Pihl dove to stop it but gave up the rebound, which Colleen Miliken was able to pounce on and punch home for the insurance goal.

UMass, No. 10 in the nation, plays its final regular season game against Rutgers at 2 p.m. on Sunday at Lower Boyden Field.

Men's hoop set to face Marathon Oil

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team opens the exhibition season Sunday, as they host Marathon Oil at 7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage.

No one needs to tell the Minutemen how good Marathon Oil can be. Last year, they defeated the Minutemen 105-81.

Mike Born led Marathon Oil with 46 points, as he was unconscious in nailing all 17 shots he threw up.

"This is like playing against Oklahoma or Kentucky," said UMass coach John Calipari. "They're real talented, they're big and they're a good team."

Marathon Oil is a touring team composed of former college players, including Eric Turner of Michigan and Richard Morgan of the University of Virginia, which plays more than 40 games against college teams.

Calipari said Wednesday that he was disappointed with how the returnees are playing in practice.

"They aren't playing with passion or fire," he said.

UMass forward Jim McCoy has been suffering with the flu for the past few days, but is expected to play Sunday, according to assistant coach Bill Bayno.

Calipari said everyone will play, but he is more concerned with how the freshman play than with how the starters perform.

"This game comes at a nice time — the kids are getting tired of playing against each other," Calipari said.

Minutemen travel to Foxboro

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Big-time.

The University of Massachusetts football team travels to Foxboro Stadium, the home of the NFL's New England Patriots, to face Northeastern in a non-conference game at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Even though the 60,000-plus seats most likely won't be filled, (the Patriots can't fill them), the contest between the Minutemen (2-5) and the Huskies (4-3) is key for both schools as the two teams have been going in opposite directions of late.

UMass is hoping to reverse their heading as they have been struggling. The Minutemen, 2-3 in YanCon, have dropped three straight and two consecutive conference meetings.

"We've got to put an end to this skid," UMass' head coach Jim Reid said.

The Huskies, who had only one win last year, have turned their program around under first year head coach Barry Gallup. Last week, Northeastern was barely edged out by the Yankee Conference's only undefeated team, New Hampshire, 18-14.

The Huskies fought back from an 11-0 halftime deficit and took the lead with just under two minutes remaining only to see UNH perform last-second heroics to pull out the victory.

Last season, the Huskies averaged only 240 total yards per game. This season, they are averaging over 370 ypg.

Part of the reasoning behind the Husky's offensive turnaround has been the play of first-year quarterback Ralph Barrone. The strong-armed junior college transfer has thrown for over 1,100 yards so far this season, with 11 touchdowns and 11 interceptions.

Barone has several potent targets. Sophomore wide receiver Jeremy Gobeil has caught five TD passes and averages 19.7 yards per reception. Senior tight end Scott Adams leads the team in total receiving yardage, 334, including four TDs. Barone's favorite target is junior wide receiver Branden Tsetsilas, who has 17 catches.

Sparked by inside linebackers Jim Loch and David Atwood, Northeastern's defense held UNH's highly touted running game to 119 yards last Saturday. Atwood is the team leader in total tackles with 54, followed by Loch's 43. Sophomore strong safety Mark Salisbury heads the secondary with five interceptions.

Dave McGovern, who replaced Tony Williams at Connecticut two weeks ago as UMass' starting signal-caller has been chosen as this week's starter. Against UConn, the sophomore completed 10 passes in 24 attempts for 125 yards, but was also intercepted four times.

"Dave allows us to take advantage of our whole offense," Reid said. "He can both throw and run."

However, even without a quarterback, the Minutemen can rely on the running of tailback Jerome Bledsoe. The senior has rushed for over 100 yards in six straight games. Against UConn, he racked up 148 yards on the ground, his third highest career total.

The UMass defense, which is allowing 353.4 yards of total offense, is currently ranked fifth in the Yankee Conference. The Minuteman secondary was impressive against an explosive UConn offense two weeks ago.

Northeastern, an independent which joins the Yankee Conference in 1993, decided to improve the visibility of its program and host the contest at Foxboro, which they hope will draw a considerable crowd for the intra-Massachusetts battle.

The game will be broadcast live on WMUA 91.1 FM and the UMass Network, WTTT 1430 AM, Amherst.

UM swim team opens at Smith

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts women's swim team opens its season against Smith College, there'll be something old, something new, something different and something blue.

The blue, of course, is the water.

The old is the returning swimmers coach Bob Newcomb looks to carry the meet. Senior Kim Morin, junior Kari Edwardsen, and sophomores Kim Broad, Jen Saunders, Allison White and Jen Jackson are Newcomb's "top athletes."

The new is both the freshman swimmers who will try to break in to the events, and the returning swimmers that Newcomb said he will try at new events.

"This weekend meet should be real competitive," Newcomb said. "We're pairing some different people with new events."

The something different will be the Smith college twins Jen and Kathy Burrell that Newcomb recruited. They could have easily come to UMass, said Newcomb, "They both applied here, and we would've loved to have them, but they wanted to go to Smith. They're good athletes."

As this is the opening meet, UMass cannot be expected to be at their peak. Yet Newcomb is confident in his swimmers and the result.

"Smith isn't as strong as in years past," he said. "We should have some close events, but I don't think there'll be any doubt of the final outcome. We should take it."

Polo at New England tourney

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts water polo team, ranked 15th nationally, takes a big step toward the NCAA Tournament this weekend as they head to Brown University for the New England Championships. Brown is the 16-time defending champion.

Despite being tied with Brown for the league's No. 1 ranking, the Minutemen will be ranked ahead of the Bears based on difference of goals scored.

Instead of following previous tournament formats of playing four or five games per weekend, this weekend's action will consist of only two games. A bye in tomorrow morning's first round has the Minutemen playing the winner of the Harvard vs. Yale game at 2:30 p.m.

A win in that game will mean a date in the championship game Sunday afternoon at 3 p.m. With no known predictions from Nostradamus on the matter, a UMass-Brown championship game is anticipated. This is the same Brown squad that beat the Minutemen 10-9 in quadruple, sudden-death overtime two weeks ago.

"We've been playing pretty well in practice this week," said Coach Russ Yarworth. "We have the talent, we just have to go out strong in the first half and do it."

X-country at New Englands

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

With the Atlantic 10 Championships now behind them, the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team heads to Northfield, MA for the New England Championships at 1 p.m. today.

This time, however, the Minutewomen will be hard-pressed to capture the championship, instead setting their sights on a top-five finish.

"It's almost a given Providence will win," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said "They're ranked No. 2 in the country, and they're very deep.

Look for Boston College, with top runners Diane Connolly and Heather Grimshaw to take second, while UMass should battle Connecticut and Springfield for third.

"I think we have a realistic shot at third," LaFreniere said. Connecticut and Springfield have a slight edge on us, but UConn's second runner is out, and I think it's a good possibilty that if we run in a tight pack, we can place our five in front of Springfield's third runner."

Last week, the Minutewomen placed four consecutive runners to capture positions eight-11 and the Atlantic 10 Championship.

UMass' top five runners — Michelle St. Laurent, Tricia Mathieson, Rebecca Johnson and Kim and Kelly Liljeblad — have each placed in the top spot at least once this season.

GEO: Will they ratify or strike?

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

It seems unlikely that members of the Graduate Employee Organization will ratify their current contract on Wednesday since three major demands of the organization still remain unmet by the University administration at this time. Sources said the organization will then hold a strike vote.

In other developments, GEO offered last Wednesday another compromise to the administration to try to finalize their first union contract, symbolizing the organization's willingness to end this contract dispute and avoid further action, a GEO spokesperson said.

Both sides will meet again today at the negotiating table to try to compromise and end the 10-month-long struggle.

One of the major demands of the organization, which represents all graduate students including 2,200 teaching and research assistants, interns and fellows, was a mandatory health fee waiver.

The organization last week said it would pay 10 percent of the tab for health care. On Wednesday, they offered to the administration to pay 38 percent of health costs this academic year although they still want the full waiver for following years.

"The idea would be to allow the administration to move gradually into shouldering the responsibility they have as employers," said Emily Isaacs, GEO co-speaker.

An individual graduate employee pays $870 for a year of University health benefits.

Susan Pearson, the chief negotiator for the administration, said administration officials will meet with department heads today to discuss the organization's latest concession, which would cost the University about $1 million.

"It's entirely a question of money," Pearson said. "In order to fund that, we would have to cut all the departments [budgets] even further."

Although Seymour Berger, a member of the administration negotiating team, would not comment on specifics, he said, "We're trying to do what we can to meet their demands. We're searching for way to be helpful."

"We've gotten done to pocketbook issues and we don't have the wherewithal to be successful," Berger said. "We'll try this coming Monday to reach some type of agreement."

In addition, Isaacs said the organization was upset at the administration's unwillingness to meet again at the negotiating table anytime before today. This is only three days before the organization's next membership meeting.

"Their lack of movement suggests a fairly grim situation," Isaacs said.

100 arrested in abortion protest

Demonstration site shifts from Boston to Rhode Island

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff and
The Associated Press

Nearly 100 Operation Rescue abortion protesters were arrested outside a women's clinic in Cranston, Rhode Island Saturday morning after Operation Rescue shifted plans for massive demonstrations from Massachusetts to Rhode Island.

Operation Rescue claims the shift was made in response to a request by the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association.

Abortion rights activists charge Operation Rescue was deterred by a Superior Court injunction issued last month that prohibits anti-abortion activists from blockading Boston-area clinics and provides stiff penalties for violations.

According to Associated Press reports, Cranston demonstrators numbered around 1,000 and were evenly split between Operation Rescue members and abortion rights activists.

Clarinda Merripen, a UMass undergraduate who joined the pro-choice demonstrators in Cranston, said abortion rights activists "clearly outnumbered" Operation Rescue members when she arrived around 9:30 a.m. She said by noon pro-choicers "outnumbered them [Operation Rescue supporters] two to one."

Reports from AP said by 9:30 a.m. police had charged about 100 Operation Rescue demonstrators with trespassing, disorderly conduct and obstruction of justice.

Some were also charged with assaulting a police officer after a group of about 30 Operation Rescue members rushed through police barricades set up around the clinic, said Major Augustine Comella of the Cranston Police Department.

Although "the vast majority" of people arrested were members of Operation Rescue, a few abortion rights activists were also taken into custody, said Cranston Police Captain Vincent McWalters.

Operation Rescue had originally planned to mount large demonstrations around Massachusetts, but they claimed they moved them after a request by Donald Murray, president of the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association.

Murray said officers wanted to attend the funeral of one of their colleagues, Officer Jeremiah Jurley, 50 who died Monday in a bomb blast in Boston.

Father Michael McNamara, Operation Spokesperson from the Boston Catholic Archdiocese, confirmed Operation Rescue decided to go to Cranston because of the Boston Patrolmen's request.

"In sympathy with the police and the policeman's family, we moved down here [to Cranston]," McNamara said.

For Boston pro-choice groups, Operation Rescue's move to Cranston was a victory. "We won, as far as I'm concerned, because Operation Rescue decided it not only couldn't come to Boston, but also not to Massachusetts as well," said Ellen Zucker, president of the Boston chapter of the National Organization for Women.

Zucker said about 2,000 people had been mobilized

Catholic priest: baby has equal rights to mother

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Father Michael McNamara, designated spokesperson for Operation Rescue and part of the Boston Roman Catholic Archdiocese, stood outside the Cranston, Rhode Island police station Saturday afternoon waiting word about the 100 demonstrators arrested during an attempt to blockade the Women's Medical Center of Rhode Island.

An earnest, soft-spoken man, Father McNamara explained the views of his group. One of the problems dividing "pro-lifers" and "pro-abortionists," he said, is the debate about whether, while in the womb, a baby is a "living human

Ph.d. student takes six lives at U. of Iowa

By GREG SMITH
Associated Press

IOWA CITY, Iowa — The gunman who shot six University of Iowa employees, four fatally, before killing himself wrote letter to news organizations and acquaintances outlining his intentions, a prosecutor said today.

Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White said at a news conference that Gang Lu, 28, wrote five three-page letters saying he intended to kill members of the University physics and astronomy department who bypassed his dissertation in favor of another Chinese graduate student.

"His state of mind was that of a premeditated, cold-blooded murderer," White said. The letters contained "information that would indicate that he had actions like this in mind," White said.

Lu went on a shooting rampage at the University on Friday. He killed a rival student and three professors and critically wounded a university administrator and another staff member, said Ann Rhodes, vice president of university relations.

Lu, a doctoral candidate in the physics department, had filed a complaint with the academic affairs office when his paper was not nominated for a competition to choose the University's best dissertation, Rhodes said.

The dissertation by the student Lu killed Friday was nominated instead.

Classmates said Lu was a loner who took pride in his studies.

"He was brilliant, always did perfect work, straight A's" said Mike Rogers, a graduate student who said he was in several classes with Lu.

"He was always very confident and proud of himself," said Ken Nishikawa, an associate research scientist in the physics department.

Upset over not getting the nomination, Lu apparently planned who he was going to shoot, Rhodes said at a news conference Friday night.

"It was not accidental," she said. "It was not random."

One Boltwood Walk ■ Amherst

Pre-registration no longer needs a Whitmore walk

By REBECCA VOIGT
Collegian Correspondent

All University of Massachusetts graduate and undergraduate students will be using their telephones instead of the standardized "bubble sheets" to pre-register for next semester, according to the registrar's office.

Reistrar Nancy Fitzpatrick said the new Touchtone Registration System, similar to "Voice Mail," will have a pre-recorded voice that speaks instructions to students. Choices are entered through the telephone's keypads. Rotary dial phones will not work with this system, so students must use touchtone phones, she said.

All undergraduates and some graduate students will need to get their Personal Identification Number (PIN) in order to access the new system. PINs will be available from students' major departments starting on Nov. 12.

Pre-registration will be from Nov. 14 to Nov. 21. Students can begin calling on Nov. 14 but there will be different individual deadlines. These deadlines will be staggered up until Nov. 20. Then on Nov. 21, students will be "scheduled off of the system."

The Registrar said it was very important for students to know their deadline. "People shouldn't rely on what their roommate's or anyone else's deadline is," she said.

If students miss their deadline, they will not be able to pre-register and will have to register for all of their classes through Add/Drop.

Each student's deadline will be sent to them in the mail along with instructions on how to use the system.

Thirty-two telephone lines have been added to handle pre-registration, she said. However, the Registrar warned students still might get a busy signal when they try to call the system. She said students should call as early as possible in their access period and should keep trying until they get through.

The lines will be open Monday - Thursday 8 a.m. - 9 p.m., Friday 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. and Sunday 10 a.m. - 9 p.m..

With this new system, students will be told if they are eligible for the courses that they choose. They can verify they entered the correct course. They can change their requests. Choices can be marked Pass/Fail and students can choose an alternate for each requested course. With the old system, students could only choose two alternates.

Engineering, and Hotel Restaurant and Travel Administration majors used this system last semester as a trial run, and many students thought it was a good idea.

"It's very efficient because you could verify your choices. With opscans you didn't know if you marked them right," said senior civil and mechanical engineering major, Matt Valade.

Junior HRTA major Erik Rothman agreed. "It's easy because you don't have to walk all the way over to Whitmore," he said.

The Registrar said what order students pre-register in will not effect whether they will get the classes that they requested.

"Students will be scheduled into courses during December and will receive their schedules in January," said Nancy Fitzpatrick.

According to the Registrar's office, Touchtone Telephone Pre-registration is the first step in a plan to automate the entire registration process.

Touchtone telephone Add/Drop will be piloted with selected students for the Spring 1992 semester and will be used for the entire campus for the Fall 1992 semester.

Third World issues addressed

Speakers discuss "The New World (Dis)Order"

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

Four speakers addressed an audience yesterday at the UMass Campus Center, for the closing session of a two-day symposium entitled "The New World (Dis)Order" organized by the Forum on Developing Nations.

Shyamala Ivatury, a UMass graduate student, focused on women's issues in India. "In addition to traditional household tasks, rural women are often involved in agricultural labor and gathering of fuel and fodder," she said.

"Women in agriculture make only 40 to 60 percent of a man's pay. They have almost no control in village government," Ivatury said.

Women's share of employment in organized urban sectors is decreasing, Ivatury said. "In the unorganized sector, housemaids face job insecurity and harassment."

Ivatury cautioned, however, against making superficial comparisons between the status of women in the West and women in Third World countries. "Such comparisons are often used as a divisive tactic by the West," Ivatury said.

Pratip Dastidar, a UMass alumnus, spoke on "The Mirage of the Market: India in the 1990s." "At the time of gaining independence India decided not to join the global market. But today it is chasing the free market, which is a mirage because although it looks good, you can never get it," Dastidar said.

"A fundamental question to ask and seek answers to is why we decided to open up our markets," Dastidar said. "The mid-level trading class brought about a proliferation of consumer goods and screwdriver technology which, along with the foreign exchange crunch during the Gulf War, sucked us into this debt crisis."

"The West is not really interested in investing in India, because our share of the global trade is only 0.3%, he said.

Actually, the United States is using leverage through the IMF loans to try to expose India's nuclear program and then neutralize it, Dastidar said. "This was a lesson learned during the Gulf War," he said, "and is obvious from the way the U.S. is sending its inspection teams in to Baghdad."

Fascist elements in the country are exploiting the economic discontent and trying to make a grab for power, he said. "What I see in the future is not a market but a battleground — a Lebanonization on a scale never seen before."

Jose Ledesma, a UMass graduate student from the Philippines, then spoke on his country's debt crisis, and the status of the U.S. military bases. "The bases have been used for intervention against Third World countries and destabilizing the Philippines. They have also destroyed our self-dignity," Ledesma said.

Some instances of such intervention include the Boxer Rebellion in China, the Korean War, the Vietnam War, and the Gulf War, Ledesma said. "In fact, some of the first bombing runs against Iraq were practised in the Philippines."

Through puppet governments, the United States keeps the Philippines in a state of debt, he said. "The IMF and World Bank are controlling our economy through currency devaluation and removal of import restrictions," he said.

Colin Cavell, a UMass political science graduate student, spoke on U.S. foreign policy and Latin America. "The Monroe Doctrine of 1923 effectively announced that Latin America was off limits to Europe for colonization," he said.

Since then, the policy of containment of communism was used to justify U.S. interventionism, Cavell said. "In some cases, this "communist threat" actually involved land redistribution, as in Guatemala. Still, a lesson had to be taught to all Latin Americans that such nationalism had to be inhibited," Cavell said.

"Hence the CIA overthrow of Arbenz in 1954," Cavell said. This principle of demonstration has been very well exhibited in the recent Gulf war, Cavell said.

being or a thing."

If it is a living being, he said, "it has rights equal to the mother. If it is [considered] a thing, then the dispute arises."

"In our belief, in the Christian tradition, the general premise is life begins with conception. Therefore, a small child, from the moment of conception, has equal rights with the mother," McNamara said.

Father McNamara said Operation Rescue members believe they are responding to "a divine law" that requires they risk arrest in order to stop abortions.

"If a human law is contrary to a divine law, we have a right to, in a non-violent way, commit civil disobedience," he said.

McNamara said pregnant women must receive "community support" as part of "a broken society healing itself."

"When there's a need, and a woman, for whatever reason, finds herself pregnant, we need to love them, we need to help them, we need to encourage them, and call them to what they can be, really as a woman, because now they're a mother, and they're a mother of a child who has an equal right to live with them," he said.

Father McNamara said he has found, in his work with group homes for "pregnant girls," that "when a young woman, even a young girl, is given the proper support, through spiritual direction and love, even if she doesn't decide to keep the child, it is better for her to go through the pregnancy."

McNamara said even in cases when a woman's health is at risk, except in cases of rape or incest, his group would not support abortion, because "at some point the mother made a decision to have relations" and now there is a child "who has equal rights with the mother."

Saturday to defend the clinics from the tactics of Operation Rescue.

Planned Parenthood escort June Wendroff said she thought Operation Rescue went to Cranston because they were afraid of the Middlesex Superior Court injunction barring Operation Rescue from blocking access to clinics.

"They don't have an injuction there, but we have an injunction so they can arrest and make it stick," Wendroff said.

Zucker said she believed the injunction, which threatens members of Operation Rescue, the Pro-Life Action Network and 38 individuals with up to two and a half years of imprisonment and $5,000 in fines, was behind Operation Rescue's decision.

"I think the strength of the injunction was evident, and shows it means something and says blocking a clinic is a violation of civil rights," Zucker said. "And unlike other times, law enforcement officials were there to enforce it."

Soda-spitting drink machine short-circuits

Police investigation into a soda vending machine in John Adams Residence Hall that began overheating and automatically dispensing soda early Thursday morning revealed an unknown liquid substance was poured into coin slots. The machine short-circuited. Estimated damages were approximately $2,200.

A woman reported to police her vehicle was damaged Thursday evening while parked in Lot 13. Police report a note was left on her car indicating an operator pulling into a space hit her car. However, the note did not identify the operator. Damages were estimated at $400.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Worker equality a must

An injury to one is an injury to all.

This, the motto of a union from the past, should play into the minds of the campus as the Graduate Employee Organization votes this Wednesday to go on strike against the University.

Graduates students who work for the University as research, teaching assistants, interns and fellows ARE state employees, two years ago they were given a ciriculum fee for that reason.

Now, these state employees (most of whom make in the vicinity of $6,000 per year) are fighting for the right to have a binding arbitration system, an agency fee, job security and most importantly affordable health care.

State employees in the remainder of the state and on campus pay 10 percent of their health care, and the graduates believe they have a right to this care as well. They are right.

As state employees, they should be given the same benefits of the professionals and laborers on campus. As state employees, we find it difficult to believe they are forced to work without the benefits allotted to their fellow state employees.

Although there are perceptions of hardship for the undergraduates— both academically and financially — these have been proven unfounded. Teaching or research assistants have no desire to screw their students out of an education or grades.

If the GEO votes for a strike, the undergrads should realize that graduate school is not a joy-ride — it is a profession. These people work for an employer which is taking care of the rest of its workers — but not the graduate students. Understanding workers should be treated equally is half the battle. Once this is achieved there will be no need for strikes.

Unsigned editorials are the opinion of the majority of the Collegian Board of Editors.

Don't dwell on problems

Jared Blaut

Those of you out there who care may have noticed that my column was absent from last Monday's paper. This forced me to explain to half-a-million different people just why my column didn't run which, as you could imagine, got to be really, really annoying.

That's okay, though, because the column sucked.

So, onward and upward as they say. Why dwell in the past? Why niggle? Can you say "niggle" boys and girls? Can you tell me what it means? I don't think you can, not because you're stupid (no offense to any stupid people out there), but because I'm probably on the other side of campus right now and even if you try screaming an answer at the top of your lungs you'll probably only succeed in frightening your neighbors or pissing off some deranged undead man with a hockey mask and a meat cleaver. But if you want to try, go ahead.

No . . . no . . sorry. You're wrong. The correct answer is "to worry a lot over insignificant things when you could be doing something more productive, like typing a column two hours before deadline."

Look around you. Do you see anyone who might be a niggler? I look around me, and I see my roommate sleeping at twelve noon on a Sunday when we are supposed to meet some people for brunch in half-an-hour. This is the same kid who's missed 57 classes this semester and still has a 3.7 average. He is most definitely not a person prone to niggling. Perhaps we can learn from this.

No, I'm not saying that everyone should go and blow off all their classes; my roommate can do this because he knows more than his teachers. What I am saying is that everyone at UMass always seems so tense, so full of anger and frustration and that hey! we should all relax and enjoy ourselves every once and awhile.

What happens is that everyone worries over little tiny insignificant things and eventually become so obsessed with the negative that they go and do something rash, like killing six people at the University of Iowa.

Yes, that is an extreme case, but not so extreme as to be written off as something that only happened because of some "lunatic." The killer was a student. Just like you and me. The difference was that he took things just a bit too seriously, and when your life becomes nothing but a series of stressful events, you begin to lose it.

But something like that could never happen here, right? Wrong. We already have large groups of people hating other large groups of people. We divide ourselves into little nations of anger and hate, and if you can't take a hint from history, allow me to remind you this is not the brightest thing in the world to do.

No, I don't expect people to sit and hug and love one another. But I don't think it's too outrageous to expect everyone to accept everyone else. If you're angry, don't make it someone else's problem. Sure, some of you can argue that some of my columns in the past contradict the views which I am now expressing, but what you fail to notice is that those were intended to be humor columns. But no, most people are just always on the defensive, always looking for something to hate, that they fail to notice things which I think are pretty obvious. So instead of taking a humorous approach to things, I now am simply spelling my views out for you.

And I shouldn't have to do that.

Common Cause seeks level electoral playing field in Mass.

Jeremy P. Levinson

It has been noticed that though democratic, American political institutions have tended to experience less turnover than the old-time Supreme Soviet. Even through the "throw the bums out" sentiment of the past several years, incumbent politicians show an uncanny advantage at the ballot box.

For example, the 1990 Massachusetts State Senate elections were surrounded by an unprecedented anti-incumbent mood. Nonetheless, 87 percent of those seeking reelection retained their seats. Digging deeper, we find in over two-thirds of the races, incumbents were outspending challengers three to one. Here we find the pattern: Electoral politics seems driven in large part by money — who's got it and who doesn't.

In the early 80s, the Ward Commission found "more than any othger single factor, the present method of financing campaigns in Massachusetts creates a climate that breeds corruption."

Big money sustains a system in which a core of political careerists are kept in office by a network of well-funded private and special interests. Potential challengers simply don't have access to such funding and find it hard to run a campaign against entrenched big money.

With this kind of funding what impact does the contribution of the average citizen have? Sadly, less and less. In a sense, the electoral system has been privatized and average voters have less and less power to change it.

So what can be done to return control to the voters?

Common Cause is a non-partisan government watchdog organization devoted to just this problem: Bringing government back to the people. When politicians want to keep the workings of government behind closed doors, buried in the secret language of politics and funded by backroom bosses, Common Cause cries foul. This national organization works to put the spotlight on the chicanery that governs American politics more and more.

Here in Massachusetts, Common Cause has launched a "Campaign for Accountable Politics" that aims to stem the corrupting influence of big money in electoral politics. They are sponsoring an initiative petition that will make voters more important than money in the political process.

The petition will limit the amount of money politicians can take from the PACs and from lobbyists from outside the district. Campaign spending limits will help even the playing field and campaign disclosure requirements will force politicians to be truthful about their sources of funding.

Furthermore, reform of ethics and conflict-of-interest law will put a stop to political careerists who use office as a means of getting rich.

Not surprisingly, this act was voted down by the politicians themselves. So, Common Cause is bringing it to the people.

In the next three weeks, Common Cause will need to gather 70,000 signatures across the state. In Western Massachusetts, a region which knows what it's like to be ignored by state government, Common Cause is organizing a major petition drive. For the first time in recent state history, voter's signature can wield power.

Common Cause needs people to get involved. Given the state of the economy, they are offering to pay petitioners for their work. If you want to help bring state government back to the people — and a wage would help allow you to get involved — contact Common Cause. The executive director will be tabling on the Campus Center Concourse today and holding a meeting for those interested tonight at 7:30 in the Student Government Association office in the Student Union at UMass.

It isn't everyday that we get a chance to really help change what's wrong with government. With Common Cause's Campaign for acountable Government, we all have a chance to make a difference — and it won't cost us $2 million dollars.

A note to readers

Just another quick look ahead at the big doings at Editorial.

Please do keep those letters and columns coming. Letters should be short; 50 lines is the maximum amount. Cutting long letters down to size is difficult and we'd rather not have to.

Attach your name and local phone number and address as well.

Artists are also encouraged to send us material. Blue or black ink, please. Avoid using ballpoint pen.

Columns should be 50-70 double-spaced, typed lines.

Second, with a GEO job action a possibility sometime soon, we'd like to know what you think of the situation. Send a short letter explaining your position and why to the* Collegian, *113 Campus Center. Hopefully, we'll print a bunch of peoples' opinions on this important issue.

Rippopotamus rips it up at the Hatch

By GABRIEL JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

Rippopotamus
The Hatch
Thursday, Oct 31

Local Valley band Rippopotamus gave their audience a Halloween party to remember at the Hatch last Thursday night. Dressed as The Cat in the Hat, a ghoul, a cowboy, a funny-looking drummer and the Army, they layed out tunes that had as many ingredients in them as the band had members.

The first set started off stiff — but not stiff enough to keep their audience off the dance floor for longer than two songs. Indeed, the dancers were soon at the mercy of bassist Allyn's and funny-looking drummer Richard's rhythm rodeo. The dance floor thinned when fatigue set in, but soon swelled back up to crowded as Rippopotamus ploughed through funky waters.

Rippopotamus' sound is best described as fast, hard funk. A five member horn section broadened that sound, accenting the rhythms and adding a brassy flair to the music. The singer, Micheal Stevens, exemplified the band's live presence; musically serious but actively fun.

Trombonist Russel Bogartz took a turn at the mike, rapping out a re-grooved version of "Bust a Move" as well as a few original Rippo raps.

Dainas, the guitarist, kept things interesting by varying his style and guitar effects. Rippopotamus extras included a DJ scratching and two dancers who choreographed moves to one of the songs.

Perhaps the only criticism to be made is that the tempo never altered. It was always moderate to fast; there were no slow songs. No one seemed to mind, though, and in the spirit of trick-or-treat, the band tossed boxes of M&M's into the audience on several occasions to keep the collective blood-sugar level up.

Rippopotamus is a tight, grooving band with a high energy stage presence. They keep their audience interested and moving. Those looking for a fun night should look for where this band is

Hartford Civic Center
Tuesday, Oct 29

Van Halen defined — a hard rock group consisting of four 40-year-old men trying to be 20 again, and doing a damn good job of it.

Van Halen played their asses off at the Civic Center Tuesday night. Period. Surprisingly so, too. I went to the concert half expecting a rehash of all their past hit singles, slowed down and sung out of tune. As much as I hate to be wrong, I admit, I was.

Every song they played (and they played more than 20) was super hard-rockin' and executed to its highest potential.

The For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge tour has, up until now, received only mediocre reviews from such national reviewing powerhouses as Rolling Stone and The New York Times, and this is perhaps what drove the band to play so well. All I know is whoever wrote the other reviews I've read didn't see the Van Halen I did.

From the stage, lead singer Sammy Hagar said (meaning "yelled" in Halenese) he had been thinking about doing the Hartford show ever since the band had a couple days off to celebrate his 44th birthday, which was on Oct. 13.

"This is a fucking special show tonight!" screamed Sammy into his microphone. "This show is for all you people out there. It's not for us — we just want to play. We haven't been here for three years, so this is our thanks for being so patient!"

The band was on for nearly two straight hours and played an assortment of songs from every one of their albums except Diver Down (no big loss). But there were a few surprise numbers. Jimi Hendrix's searing electric guitar version of the National Anthem was played just before Van Halen took the stage. "Finish What Ya Started" and "Apolitical Blues", both off of 1988's OU812 album, are two songs no Van Halen buff would ever expect to hear in concert.

Astonishingly, Sammy Hagar also had his own solo. Hagar pulled off a terrific acoustic version of "Where Eagles Fly", from his 1989 Give to Live album.

Opening act Alice in Chains was clearly out of place. And although I wouldn't call them a bad band, they would've been a more appropriate opener for Metallica or Jane's Addiction. The crowd was not sorry to see them leave the stage.

I highly recommend you catch Van Halen on tour this year, but I can't see how they can possibly play so hard — so well — more than once in a great while. Maybe I just lucked out.

Spoleto inspiration of good conversation

By PAUL DEGEORGES
Collegian Staff

We were just at the transition point from being very hungry to being flat out ravenous when our table was finally ready last night at Spoleto, an Italian restaurant tucked down Crafts Avenue near the Town Hall in Northampton.

DINING OUT

We hadn't made a reservation (probably a good idea judging from this Sunday night) and the place was packed. But as is generally the case with Italian cuisine — the more hungry you are the more delicious, and ultimately, all the more satisfying the meal is.

Spoleto did not disappoint our voracious appetites. All of the standard dishes were available. (You know, Pasta __ fill in the blank. If it's Italian they serve it.) They also had a few specials, one of which we got the last of and were left with no doubt why the Lobster Ravioli was a popular item that night.

The usual appetizers like mozzarella with tomato and garlic bread were available along with some interesting Spoleto specials including a hot stuffed artichoke.

Desserts offered range from a traditional chocolate mousse to a slightly exotic fruit and madeliene concoction with a difficult to pronounce name.

Entrees and appetizers alike are priced to well within the college student "dining out" budget (and you get a salad with the choice of three fantastic dressings in addition to a hot loaf of bread with your meal.)

We found Spoleto a comfortable place to dine. The decor is colorful and light and the walls are highlighted with "Spoleto" art exhibit lithographs that, in addition to several nifty bent wire, wall-mounted sculptures give it a formal but comfortable feel.

There seems to be no real pretense at Spoleto's. Just an idea that good food in an enjoyable atmosphere with friendly service (but not that annoying overbearingly nice that makes your head feel like it'll explode), makes for a good eating experience.

Looking around at the hip, glib clientel Spoleto's draws it seemed that everyone would probably agree that this restaurant is undeniably a good place if you are in the mood to talk.

It's a relatively small restaurant, but there was a constant buzz of conversation and Spoleto seems to inspire that. We found ourselves paced well throughout our dinner. The initial hunger pangs were satisfied and we were left for a perfect amount of time to recover, babble and redevelop our urge to eat.

We never felt rushed at Spoleto, even after spending a good half hour over several espressos.

If pop art is a reflection of the coexistence of art and society then perhaps Spoleto could sort of be labelled pop dining. Aesthetically pleasing food that tastes good, served in an ergonomic surrounding and inspiring dialogue.

Nothing stood out as being the one exceptional aspect of Spoleto. Instead it left the impression of being a total experience — everything worked together to create an overall effect of casual, pleasing light (but most definitely filling) cuisine.

So the next time you're craving some Italian food and you're with a few people who like to talk a lot and eat a lot and you're looking for a moderately priced restaurant (with no muzak, thank heavens!) you might just want to take a trip to the giant smiling face neon sign of Spoleto, in Northampton.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Your involvement in a legal, financial or business deal proves very fortunate. A special gift or award is featured. Curb a tendency to overspend. Let your partner take the lead in romance.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Take care of important details rather than settling back in comfortable contemplation of your beautiful plan. Tend the trees; the forest will take care of itself! Dine with an old friend.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): A day with far-reaching significance. Romance could strike when and where you least expect it! A legal matter may soon be settled in your favor. Be discreet; keep your own counsel.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Grant or acknowledge a generous favor today. You have more supporters than you realize. Be frugal. This evening is the perfect time for a heart-to-heart talk.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Your dreams for the future could begin coming true today. No ideological differences should stand in your way. Gifts of love and money are not out of your reach. Be generous.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Luck and love dominate the day. But, if you scurry about here and there or say too much, you may drive opportunity away. Good things come to those who wait. Be patient.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Fresh business or financial gains are likely today. Dress to impress. Open up the lines of communication at work and you are certain to score a victory. Romance poses a challenge.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Influential people could provide a long-sought-after opportunity today. Make the most of it! A new environment has the feel of fame and fortune. Get out and socialize tonight.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may get the chance to turn a career corner now. Put your best foot forward at a meeting. Make your point and then be quiet. Higher-ups need time to reflect on your arguments.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A great day to buy or sell real estate. Home life is fairly harmonious. A budget revision favors you and your family. Protect your reputation by keeping your behavior completely above reproach.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be money-wise today. Unpaid debts can cast a dark shadow. Pay up if you can. You are at a juncture where boldness could work against you. Be conservative in romance. Avoid making impulsive promises.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): An office or domestic problem could demand too much of your time today. Roll with the punches. Romance thrives on consideration. Be more sensitive to the feelings of your mate.

Patriots give Bills a run for the money

By JOHN F. BONFATTI
Associated Press

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — For a team who went 1-15 last year, the New England Patriots are giving fits to some of the NFL's best teams this season.

After upsets over Houston and Minnesota, and a near upset over Denver last week, the plucky Patriots kept close to the high-scoring Buffalo Bills for most of the game yesterday before succumbing 22-17.

Field goals — three by Buffalo's Scott Norwood and two missed by New England's Jason Stauvrosky — were the difference as the Bills won their 16th straight at Rich Stadium and improved to 8-1 and dropping the Patriots to 3-6.

The Patriots also benefitted from two muffed punts to Buffalo's Al Edwards that set up short touchdown runs by rookie Leonard Russell, who got his second 100-yard rushing game in a row with 106 yards in 26 carries.

Edwards' first muff came late in the third quarter and led to Russell's 1-yard touchdown run on the last play of the quarter. It was the Patriot's first touchdown in seven quarters and cut Buffalo's lead to 13-10.

Edwards' second muff gave the Patriots the ball on the Buffalo 39 in the fourth quarter. Eight plays after Chris Gannon recovered for New England, Russell scored on a 3-yard run that brought the Patriots to within four.

But Buffalo, which has the lowest average time of possession in the league, mostly because it moves to quickly down the field, held the ball for most of the final four minutes to take the win.

Some post-season dreamin'

Minutewomen overcome Rutgers, 2-1

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team kept it's post-season dreams alive yesterday as it defeated Rutgers 2-1 in overtime.

"I thought the play would be to flick the ball but I stopped it instead," Wilkins said. "I turned and just decided to shoot. It was with my left foot, my weaker foot, but I figured I had the leg to do it. I didn't think it was going in but Woody [Michele Woddside] called it as it was in the air."

"That shot looked good from here," UMass coach Jim Rudy. "That's the Paula Wilkins I recruited. It was great to see that one go in, she's hung in there with injuries, played in pain and got the results."

UMass (14-4), ranked No. 10 in the nation, had a difficult time putting away the Lady Knights. Rutgers (10-7-1) played a strong game, controlling the play at points.

"Rutgers was the best team that we've played all season," Rudy said. "They were better than any of the top teams we played."

The game was a wild one with exciting end to end play. UMass got on the board in the first half on a Kim Eynard penalty shot, after a hand ball in the goal crease. Eynard placed the shot in the far left corner.

Rutgers battled back to tie the game on a Denise Reddy goal with 27 minutes remaining. From there both teams had a handful of great scoring opportunities down the stretch.

With 11:45 remaining, UMass' Polly Hackathorn crossed the ball from the left flank to Barbara Verdoliva. Verdoliva put a good shot on goalkeeper Saskia Webber and Colleen Miliken just missed the net on the rebound.

45 seconds later Heidi Kocher served a long shot in on Webber. Webber came out of the net to make the play but gave up the rebound. In the ensuing scramble, no UMass player could get a decent shot on the empty net.

With three minutes left in regulation UMass had it's best opportunity. With eight Minutewomen pressing the net, the ball got loose in front. A wild scene followed with UMass taking three shots, Webber making two saves, and a Rutgers defensemen making a kick save that would make Andy Moog jealous. The ball ended up out of bounds after clanking off the crossbar.

UMass goalie Briana Scurry made three saves on the day to finish the regular season 14-4, with 12 shutouts and a goals against average of 0.44.

As for the NCAA tournament, the bids were handed out late Sunday night. The top two teams in each region of the country, the North, South, Mid-West and West each recieve an automatic bid. There are also four at-large bids awarded, which UMass is a candidate for. The Minutewomen have fared well against top twenty teams, going 8-3 verse ranked opponents. However, although they would appear to be a shoe in, the criteria for which the teams are selected is not well defined and that worries Rudy.

"I think we're a bit of a long shot," he said. "I'm a cynic, since we got screwed last year, but I think we could get passed up and teams that we've beaten could get in ahead of us. Central Florida, George Mason and California could make it."

The Minutewomen, clearly a tournament caliber team, defeated all three of those teams this season.

each of UMass' games could be its last. The thought that the University of Massachusetts men's soccer program is on its last leg often dwells on the players' minds.

"We're always thinking about that," Jacobs said. "Every game we play we hope we're taking a step towards saving this program, for next season, and hopefully for good."

Minutemen get back on track

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

FOXBORO — In front of a sparse 4,620 people at Foxboro Stadium, the University of Massachusetts football team (3-5) snapped its three-game losing streak Saturday with a 27-12 drubbing of Northeastern (4-4).

Maybe it was the professional football field, with the flourescent goal posts, because certainly it was not the aura the team that normally plays there left behind, but this was UMass football at its best.

The offense rushed for 333 yards and scored 27 points. The defense held the opposition to 255 total yards (85 on the ground) and allowed only 12 points. The end result: a win.

After a Ralph Barone to Dan Daponde touchdown pass put the Huskies ahead 12-10 midway through the third quarter, Jerome Bledsoe (28 rushes for 195 yards) went to work, leading the Minutemen 63 yards into the end zone in three plays to give UMass a 16-12 lead which they would never surrender.

Bledsoe took a handoff from Dave McGovern and ran 55 yards to the Northeastern three-yard line. The following play he plunged into the end zone for six points. McGovern converted the two-point conversion to give the Minutemen an 18-12 lead.

After the game at Connecticut, Coach Jim Reid was upset Bledsoe did not get the ball enough. He said Thursday they would definitely get him the ball, and they did.

Bledsoe went over 100 yards for the seventh straight game to become the third player in UMass history to rush for over 1,000 yards in a season. Garry Pearson was the last to accomplish the feat, when he rushed for 1,631 (the most ever by a UMass player in a single season) in 1982.

"Bledsoe's a good running back, he's a solid hard-nosed kid," said Northeastern coach Barry Gallup.

Last year's Yankee Conference Rookie-of-the-Year, John Johnson, who replaced an ailing Bledsoe (bruised shoulder) sealed Northeastern's fate when he broke a 61-yard TD run to give UMass a 27-12 lead with 7:15 left in the fourth quarter.

Johnson, who rushed for over 100 yards three times last season, gained 102 yards for the first time this year.

"I felt we were a dominating football team," Reid said. "This is exactly what we needed to have."

Northeastern jumped out of the box quickly as Barone threw a screen pass to Tony Morgan who broke a Matt Tulley tackle and ran 34 yards for the score, to give the Huskies a 6-0 lead.

Jim Maguire, whose field goal kicking game looked good but whose punting game was horrible, nailed a 34-yard field goal to pull the Minutemen within three points. He later connected on a 30-yard field goal. Maguire punted six times, and averaged only 27.2 yards per punt including a five-yarder.

The Minutemen took a 10-6 lead with 0:43 to play in the first half. McGovern capped an 11-play, 67-yard drive with a one-yard scamper.

"McGovern completed a couple of good balls," Reid said. "He gave us poise. He stayed right in the pocket and got the ball to the receivers."

McGovern's numbers were not all that impressive, he completed four-of-nine passes for 62 yards and was sacked three times, but when you rush for 333 yards, how good does the quarterback have to be?

"Jerome played a great game, he's the guy we're going to go to," McGovern said. "We're going to try and get on a roll and finish the season with a winning record."

Bledsoe said, "If me getting 100 yards a game will help UMass win, then I'm going to keep doing it."

Men's soccer bound for A-10 Tourney

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The 1991 season may be the last for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, but if it is, it's going out with a bang.

By virtue of George Washington's 2-0 win over West Virginia on Saturday, the Minutemen clinched the fourth spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament to be held from Nov. 8-10 at the University of Rhode Island.

UMass will face Rutgers University, the nation's No. 1 team, in the tournament's first round. Rutgers handed UMass a 6-2 loss earlier this season. The Scarlet Knights devastated the Minutemen with their remarkable talent both on offense and defense. But UMass doesn't think they're unbeatable.

"We had them [Rutgers] last time we played them, but it seemed to slip away," said forward Randy Jacobs. "We just need every guy to play 110 percent [in order to beat Rutgers]."

Jacobs' teammate Todd Kylish said, "Rutgers is really dangerous in the open field, so we've got to play tough defense and move the ball quickly."

As Kylish puts it, the Minutemen are "carrying a lot of momentum" following two victories over the weekend: a 1-0 defeat of the Maine Black Bears on Saturday, and a 2-1 win against the Dartmouth Big Green Sunday.

UMass freshman Steve Scott was the only player to put one in the net in Saturday's contest with Maine, but it was all UMass goalie Jonathan Gruber would need to record his ninth shutout of the season.

The Minutemen's win over Dartmouth, a make-up game originally scheduled for Sept. 28, was worth more than a month's wait. UMass took an early 1-0 lead on a Jacobs goal, but it wouldn't be enough. With about 20 minutes left in the game, Dartmouth fought back to tie the match at 1-1.

However, about five minutes later, Minuteman Ray Cunha scored what proved to be the game-winner.

The two wins put UMass' record at 10-4-4, with one regular season game left to play, against Providence University on Tuesday, Nov. 5, in Providence.

Following the Providence match,

McCoy's free throws sink Marathon Oil

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

A less than capacity crowd at the Curry Hicks Cage watched Jim McCoy sink two free throws with six seconds left to give the University of Massachusetts a 94-92 exhibition game win over Marathon Oil yesterday.

Marathon Oil gained the momentum and the lead with a 24-11 run which put them ahead 83-81 with 4:36 to play.

With the game seemingly slipping away, the Minutemen went to their go-to-guy, McCoy, to bail out the win.

In the final 1:20, McCoy on three different occasions tied or put the Minutemen ahead. He buried a foul line jumper to give the Minutemen a 90-89 lead. Then, after Eric Turner (27 points) hit three straight foul shots, McCoy (24 points on 9-of-17 shooting) connected on a short jumper to tie the game at 92-92.

Marathon Oil's Chad Tucker missed a short hook with :40 seconds to play and the ball bounced out of bounds off a Marathon Oil player setting up McCoy's game winning foul shots.

In the first half, the Minutemen looked sharp, as they connected on 52 percent of their shots, paced by Harper Williams' 20 points on 10-of-12 shooting and 10 rebounds. He finished with 21 points and 15 rebounds.

Williams scored UMass' final eight points of the first half. The last two resulted from a pretty feed from William Herndon (13 points) in which he found Williams cutting down the lane.

On several occasions, Williams, Herndon and McCoy worked the ball deftly to each other for easy baskets.

Leading 32-31, the Minutemen opened up a quick 12 point lead in just 1:24. A Mike Williams bank shot, two McCoy baskets and free throw, a Herndon dunk and a Harper Williams put back, gave the Minutemen a 43-31 lead, which would expand to 53-39 by halftime.

"I sat down in the trainers room [at halftime] and said, 'we're gonna be pretty good,'" said UMass coach John Calipari.

The Minutemen exchanged baskets with Marathon Oil and allowed them to stay within striking distance for the first seven minutes of the second half.

Marathon Oil went on an 11-2 run to pull within five, 70-65 with 10:41 to play. During the run, Richard Morgan (20 points) snuck behind the UMass defense twice for layups forcing the Minutemen to call timeout.

"We started to relax in the second half," McCoy said. "We all have to understand that we have to play 100 percent if we're gonna win."

Trailing 83-81, Tony Barbee (17 points) hit a leaner to tie the game. Todd May (19 points) then hit from international waters to put Marathon Oil up 86-83. Barbee and Jerome Malloy each sank a free throw and Mike Williams put UMass ahead 87-86.

"I think the freshman are gonna really help us," Calipari said. "I thought Lou [Roe] rebounded well, I liked Mike Williams' game, and I thought Scott [Drapeau] played well. You can see Jerome [Malloy] can hit the three."

Calipari said after the game that Jeff Meyer will be redshirted. He also said Ted Cottrell and Derek Kellogg are considering being redshirted.

Bledsoe goes over 1,000 yards

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

After the University of Massachusetts football team's loss two weeks ago to Connecticut, coach Jim Reid was unhappy he didn't see Jerome Bledsoe carry the ball more. After yesterday's victory over Northeastern, Reid couldn't believe what he was seeing when Bledsoe had the ball.

"On one play . .[Jerome] got sandwiched, bounced backwards, twisted around, jumped over somebody and gained another six yards," Reid explained.

"I turned around and said to one of my coaches, did I just see what I saw?" he said.

The UMass tailback was at his best Saturday, as he displayed powerful and elusive running which led to 195 hard-fought yards.

"I had to do a lot of cutting, breaking tackles and reading [the defense]," the senior from Burlington Township, New Jersey said.

Bledsoe's longest gain of the afternoon, a season-high 55-yarder, turned out to be his easiest as he sprinted through a gaping hole created by the offensive line.

"It was just a plain, off-tackle run," he said. "I got a big hole and stopped to watch [flanker] Eric Thimas to see what he was going to do, I decided to go inside and just kept on going."

With the gain, Bledsoe became one of only three players in UMass history to eclipse the 1,000-yard mark in a season. By the end of the afternoon, Bledsoe totaled 1,030 yards on the ground, placing him fourth on the all-time UMass season rushing yardage list.

Garry Pearson tops the UMass list for most yards rushing in a season, 1,631 in 1982.

Bledsoe rumbled for 110 yards by halftime, the seventh straight game he has rushed for 100 or more this season. Entering the contest, he needed 165 yards to reach 1,000 for the season.

"I whispered to Jerome before the game, [offensive line coach] John Strollo thinks you can be a 1,000-yard rusher after this game," Reid said. "Jerome said, 'We'll see what happens.'"

Bledsoe was surprised when told he reached the mark, and was quick to credit the offensive line.

"Our offensive line is opening holes and is getting better and better as the season goes on," he said.

Offensive tackle Kai Dietiker said, "It's a big inspiration for us to block for Jerome. There could be a little hole where many running backs may get two, three yards and Jerome gets seven, eight."

Bledsoe had 238 all-purpose yards, 60 percent of UMass' total offensive output.

"Jerome just wants the ball," offensive coordinator Doug Berry said. "He wants to be in charge and carry the team every week. When you've got a back who wants the ball that's the ultimate."

Delegates head home with frustrations, hope

By RUTH SINAI
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Arabs and Israelis went home yesterday with mixed feelings of frustration and anticipation after an intense foray into the realm of peace. Israel and Syria were mired in recriminations, but promised to meet again.

The talks smashed a 43-year taboo on direct Israeli-Arab talks, setting in motion a process of face-to-face negotiations to resolve one of the most intractable regional conflicts in the world.

The United States and Soviet Union sponsored the talks, and President Bush's assessment was: "We have a long way to go and interruptions will probably occur, but hopes are bright."

The brightest are for negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians living under its military rule in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The dimmest are for a thaw between Israel and Syria, the region's most bitter foes.

I would like to express our regret for leaving this city without having tangible results," said Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa.

Hard-line Israelis inaugurated a new Jewish settlement in the Golan Heights just hours after the talks ended. Syria's main demand is for the return of the Golan Heights, captured by Israel in the 1967 Mideast war.

There were also reports that Israeli troops shelled the positions of radical Muslim guerrillas in Lebanon.

In the Iranian capital of Tehran, Shiite Muslim demonstrators burned American and Israeli flags and an effigy of Uncle Sam outside the former U.S. Embassy compound to mark its takeover 13 years ago by Iranian radicals.

The late-night talks in Madrid were the first-ever direct discussion between Israel and Syria and they lasted five hours, into the early hours on Monday. The enemies failed to move even an inch from their positions.

Syria refused an Israeli request to establish direct contacts to arrange the site for the next round of talks, scheduled later this month.

Both agreed to meet again — if the United States comes up with an acceptable location. Officials on both sides said Washington or other sites in North America were possible.

An Israeli spokesman said yesterday that Israel would still prefer that the talks be held alternately in Israel and Syria, or along their border. Syria remained just as adamantly in favor of a neutral site and accused Israel of being intransigent.

Israel's delegates "talked about everything except the land that the Israeli's occupied and have been occupying for the last 24 years. That is the Golan Heights," al-Sharaa said.

The Israeli's countered that Syria's demand for Israeli concessions dominated the meeting. "If they keep up their demands, there will not be any progress," said Israeli spokesman Yossi Olmert.

Syria stuck to its long-held position that Israel must give up lands captured in 1967 from the Syrians, the Jordanians and the Egyptians, before anything else was discussed.

Israel repeatedly insisted territorial concessions were unrelated to its goal — a peace treaty with Syria.

Syria reiterated its refusal to attend regional talks that are to begin in about three weeks among the countries of the region to debate issues such as arms control and water resources.

Jordan said it would attend the regional discussions.

During nearly five hours of talks on Sunday, Israel and a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation agreed on a two-track approach — Israel will negotiate separately with the Jordanians and the Palestinians.

That "will lay to rest forever that Jordan is Palestine," said Jordan's chief delegate, Abdul-Salam Majali.

Schools still separate, top educator asserts

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Awash in utter despair, American schools are more racially and economically segregated than at the height of the civil rights movement, said a top educator and author last night.

"Public schools in the United States remain still separate, still unequal and in every section of the country, more separate and more unequal," Jonathan Kozol said in his talk on educational inequities in America, sponsored by the School of Education, the Odyssey Bookshop and Random House.

In an hour and a half lecture to a standing-room only audience at Bowker auditorium, Kozol recounted starting his education career teaching "academically demolished" students in Roxbury with practically "racist" texts during Boston's bitter school desegregation crisis.

Kozol was fired in a celebrated episode for reading to the students "too advanced" poems of Robert Frost and Langston Hughes.

That material formed his first book in 1967, "Death at an Early Age," an inside view of segregated schools in Boston, which he penned at age 24.

Twenty-four years later, he has found an ever-widening gap between rich and poor schools in America in his latest book and eighth nonfiction work, "Savage Inequalities: Children in America's Schools," in which Kozol visited urban classrooms in more than 30 communities and 20 states across the country.

He visited a South Bronx school where 1,300 primarily Black and Hispanic students crowd into a skating rink where water leaks through the roof like a waterfall. There are no windows, no place to play and a near-empty library, he said.

When he asked one teacher where the encyclopedias were, the teacher said, "We don't have encyclopedias, that's for the suburbs."

He visited kindergarten classes in the second-poorest neighborhood in Chicago where he said the children look so innocent and happy yet remain unaware of the bleak future that awaits them.

"These children are entirely innocent. Their only crime is to be poor in a rich society," Kozol said. He pointed out the great gulf between government spending allocations on students in rich and poor school districts.

In Camden, New Jersey, $4,000 is spent per student while the wealthy community of Great Neck allocates $16,000 per student.

"There is something evil about a nation that permits this," Kozol said. "The climate of the times, unfortunately is not compassionate."

He said the American school system has

2nd cultural center closed

Latin center joins Asian center in protest

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

Members of the Latin American Cultural Center said last night they will attempt to close their center, joining Asian students who said last month that they will shut down the United Asia Cultural Center.

At what was to be their second anniversary and the opening of the First National Latin American Heritage Month at UMass, Elliot Monteverde Torres, a cultural center representative, said the members will close the center.

"This 10-by-15-foot room which Whitmore's 'colonial administration' calls a cultural center is an insult to our people and as of tonight, it is closed," he said.

Torres said that he was disappointed Chancellor Richard O'Brien, who was scheduled to speak, failed to attend the event. Torres criticized the administration for having historically shown "lack of support and commitment to campus minorities."

The Asia Cultural Center said it would close on Oct. 21 in protest of "tokenism" on the part of the UMass administration.

Jose Bou, financial aid advisor of the Bilingual Collegiate Program and former Cultural Center liaison, said, "[Minorities] make the University look good and the administration in turn treats us like third class citizens."

"[The University] is a long way from becoming a truly multicultural institution — out of 1,200 or so faculty members in this campus, only 26 are Hispanic," said Javier Cevallos, a professor of the Spanish department.

Twenty students from the Asian community were present with picket signs carrying slogans such as "Exposing the hypocrisy" in support of the closing of the been split into "two nations, two societies, two absolutely different worlds. To be quite honest, I think this nation is inviting an apocalypse."

Massachusetts is just as bad, Kozol said, adding state expenditure for education in this state ranks 49th in the nation. He visited Holyoke last week where recently a third of the teaching staff had been laid off.

He said both Gov. William Weld and President Bush have pledged to improve American schools without further increases in funding — a virtual impossibility, Kozol said.

"If you don't believe money makes a difference, you send your kids to schools in Camden, N.J.," Kozol said. "It's such a bizarre question that money might be the answer to poverty."

Kozol finally urged all young people to take up the struggle for equality in American education.

"I hope that some of the students here ... will use their strength and energy to make America a decent land that it is not, but with your help, it may someday be," he said.

Craft Shop to re-open

New director invites all to participate

By KIM DIETEL
Collegian Correspondent

Are you tired of counting all the panels on the ceiling of the library? It's time to leave it all behind and make a candle or stain some glass at the Craft Shop.

"We want people to come in, be creative and have fun," said Susan Bourque, the new director of the Craft Shop.

The Craft Shop is located on the second floor of the Student Union across from the Hatch. It offers instruction and tools for a variety of crafts from candle making to silk screening to jewelry making. Some materials are available or students can bring their own.

"We purchased a lot of stuff here but we're not here for profit at all," Bourque said. "We're here for the students."

Bourque, who was hired last week, would like to open the shop by Nov. 18. The shop has been closed since May when the previous director left the job.

Students can come in on a walk-in basis or attend a variety of scheduled workshops," she said.

"We have workshops with guaranteed one-on-one instruction. Students can come in absolutely cold, " said Bourque. "We'll have a well-informed staff."

Bourque, a recent University graduate with a masters of fine arts in ceramics, targets the daytime hours to be around 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. with workshops scheduled for the evenings.

"A lot will be similar as before," she said. "My hope is that some of the old staff will be rehired."

In early December, the shop will be hosting a craft fair in the Campus Center. Bourque said the fair will consist of New England artists and crafts people along with some student contributions.

"I used to participate in the craft fair at UMass as a vendor," she said. "It brings attention to the craft."

Possibility of statehood for Quebec discussed

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

A University of British Columbia political science professor addressed the current trifold problem of Quebec statehood versus English Canadian federation yesterday in a conference at the Campus Center.

Phillip Resnick said most Canadians are "unprepared to weaken the federation of Canada to please Quebec" and therefore "a new looser agreement between Quebec and Canada must be reached."

Quebec is a truly distinct culture, one which predates the Federation of Canada in 1867, and the present movement for Quebec separation rises from the quiet revolution of the 1960s which saw the economic power switch from English speakers' hands to French speakers', Resnick said to a small audience.

Resnick said "Quebec's vision of federalization entails a limited power base for the federal government while the provincial government would gain more power over the province."

Resnick downplayed the separation of a Quebec state saying many obstacles would have to be addressed before such a move could occur.

"Issues such as native sovereignty, native land claims, borders, currency and the possibility of a splintering power position in trade relations with that great southern neighbor of ours, the U.S., are all major concerns for Canadians," he said.

Resnick also outlined a personal proposal which would enable a new relationship between Quebec and Canada to exist. "A Parliament could be formed where Quebec and Canada would share in the decision-making which affect regional differences over the nine provinces and the two territories," he said.

"Canada is unwilling to allow Quebec to dictate the course of Canada as well as the Province of Quebec," he said. "Simply reshuffling the deck in the federal government is not going to do."

Resnick said Quebec's political parties are attempting to find a formula which could even out an acceptable referendum, which would first have to be voted upon by the population of Quebec before it could reach the federal level.

The third party of concern in the separation movement said Resnick are the indigenous populations.

"The Cree do not seem too eager to be placed under the jurisdiction of an independent Quebec and seem to favor the development of a new relationship," he said.

Late last month the Cree Grand council said if Quebec were to succeed, the Cree would also do so and take 80 percent of Quebec with them. The Cree are attempting to stall the development of the James Bay II project which would flood vast amounts of Cree land for inexpensive electricity.

Resnick said the current Canadian constitutional crisis is not unlike the Eastern Europe situation. Resnick's visit was sponsored by the Five-College Canadian Studies program.

Nose injury received in assault

Compiled by JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Police said A 19-year-old male was taken to University Health Services from Coolidge Residence Hall Friday night with a nose injury sustained during an earlier assault. Both parties were apprised of how to seek court complaints, police said.

The cause of a fire alarm early Saturday morning in John Quincy Adams was listed as a discarded cigarette in a trash barrel on the 19th floor.

ARRESTS:

• Brian O. Allen, 18, of Boston, was arrested Friday night for allegedly stealing a mountain bike and was charged with larceny over $250.

LARCENY:

• An electrical contractor reported on Friday morning that a portable generator was stolen from the Graduate Research Center Chiller Facility in Lot 26. The value was $1,200.

• A woman in Brown Residence Hall reported the theft of a Sony compact disc cassette radio from her room Sunday afternoon. The value was estimated at $200.

• A man in Kennedy Residence Hall reported Saturday night that his telephone was stolen after he left his unlocked room for a brief period. The value was approximately $100.

VANDALISM:

• A woman reported Friday morning that the entire side of her vehicle was scratched down to the bare metal in Lot 11. Estimated damages were $300.

Enrollment questions face private colleges

BOSTON (AP) — New England's private colleges and universities fearing a drop in enrollment, increased scholarships and recruited more foreign students.

And, although institutions will deny it, observers told the Boston Globe that admissions standards were lowered.

Freshman enrollment did drop as expected at some colleges, but the Globe said its survey of 32 Massachusetts institutions found it increased, by as much as 36 percent, at half of them.

Some, including Boston College and Emerson College, over compensated in accepting new students and faced overcrowding and housing problems.

Most institutions increased the amounts of financial aid offered incoming students, and this strained other parts of their budgets.

Some greatly increased enrollments of foreign students, changing the composition of their campuses.

And, the institutions face a similar shortage of teen-age high school graduates next year.

Nationally, the drop in the number of high school graduates is figured at 25 percent. But in New England, where the population has dropped, the decrease in 18-year-old high school graduates is figured at 40 percent.

College admission officials use "conversion formulas." They accept a certain number of applicants and expect a certain number of those they accept to enroll in their institutions.

A year ago, the formulas used by many colleges did not produce enough students, and several had to scramble for students, often accepting all on their waiting lists, the Globe said.

Many changed their conversion formulas this year, said observers, including Clare Cotton, president of the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities of Massachusetts.

But few will admit it because none wants to be seen as less selctive in admitting more students.

Admissions standards determine guidebook rankings of highly selective and very selective.

Some institutions will manipulate cumulative test scores and the class rank of admitted freshmen to hold on to their admissions rankings, said Robert Dunn, professor of economics at George Washington University.

"It's like a game of liar's poker," said John C. Hoy, president of the New England Board of Higher Education. "The fact is, they were all scared to death, and they all admitted more students, because no one knew what they would end up with after Labor Day.

"That standards have held up through all of this is, frankly, a myth," he said.

He figures that about 80 percent of all New England colleges and universities essentially have open enrollments. "If you're a high school graduate, it's not difficult to be admitted," he said.

"If colleges are going to look at diversity in a constructive kind of way; if we measure those students in traditional ways, particularly with the SAT, we're going to look lousy," said William Holmes, president of Simmons College.

"In the longer haul, as colleges face the broader range of the population — which we have to educate, in our own self-interest and in the national self interest — we have got to find ways of doing our business differently, so we're more accepting and supportive of students who do not meet traditional standards of excellence," he said.

Jews and intermarriage

Aspects of interfaith marriage discussed

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

People in intermarriages were once thought to be fleeing from their past, but today intermarriage is increasingly seen as an opportunity, said an author yesterday during a lecture sponsored by the Hillel House of Smith College.

According to Susan Weidman Schnieder, the editor in chief of Lilith, a Jewish feminist magazine, over half the Jewish population is married to a non-Jewish person.

"Today the desire to stay connected to [one's] past has caused a diminution of converts," she said.

"Jewish men before they marry-out have had interfaith dating while for Jewish women [the person they marry] is usually the first non-Jewish person they have ever dated," said Schneider.

"Jewish women start to feel their biological clock ticking," she said.

Schneider said another contributing factor is the diminished pool of male Jewish peers, since Jewish men tend to marry earlier. "Jewish people not accepted by their community marry-out," said Schneider, who is the author of three books, one on intermarriage.

The Jewish college-educated people are usually the ones most accepted in their community, while Jewish people with little schooling are not accepted, she said.

"It is extremely difficult for Jewish people to say what being Jewish is about," said Schneider, a 1966 Case Western Reserve University graduate, while Irish, Hispanics, Blacks and Italians all have set definitions of what they will stress in their families, such as cultural language, family closeness or history of their backgrounds.

"Women convert more than men to accommodate to the religion of the man," she said.

She said this is because women tend to recognize men's need for being Jewish or Catholic, while it is harder for men to articulate this factor.

People in intermarriages are afraid to admit to problems in the marriage, said Schneider.

But she warned not to allow children of mixed marriages to "pick up ambivalances" of having one parent Christian and another Jewish.

"An intermarriage family needs to form a single identity or it will become split at the root," said Schneider.

Correction

Due to a reporting error, the dates for pre-registration and when students will be able to get their Personal Identification Numbers were incorrect. Pre-registration will be from Nov. 14 to Nov. 20 and Personal Identification Numbers will be available starting Nov. 14.

The headline on the Associated Press story on Monday was incorrect. The headline should have read "Ph.d. Student Takes Four Lives at U. of Iowa."

The Collegian regrets the errors.

"I used to be technologically deficient, and had no practical skills other than Nintendo. Then I went to work at the Collegian. Now I can pump up my resume with all kinds of neat things.

"[Asian students] are extremely proud that the Latin American Cultural Center has joined us in solidarity and are bringing forth similar issues which confront their community as well as all minorities," said Alexander Nguyen, a representative of the Asian cultural center.

"We have now collectively taken two cultural centers away from UMass and refuse to be used as multicultural advertisement any longer," he said.

Carlos Castillo, a UMass senior and cultural center staff member said he was disappointed and frustrated after moving midsemester from Sylvan to Southwest in order to be closer to the cultural center.

"I was shocked that it has come to this," said Castillo. "I will continue to be involved." He said he supports the action.

Asian students, the Latin American Cultural Center, and the New WORLD Theater, will hold a joint press conference, "Exposing UMass' Multicultural Facade," on Thursday at 10 a.m. in the main lounge of Skinner Hall.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Garbage, garbage, garbage ... If it weren't for garbage, you couldn't have clean because everything would be clean and like you know there wouldn't be any need for the word "clean" because like you know everything would be clean and there would be no reason to call stuff dirty cause like without garbage nothing gets dirty ... Get it?

If the GEO strike succeeds, who's gonna pay for it?

Do your friends use you as a model for their anthropology presentations?

Wanna have some fun with your professor? Try turning in your 15-page final project written on 300 etch-a-sketches. Just don't shake them up before you turn them in. And if you like this stuff I've got a whole slew of ideas for fun with Slinkys and Jell-O Pudding pops.

Graffiti O' the week! Drum roll please! This week's delectable defacement comes from Amy Carrier from Orchard Hill. Amy, who calls me the Marcster, tells me that a bathroom somewhere on campus contains this little adage: "Flush twice. Franklin D.C. is far away." Yech.

Oh yes ... a little message for GTI, the vandal that asked me to go out and view his work at the Fine Arts Center. Didn't get a chance to go out and see it last week ... sorry.

O.K., also in the mailbag this week was an interesting quote submitted by an unknown party (I hate that) and said by an unknown party (I hate that as well). "I'm going to bring sex back to the Valley, if I have to [expletive] everyone myself."

Here's a secret message for undergraduates only: the more revenue taken away from the University the higher your fees will soar and that many more of your classmates will unwillingly disappear from campus.

With our new office furniture, someone told me that it looks sort of like the Student Activities Office. I disagree, there's work being done down here.

Marc Elliott

Ted wanted to be in this column. Jen didn't have a choice.

With all the press the Nostradamus rumors got last week, any mass murderers sneaking into Q, Z, R and &-shaped residence halls on Halloween would have tripped over Geraldo Rivera on his way in.

Looking for Christmas shopping ideas? Here's one that's fun for the whole family! The Seat Controller, invented by Bill Glickman, is an automatic toilet seat lifter controlled by a foot pedal (no Marc's not joking — this thing really exists and people are really trying to sell it). "Unlike a shirt or a tie, the Seat Controller is a gift he definitely will use every day, forever," says the press release sent along with the brochure. I love the slogan for this one: "Easy up, always down!" In fact, I'm so short of material this week and I like this press release so much that I'm going to share some more of it with you: "Just think guys, you will never have to bend down again to raise that seat! More importantly, you will never be embarrassed again for not raising the seat, or even more dreadful, accidentally leaving the seat up. Women now can be assured a late night trip to the bathroom will not become an unexpected and aggravating midnight dip. Women will also appreciate having a cleaner seat and never hear the seat bang again, especially while sleeping. An adjustable deceleration pump prevents the banging by varying the descent speed of the seat." So, basically this is for women who live with men that are too boneheaded to pee straight.

The name is Elliott with two t's and two l's — sort of redundant.

The best way to end a paragraph is with a period. And no, the author doesn't get any credit for that.

Yes, yes, yes ... don't cry now ... the column's over and you're going to have wait until next week when I'll steal more of my friends' jokes and print them in the newspaper. If you have submissions for Graffiti of the Week or just have something to spout off on or just plain comment or even if you think I'm a great big bagel dog wearing a wool sweater, send me mail! Whine, whine, whine. Address it to Joe Bob Elliott the fool with the goat and drop it off in 113 Campus Center (The Collegian).

Until next week, remember, "There's always room for Jell-O."

What's the penalty for irresponsible writers?

I was not surprised when I read "Death penalty for murderers, drug dealers" [Collegian, November 1] by Michael Morrissey. It follows the trend of the recent years, the ideology of "fast action," "kill-the-enemy," "drastic measures," etc. The problem I have with this particular ideology is that in their hurry, most of the conservatives (it seems to me a vast majority, even in this so-called "liberal" university) don't have the time to think before they act.

They "solve" the problems without further notice, they "discover" the solutions almost always in the same simplistic manner: "Well," says Mr. Morrissey — whom, although I don't now personally, I feel I've known for years, "if the drug dealers/murderers are killing us, then we should kill." Pretty simple. Of course, at some point in his article, he mixes up things by asking, "Don't you have to be pretty insane to kill someone?" Yes, you do ...

I could go on arguing in favor of the criminalization of the death penalty, but truly, I don't find that the exact subject is the biggest problem. The problem is the ease with which we're ready to take positions in certain serious subjects without being — even slightly — informed about all their aspects. That's what I call Mr. Morrissey's article: uninformed. I also call it "naive," but that has to do with my beliefs so I leave it out. But uninformed it surely is.

When Mr. Morrissey writes about the costs of an execution, he doesn't even suspect how high they are (almost $2 million — more than twice as much as imprisoning the defendant for life). And this is "our money." But even the inaccuracies didn't bother me as much as the roles that we give nowadays to ourselves: Mr. Bush is the "Warrior" ("War on Drugs," "War in the Gulf," etc.), Mr. Clarence Thomas is the "Morality Defender," and Mr. Morrissey is the "Terminator" ("eliminate them," "an eye for an eye," "kill the enemy," etc.) Sure.

I think the most serious part of the article was summarized in Mr. Morrissey's question: "If our society isn't governed by laws, then what is it governed by?" I feel I know the answer: tolerance. Tolerance for the deviants (the enemy), tolerance for the "potheads," tolerance for you, Mr. Morrissey, and your extreme views about human life. That's all we've got in days like these: simple tolerance ...

Death not an answer

I am writing in response to Michael Morrissey's article, "Death penalty for murderers, drug dealers" [Collegian, November 1]. In his article, he suggests executing all murderers and drug dealers as a solution to the violence and drug problems in the U.S.

First, even if there are people who "deserve" to "fry," as Mr. Morrissey would put it, the death penalty does not work because it is racially biased. Black killers of Whites are far more likely to be executed than White or Black killers of Blacks. People, for the most part, get outraged when Blacks kill Whites but could not care less when Blacks kill each other. In Georgia, for instance, 60 percent of all homicide victims are Black, yet killers of White victims are 10 times more likely to be sentenced to death than killers of Black victims. It is a sad but true fact that Black lives aren't valued as highly as White lives in our society.

Second, many drug dealers are poverty-stricken, inner-city kids. I don't see too many middle or upper class kids dealing crack to get by. Many poor kids end up dealing drugs just to feed themselves and their families. Also, drug dealers are about as only people that a lot of these kids see succeed. Many are idolized by kids for this reason. It is only natural that many inner-city kids, who don't have [illegible] to receive a decent education, resort [illegible]

Something obviously needs to be done about the problems of violence and drugs in our country, but "killing the enemy" suggests, to me, that the way to get rid of problems. It is not difficult to see that these problems are directly related to poverty. Poverty is the real enemy to society, but people do not want to acknowledge this fact because conquering poverty might mean the middle and upper classes will have to give a little.

If GEO strikes, undergraduates will lose out

No doubt many of you have recently seen a slough of those little orange stickers stuck on various lightposts, sides of buildings, windows and pillars, forcefully stating "GEO is a union." What exactly does that mean?

Right now the administration doesn't officially recognize GEO as a "real" union, whereas nearly all other workers on this campus are unionized. Unfortunately for the administration, however, the United Auto Workers acknowledge GEO. In fact, GEO is the largest UAW shop in the state of Massachusetts. Now, since patient, year-long contract negotiations with an anti-union administration don't seem to work, GEO's demands are as follows:

1. The health-fee waiver. As I write this, a full professor earning $90,000 pays less for health insurance than a graduate student-worker with a child and a stipend of $6,000. The AFL-CIO reports that 80 percent of all strikes last year occurred precisely due to skyrocketing health-care costs.

2. Agency fee. Currently a massive organizing effort must be made each year to recruit new GEO members, resign old ones and convince the uncertain that GEO has in the past saved each of it's members many hundreds of dollars per semester and exists to further the collective interest of grad student workers. The agency fee would [illegible] reduction from all teaching and [illegible] a mere $1 a week — that [illegible] Sounds reasonable, right? Yet Wellington has repeatedly denied this vital demand because it [illegible] to keep busy GEO activists busy reorganizing instead of using their time for more productive tasks.

3. Binding arbitration. The other four unions on campus have a provision in their contracts where, in case of an unresolvable dispute between labor and management, a mutually agreed-upon, "neutral" negotiator is brought in to settle it. As GEO's relations with the administration now stand, all settlements are ultimately up to them. Based on their past record, it's not unreasonable that GEO wants "neutrality" in this area.

4. Job security. In the fall 1991 semester, undergraduate enrollment dropped by 3 percent, while 17 percent of all graduate TAs were laid off. When GEO demanded parity in job reductions, the administration's lame response was "Graduate students make easy targets for cost-cutting." Gee whiz, Mr. Dick O'Brien, thanks a million for your humanity!

Okay, after all that, we should confidently be able to conclude that GEO has some legitimate demands. So then how will a GEO strike, if a strike happens, affect undergraduates?

First, let's do a little math and set up a measure I'll call the Administrative Screw-over Scale, or ASS. Say you're an undergrad, taking 15 hours of classes a week. Since money is important to us all, let's also imagine you're an in-state student and pay $2,250 per semester, about $150 a week, in fees and tuition to attend this sage institution. If we take cost per week and divide by hours per week in class, right now your ASS rate is 10.

Next, if GEO strikes, and your TA isn't available because s/he has had enough grief from the administration and has taken the final step, it's likely those 15 hours per week in class will drop radically. If you're in class, say, five hours a week due to a GEO strike, you're not getting your money's worth. Your ASS rate has tripled to 30 for the duration of the strike. Through assaults on your TA, the administration has screwed you over by attacking your right to an education.

The point here isn't an arithmetic lesson, but a demonstration of how this issue affects all students on campus. We came to UMass for an education and the administration is constantly eroding educational quality, year after year after year. It's time for all of us to say we've had enough.

Former Afghan king stabbed in Rome

By MARY BETH SHERIDAN
Associated Press

ROME — A man posing as a journalist repeatedly stabbed the former king of Afghanistan at his villa in Rome yesterday, police said. The king has been mentioned as a possible transitional leader for his war-torn country.

Mohammed Zaher Shah, 77, suffered multiple wounds, but a spokesman said he would survive.

"There is no danger, thank God, he's recovering," said Gen. Abdul Wali, the spokesman and son-in-law of the former monarch.

The assailant, identified as Jose Santo Paolo De Almedia of Portugal, was arrested immediately, said a spokesman for Italy's paramilitary police. It was not known why he attacked the exiled former king.

At the end of the interview, arranged some time ago, the assailant cried: "I must kill you!" and lunged at the former king, Interior Minister Vincenzo Scotti told journalists.

Zaher Shah was stabbed three times, said Dr. Ercole Brunetti, of the first-aid unit of the Villa San Pietro hospital. The attack fractured a joint in his left thumb, and wounded his face and throat.

Zaher Shah has been living in exile in Rome since he was overthrown by his cousin in 1973 while vacationing in Italy.

It has frequently been suggested that he play a role in a transitional Afghan government that may one day end his nation's long civil war pitting a Marxist government against Muslim guerrillas.

Afghanistan restored his citizenship last month. President Najibullah of Afghanistan has repeatedly offered the former monarch a position in his government, but the offers were rejected.

15 killed in Peru; gov't blames rebels

By ALEX EMERY
Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — Masked gunmen shot and killed 15 people, including a 9-year-old boy. The government yesterday blamed the attack on Maoist rebels, but others suspected it was carried out by right-wing paramilitary squads.

It was one of the worst mass slayings in Lima in more than a decade, an official said.

Authorities suspect the late Sunday attack was carried out by Shining Path rebels, an Interior Ministry spokesman said. The group has waged an 11-year-old boy against the government.

But analysts noted the Shining Path rarely uses silencers, as the assailants did, and witnesses said the attackers used cars similar to vehicles used by right-wing paramilitary forces.

Newspaper reports, quoting witnesses, speculated the gunmen could have belonged to paramilitary groups opposed to the Shining Path.

Lima's main daily newspaper, El Comercio, reported the gunmen fled in two station wagons that had the type of roof lights that police use. Paramilitary groups also have been known to use silencers in their assassinations.

One of Peru's best known paramilitary groups, the Rodrigo Franco Command, began attacks in 1988 on people and institutions suspected of sympathizing with the Shining Path.

The Interior Ministry spokesperson, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said five hooded men with automatic weapons and silencers burst into a home in the central district of Barrios Altos and opened fire on people having a barbecue.

It was the worst single terrorist attack in the capital in 11 years of guerrilla war, an Interior Ministry spokesperson said.

Fourteen people, including the boy, were killed at the scene, the spokesman said. A woman died early yesterday at a hospital. Two other victims were in critical condition.

The attack came days after the departure of a delegation from the Organization of American States, which was in Peru for a week to examine Peru's human rights record.

More than 23,000 people have died in violence since the Shining Path began its attacks in 1980.

Deadly blood dispensed daily in Zaire hospitals

By ROBERT WELLER
Associated Press

KINSHASA, Zaire — In a city with one of the world's highest known AIDS rates, the main blood bank has run out of testing agents for the virus and some hospitals are dispensing untested blood.

"It's criminal. They are giving transfusions without knowing, and they know some of the blood is contaminated. But they have no choice. It's die now or die later," said Dr. Manzila Tarande.

Manzila is the Zairean doctor left in charge of project AIDS, a U.S.-funded and run research program until September, when American doctors fled amid domestic political turmoil.

Foreign governments and relief agencies had supplied AIDS testing kits and funds to hospitals in Kinshasa. But when they pulled their personnel out because of riots triggered by a mutiny by President Mobutu Sese Seko's poorly paid troops, the money and supplies went with them.

Soldiers have stolen much of the supplies the foreign aid organizations left behind, according to Dr. Pelagie Maholo, blood bank director of Mama Yemo Hospital, and Dr. Bernard Hody, chief of Doctors Without Borders-Zaire.

"When donors arrive we just ask them what blood group they are and take the blood. We have no facilities for testing it and no choice but to give it," lamented Dr. Oma Lok at Kalembe-Lembe Hospital, the city's main children's hospital.

Mama Yemo Hospital, the city's main hospital, hasn't been forced to give blood without testing it. "But it's a day-to-day affair. Each day we go from one place to another looking for someone who can give us the test agents," said Maholo.

Transfusions of infected blood is a major cause of AIDS in Zaire.

"I shudder to think what will happen if we have new riots. We certainly will have to give blood without testing it," Maholo said.

On Saturday, Mama Yemo Hospital didn't even have enough blood for its normal operations. "We have 24 units. It's the same as having nothing," said Maholo.

A technician said the hospital normally provides blood for 40 transfusions daily, and supplies other hospitals in the city of 3 million.

Maholo went on Zairean television and radio Saturday to appeal for donors, whose numbers have decreased because of transport and other problems resulting from the collapse of the economy.

She also has appealed to foreign donors to send the AIDS testing agents.

"We have to take in two units of blood for each one we give because so much of it is contaminated with AIDS," she said.

Patients have to supply their own blood by arranging for donations from friends or family, or buying it from donors.

Studies over the past three years have estimated that as much as 6.7 percent of Kinshasa's population is infected with the AIDS virus.

Zaire reported 13,000 AIDS cases in 1990, twice the previous year. But the national committee fighting AIDS said this figure was only a small percentage of cases because information collection suffers a lack of staff and facilities.

Former Philippines first lady Imelda Marcos gestures to friends as she is hustled though a crowd at Aquino International Airport in Manila Monday. Marcos returned home after nearly six years in exile.

Imelda goes home

By EILEEN GUERRERO
Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Former First Lady Imelda Marcos drank champagne and sang songs to celebrate her return home yesterday, nearly six years after the "people power revolution" drove her and her late husband into exile.

Thousands of people, including supporters and the curious, lined streets and gathered at the hotel where Mrs. Marcos was staying.

Crowds surged forward as her vehicle moved slowly along the crowded streets. She waved and smiled at the people, many of whom were wearing red, white and blue, the colors of the Marcos political movement. Several people in the crowd exploded firecrackers in celebration, and many of them chanted "Imelda! Imelda!" in what appeared to be a show of genuine affection.

Crowds of supporters jammed the lobby of the Plaza as she arrived, escorted by American private security guards brought by Mrs. Marcos.

Magical songstress to serenade UMass

By LOU COVE
Collegian Correspondent

Last year Bette Midler recorded a mush-ridden version of Julie Gold's "From a Distance," and America got down on its knees and sucked it up. They loved it. But what most of America didn't realize was that "From a Distance" was recorded back in 1987 with far greater elegance and understatement by Nanci Griffith on her MCA Lone Star State of Mind LP. Griffith fought hard with her label to make it a single (she even recorded a live version in 1988) but she was denied, and the rest is history.

But Griffith's fans know full well that her story doesn't hinge on one song. Her career has been brimming with rich music since she released her first album, There's a Light Beyond These Woods, in 1978. Her solid blend of country and folk influences has been hailed not only in the U.S. but abroad as well — the Irish remain among her most committed followers — and has earned her a Grammy nomination for Best Folk Album for The Last of the True Believers.

What sets Griffith apart from the folk glut that has amassed in recent years is her beautiful songwriting technique and powerfully intimate performances, both of which shine like pure gold on her live album One Fair Summer Evening. As an entertainer Griffith puts her best foot forward on stage, introducing her songs with great humor and care in a high southern drawl. It becomes abundantly clear, upon hearing her talk about the inspiration for her work, that Griffith's songs are not just by her, they are of her.

The people and places of her life, her grandparents and the Anderson Fair Retail Restaurant ("where I learned my trade as a musician and songwriter sitting in a dark corner") are brought forth in her songs in such a beautifully honest way that one is left with a feeling of closeness rarely made accessible to audiences by an artist.

Nanci Griffith

To listen to Griffith's catalog is to see the world through her wonderfully peculiar eyes. What makes these songs so remarkable is that for all their revelation and intimacy they never feel self-indulgent; Nanci Griffith's gift is her ability to balance intimacy with worldliness, heart and soul, and still play and sing with an integrity rarely matched by her contemporaries.

Griffith's latest release, Late Night Grand Hotel, continues her tradition of fine craftsmanship and includes such luminaries as Phil Everly and Tanita Tikaram. The new album also breaks new ground as Griffith makes a conscious effort to broaden her audience.

The result is a warm pop concoction with a slippery, overproduced feel that lacks the distinctiveness of her past work but still stands its ground in the field of folk-pop. Griffith's songwriting continues to flourish and the superior quality of musicianship (thanks to The Blue Moon Orchestra) makes for fine listening.

We can expect a great deal from Nanci Griffith when, thanks to a novel collaboration between the University and the Iron Horse Music Hall, she visits the Fine Arts Center on Tuesday night. It promises to be an evening of superb story-telling and enchanting song, one that will bring the audience a little closer to Nanci's Nirvana.

Hoffman goes gangster

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Billy Bathgate is a stunning motion picture, full of crisp dialogue, thrilling performances and a sleek, atmospheric look. What it lacks, however, is a clear idea of what it's about.

Billy Bathgate (Loren Dean) is a young man who is fascinated by the money and power of gangster. The most notable man in the East Bronx is Dwight Schultz (Dustin Hoffman). Billy impresses Schultz and becomes his errand boy and protege. As the film opens, Bo Weinburg (Bruce Willis) is killed for betraying Schultz. His girlfriend, Drew Preston (Nicole Kidman) "joins" the group. Schultz's power is on the decline and he leaves the city to upstate New York where he hopes he can beat a tax evasion rap by getting in the town's good graces. Billy and Drew fight their obvious mutual attraction and Schultz tries to cling to his once famous power.

The performances are all first rate. Dustin Hoffman is credible as the aging gangster, but he doesn't have enough scenes to bring any truth to his role. Nicole Kidman (Dead Calm) brings a touch of sophistication to the stock gun moll character. Bruce Willis has a brief cameo and comes out unscathed for a change. Steven Hill plays Otto, Schultz's right hand man and "protector" of Billy. Here, the veteran character actor is getting some. The quiet hero, Billy Bathgate, is played by stage actor Loren Dean, who unlike the hero of Goodfellas has no ulterior motive. He enjoys the camaraderie and attention of the gangster life. This disillusionment may or may not have been intentional, but it halts any plot advances. The film ends abruptly and the story does not seem fully told.

The relationship between Billy and Drew is so underrealized that it makes their love unbelievable. There aren't enough scenes between Schultz and Billy to warrant their relationship. So many movies today suffer from overkill, this one needed at least another half an hour to tell its story completely.

Brimming with epic intentions, Billy Bathgate has not only an excellent cast but an equally astute set of platers behind the camera. Don't get me wrong — Billy Bathgate is entertaining, but not fully satisfying.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Greater diplomacy will help you make new gains. An older person is your strongest ally. Visitors or messages from far-flung places are featured. Shoppers can find great bargains.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Your career gets a welcome boost, thanks to a friend. Give yourself adequate time to complete one project before taking on another. A psychic experience may be difficult to interpret at first.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): A special project receives new support today. Teamwork boosts profits. A flirtation could cause trouble unless you are very discreet. Do nothing to jeopardize an older person's trust in you.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Hard-to-find items become easier to purchase, and at an attractive price. Someone could try to interfere in your domestic affairs. Refuse to let outsiders disrupt your family life.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Phone calls and messages give new meaning to your efforts. Better financial planning will result in big savings. A courtship gets off to a flying start. Do nothing to rock the boat.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 21): Taking an overly aggressive approach could cause strife. Steer clear of people who gossip. Your best rapport is with someone of the same sex.

LIBRA(Sept. 22-Oct. 22): Exercise more caution than usual in your financial and real estate dealings. Consult experts. Although a change in social plans is upsetting, you could meet an attractive newcomer.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New business opportunities arise. Success is closer than you think. A phone call or unexpected visit opens the door to a promotion or better job. A good friend rallies to your side.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Inertia is the only thing that could come between you and success this week. Get moving. Extra study will prove very worthwhile. Although a competition makes you edgy, you win.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Curb your temper today. Taking a walk or breaking with your regular routine will put you in good humor. Come to terms with a loved one. Spend a quiet evening at home.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb 18): You will be able to accomplish more once you reduce the stress in your life. The arrival of a check could be delayed another few days. Mate supports your efforts. Be appreciative!

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): You have a chance to move up at your place of employment. Share a financial burden with other family members. A health matter deserves prompt attention. Develop your athletic potential.

House Ways and Means approves recycling bill

BOSTON (AP) — The House Ways and Means Committee has approved a bill that would mandate recycling in every Massachusetts city and town within two years.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Mark Roosevelt (D-Boston) and the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, also would set regulations on packaging that would become stricter until all packaging would have to be recyclable by the year 2002.

Rep. Edward Teague (R-Yarmouth) maintained Friday that the bill, which calls for the state to pay up to 5 percent of a community's start-up recycling costs, would circumvent property-tax limiting Proposition 2 1/2.

But Rep. Thomas Finneran, the committee chair, said the measure placed "no new burden" on communities, and said any further delay on the legislation would back up legislative staffs, who have been working feverishly to prepare legislation before the end of the year.

Teague's move to postpone the vote until technical amendments were completed was quashed by Finneran, a Boston Democrat.

The legislation calls for all packaging in the state to meet one of the following criteria by July 1, 1996 — it must be reusable five or more times, made of 25 percent recycled material, or made of materials that are being recycled at a 25 percent rate. By the year 2002, the requirement for recycled content and materials would be increased to 50 percent.

and play intense polo for most of the game.

Good hustle and pressure defense early forced the Crimson into poor shot selection, and halfway through the first period McOsker broke the scoreless tie with a bullet goal from the perimeter. Later, with :30 left in the first, goalie Todd Larson's outlet pass found a wide-open Scott Deluca on a counter attack, and Deluca scored for a 2-0 lead.

Early in the second quarter Engin scored on his patented back-handed turn-around shot. Harvard countered with a goal of their own, but Harlan's goal with 2:10 left in the half put UMass up 4-1 and forced Harvard to change goalies.

The third period was more wide-open and McOsker notched his second goal of the game on a man-up situation less than :30 seconds into the period. Harvard scored on a man-up halfway through the period, but freshman Javier Gonzalez' shot one minute later gave UMass another four-goal lead.

Harvard came out smoking in the fourth quarter, scoring three goals in the first 3:15 of the period.

"There was a little bit of a coaching error at the beginning of the fourth quarter, and you saw what happened," Yarworth said. "We didn't instruct them what to do, and they started taking bad shots. I know I relaxed."

Harvard was playing good pressure defense, but Engin scored the goal the Minutemen needed. He muscled his 6-foot-6, 240 pound frame past two Crimson players into position, fired, and scored. He added two more goals over the next two minutes, killing any hope of a Harvard comeback.

In the waning seconds of the game most players began swimming for the deck, but UMass' Pat Lau, a 5-foot-8, 140 pound freshman from Honolulu, Hawaii, scored on a laser shot from mid-pool past the unsuspecting Harvard goalie.

A fitting conclusion to a game that both players and coaches were pleased with.

"The guys I think had the games of their lives were "I" [Engin] and Javier. I thought Javier played great. He probably doesn't show up much on the stat sheet, but he was always moving on defense." Engin scored four goals.

"Harvard knocked us out last year, and that was part of the reason we wanted to beat them," said McOsker.

"Michelle ran a super race, probably the best of her career," LaFreniere said. "Tracy really stepped up and ran a great race, as did Cate [Dean]."

Last week, the Minutewomen had four runners finish within 10 seconds, a feat LaFreniere was looking to duplicate this week. On Friday however, the women failed to do so, as 40 seconds separated St. Laurent and Kim Liljeblad.

"Not running in a tight pack really hurt us," LaFreniere said "If we had placed our top four within 10 seconds of each other, we could have had fourth."

Furthering the Minutewomen's troubles, Tricia Mathiesen, who has been in the top five all year, fell ill and dropped to seventh for the team, 81st overall in a time of 20:12.

"Overall, I thought we had some really superb individual performances, but cross country is a team sport, and individual performances don't win meets," LaFreniere said.

Water polo places second at New Englands

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE — It's official: Brown University is the University of Massachusetts' most hated water polo rival.

That fact was cemented Sunday after the Bears beat the Minutemen 7-3 in the finals of the New England Championships at Brown's Smith Swimming Center. It was Brown's 17th consecutive New England title.

The loss came only 24 hours after UMass played what coach Russ Yarworth termed "the best overall game we've played this season," a 10-5 win over Harvard.

The Minutemen, ranked 15th before the game, had split the season series with Brown, ranked 16th, one game apiece.

Brown has more than a few players who are flat-out cheap-shot artists. A lot of punches and kicks occur under the surface of the water, out of the referees' sight. Taunting and finger-pointing go on after goals are scored. It was apparent during the post-game handshakes that bad blood exists between these two teams.

What was apparent during pre-game warmups was Brown's fired-up readiness for the game, and UMass' passive attitude. The Minutemen played the first period tentatively, and when Dan McOsker scored with :17 left, it cut the Brown lead to 2-1.

UMass needed a boost in the second period, and as if on cue members of the men's and women's swim teams appeared carrying a sheet that shouted, "KICK ASS UMASS."

It didn't work. The offense was non-existent, turning the ball over six times in the period and posing no serious goal threats. Brown scored twice, creating a 4-1 halftime lead.

Just one minute into the third period freshman Luke Harlan's blast rebounded off the Brown goalie, and Tsan Engin dove to tip it into the goal. The intensity was picking up as the Minutemen controlled play, forcing Brown into several turnovers. With 2:17 left in the period Adam Feldman scored a huge goal, making the score 4-3. That was as close as it got as Brown scored a minute later, making it a two-goal bulge again.

In the fourth period UMass had its shots but none found their way into the net. Brown scored with 4:24 left making it 6-3. With 1:54 left, Harlan, who was being held after a whistle, retaliated with a kick to the chest of the Brown player. It was right in front of a referee and the kick earned Harlan a brutality foul game misconduct and Brown a penalty shot, which they scored, ending the game at 7-3.

After the game many UMass players seemed stunned, and Yarworth had to remind them, "Come on guys, the season isn't over."

Indeed it isn't, as this weekend the team is back at Brown for the Eastern Championships. Seedings aren't available yet, but UMass is expected to be seeded fourth or fifth, and may have to face Brown in the first round game Friday night. The top two teams at the end of the weekend will spend their Thanksgiving weekend in Long Beach, California, at the NCAA Championships.

Saturday's game against Harvard saw the Minutemen do what they haven't done all season — come out fired up

UMass hoop frosh impress

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Before the University of Massachusetts basketball team's first exhibition game of the season Sunday, the national media touted UMass' incoming freshmen as one of the top recruiting classes in the country.

After UMass' 94-92 win, head coach John Calipari agreed. "They're going to be some of the best players to ever play at the University of Massachusetts," he said.

Calipari didn't hesitate to test the newcomers as he inserted guard Mike Williams and forward Lou Roe just four minutes after the start of the game, soon followed by forward Scott Drapeau and guard Jerome Malloy.

Roe, in 17 minutes of play, was UMass' second leading rebounder, grabbing nine that Calipari described as "all above the rim."

"It felt pretty good to play," said Roe, who was instantly adopted by the audience with chants of "Louuu."

"Seeing all the support from the fans makes me want to be here. We just have to keep playing together and we'll win games," he said.

Williams replaced starting point guard Anton Brown and recorded six points, five assists and one steal in 18 solid minutes.

The four didn't appear to be playing in their first collegiate contest as they displayed skills which contributed a great deal to the victory. They even turned the heads of several UMass returning starters.

"The freshmen responded well," senior guard Jim McCoy said. "They came through at the end and did much better than I thought they would. They kept the game close."

Calipari said the newcomers would receive considerable playing time this season coming off the bench as they progressively blend in with the team's chemistry.

"The freshmen are just beginning to learn," Calipari said. "It's going to take time. They have to accept roles, understand what we're trying to do and play within what we're doing."

Last season, UMass' bench lacked depth. The addition of four talented newcomers could elevate this year's team to the next level.

"The bench is going to be a key this year," McCoy said. "The starters can now come off and get some rest, unlike years before. If the freshmen can play well coming off the bench, we can finish in the upper echelon of the Atlantic 10.

Sunday's leading scorer Harper Williams said, "When our bench comes in, it's like a big burst of energy for everyone. It allows the entire team to play hard all game."

William Herndon said, "Once they [the freshmen] get adjusted to the system, we'll be a force to reckon with."

Calipari said yesterday he has given freshmen Ted Cottrell and Derek Kellogg, both of whom didn't dress for Sunday's game, the option to redshirt the season if they wish.

He said he told them they could fight for time on the floor this season or take the year off to concentrate on adapting to the University and academics and come back next year.

Also announced yesterday was a previously unscheduled exhibition game. The contest, against an unnamed non-collegiate opponent, is tentatively scheduled for November 17.

Field hockey drops a pair

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team is struggling. Struggling badly.

The Minutewomen returned from their weekend at Maryland very disappointed. And with good reason, as they tied the No. 19 team in the country, Virginia, 1-1, on Saturday. For an encore, they lost to an unranked Delaware (4-11-2) team on Sunday, 2-1 in sudden death, double overtime.

Coach Pam Hixon reportedly told her players that their NCAA post-season hopes are in grave jeopardy. While this may or may not be the case, UMass (12-5-1) will drop in the polls from No. 6 to at least No. 9 this week.

The big question is, what has happened to the team that started out 8-0? Since then, the Minutewomen have gone 4-5-1 and have dropped four spots in the polls.

The main weakness with the team is their youth. While young talent is a positive in many ways, it can also be a detriment to a team, even one as talented as UMass. The biggest problem with young players is that they aren't always experienced.

Experience can be a key factor when a team is 600 miles away from home, fighting for their lives in double overtime. Assistant coach Kathy DeAngelis said that the play of the team was flat.

"They were very flat [Sunday]," she said. "They're a young team, and they needed some leadership out there."

UMass must also learn how to win on the road, and quickly. After Wednesday's game at home against Dartmouth, UMass will probably wave good-bye to Totman Field for the year.

Ironically enough, the team has a 7-1 record at home, but their weekend catastrophe all but ended their shot to play at home in the NCAAs.

Speculation abounds, but the top 12 teams in the country receive bids to the post-season. UMass spent its last night at No. 6, but how far they drop in the polls will not be known until this afternoon.

This weekend, UMass will travel to Temple to play in the Atlantic-10 Championships. While they are seeded first, they still may face a strong Temple team that they defeated two months ago. Depending on which team shows up, the 8-0 juggernaut or the 4-5-1 also-ran, UMass could be in for another long weekend.

Cross Country teams place at New Englands

• Men finish fifth at Boston

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team placed fifth out of 34 teams at the New England Cross Country Championships, Friday, at Franklin Park in Boston.

Boston University won the meet with 26 points. BU was led by Ketil Hansen, who won the five-mile race in a time of 26:22.

BU was followed by the University of Connecticut, who finished second with 66 points. UMass-Lowell placed third with 75 points. Rounding out the top five teams were Boston College, with 131, and the Minutemen, with 185.

Matt Simon once again led the way for UMass with a 13th place finish in 27:01. Simon and teammate Keith Willis, who placed 20th in 27:20, received All-New England honors for finishing among the top 25 in the race.

Pat Reed was the third finisher for the Minutemen. Reed ran 27:56 to place 39th. Also scoring for UMass were Mike Davis, who was 51st in 28:13, and Craig Cormier, who finished 62nd in 28:25.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien said that he was pleased with the way his team ran on Friday.

"I think the kids competed very well in terms of the championship competition," O'Brien said. "I would say that the team ran a little better this week than they did at the Atlantic 10 meet [Oct. 26]."

The Minutemen now have two weeks to prepare for the IC4A Championships on Nov. 16. O'Brien said that he expects an even better performance from his team at the IC4A's.

"I'm pleased that we had a better day than at the A-10s, but I still see some room for improvement," he said. "I'm confident that the team will improve in the next two weeks."

• St. Laurent, Johnson lead women

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Coming off their win at the Atlantic 10 Championships last week, the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team headed to the New England Championships Friday, looking to run in a tight pack, and bring home a top five finish.

The Minutewomen got neither, instead settling for a sixth place finish on the grueling Northfield Mountain course.

As expected, Providence College ran away with the title, defeating second place Boston College by 61 points. Connecticut finished third, followed by Vermont, Springfield, and UMass.

"It was definitely a disappointing race," coach Julie LaFreniere said, "Especially after winning the A-10s last week."

Leading the Minutewomen was senior captain Michelle St. Laurent, who placed 24th in a time of 18:52, earning her All New England honors.

Second for the Minutewomen was Becky Johnson in 19:05, followed by Kelly Liljeblad

Women rally to end harassment

Speakers cite poor condition of women in America

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Sexual harassment needs to be discussed openly to effect positive change, women said yesterday at an Everywoman's Center-sponsored rally on the Student Union steps.

"The rally was organized out of despair over the Thomas-Hill hearings," said Jennifer Cannon, the first speaker of the event. "The hearings were watched as a soap opera," she said.

An Everywoman's Center flyer passed to onlookers quoted statistics which estimated 85 percent of women will be sexually harassed in their lifetimes though 90 percent of those cases go unreported.

University of Massachusetts Associate Dean of Students Eileen Stewart spoke at the rally, discussing various trends in our society which pointed to dismal conditions for women in the U.S. A rise in the number of reported rape cases and a decrease in a woman's right to an abortion were two points she raised early on. Later in her speech she said older women are "disproportionately poor" compared with other economic groups. The only group which is keeping up with older women, she said, are young women.

Stewart also said one in nine women contract breast cancer. With such an enormous proportion, she said more research needs to be done.

Other speakers focused on their individual histories with sexual harassment and the need to vocalize these cases to prevent further ones.

"The more we speak out about this the less it is going to happen," said Nancy Bristel of the Everywoman's Center.

Bristel told the crowd of 80 people how her life has been "a continuum" of sexual harassment. Fleeing sexual abuse at home, she said she was also abused by the husband of the woman who took her into her home.

Bristel said her self-esteem was diminished as well as her ability to take risks. Still, she was positive about the

Whitmore, GEO hold final talks

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

With only hours remaining until members of the Graduate Employee Organization vote to ratify their current contract or strike, the University administration is holding 11th hour negotiations with GEO officials to try to finalize their first contract.

Three of the organization's four demands remain in an impasse as of press time. "If we are treated reasonably and fairly as a union, we won't go on strike," said GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs. "We are down to the wire now."

After five hours of negotiations yesterday and Monday, the administration offered an expanded offer on the health fee waiver, a major demand of the organization.

They offered to waive the mandatory basic health insurance fee which is $185 a year for a graduate employee, said Susan Pearson, chief negotiator for the administration.

In order to implement that proposal, Pearson said, "We're reducing everybody's budget. It's a terrible fiscal year."

Still, GEO views this as unacceptable. "We're glad

Bush declares six Mass. counties disaster areas

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — President Bush declared six coastal Massachusetts counties disaster areas, opening the way for federal aid to individuals, businesses and cities and towns that suffered damage in last weeks storm, Gov. William F. Weld announced Tuesday.

The storm that sent waves and wind crashing into the coast hit Barnstable, Dukes, Essex, Nantucket, Plymouth and Suffolk counties.

Unlike Hurricane Bob in August, there was little damage inland.

"We are grateful to the president for acting so quickly," Weld said in announcing the presidential declaration.

Ed Lecius, a spokesman for the Federal Emergency Management Agency, known as FEMA, said federal-state disaster centers would be opened this weekend in each of the six counties.

"What those are are one-stop shopping centers. Every federal and state agency that will be involved in providing assistance to individuals will be there. People will register and go down the line," Lecius said.

Lecius said that assistance includes home and personal property disaster loans, temporary housing and a grant program to people with limited incomes whose damages are not covered by insurance, other federal and state disaster programs or volunteer efforts.

The centers also will be staffed by representatives of the Internal Revenue Service to help people who want to claim casualty losses on their income tax, and people to help disaster victims file insurance claims.

Lecius said the Small Business Administration will provide loans to businesses to repair buildings and replace inventory and equipment.

Disaster unemployment insurance also will be available to people who lost work because of the storm, Lecius said, including people such as the self-employed and small business owners who normally wouldn't qualify for jobless benefits.

Although federal aid to cities and towns for Hurricane Bob and last Wednesday's storm is being held up because of a budget dispute between Congress and President Bush, money is available for individual and business assistance, Lecius said.

Flying friendly skies

Soviet Union opens airspace to planes

By THOMAS GINSBERG
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union will let spy planes fly over its entire territory to verify arms control agreements, Tass reported today, in a major departure from decades of tight Soviet secrecy.

The decision clears a major obstacle to an international "open skies" treaty, the new agency said.

A Soviet delegation made the statement in Vienna, where representatives from 22 NATO and former Warsaw Pact countries resumed talks today on the two-year-old "open skies" proposal, Tass said.

Soviet military officials had refused to allow flights over their military bases and certain other areas considered sensitive, despite arms control agreements signed by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev. For decades, the Soviets had balked at such inspection flights.

The failure of the August coup removed many hard-line Soviet military officials, including Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov and Chief of Staff Mikhail Moiseyev. That apparently cleared the way for progress in Vienna.

The reversal followed Gorbachev's announcement last month of unilateral cuts in short-range nuclear weapons, and the July signing of a long-sought treaty on reducing the number of intercontinental weapons.

The "open skies" proposal encompasses all countries in the former Cold War alliances and would let them fly unarmed surveillance aircraft unhindered over each other's territory to check compliance with arms treaties.

The treaty has involved negotiations over everything from the types of cameras to times of flights. Many of the details have been worked out since the first session in Canada in 1989.

Tass quoted the chief of the Soviet delegation, Yevgeny Golovko, as saying negotiators in Vienna now can draft a final text of the agreement for presentation this spring to the 38-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, sponsor of the talks.

Soviet officials represented the 12 remaining Soviet republics, Golovko told Tass. He said the three newly independent Baltic states of Latvia, Estonia and Lituania — now CSCE members in their own right — are attending the "open skies" talks as observers.

O'Brien contacts Asian students

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

In a press release sent to the Collegian yesterday afternoon, Chancellor Richard O'Brien affirmed that he has made contact with Asian students involving the proposed closing of the United Asia Cultural Center.

Representatives of the Asia Cultural Center said communication has been minimal between administration officials and Asian students on this issue.

"Discussions have already begun," said Chancellor O'Brien in the press release, "between these students and members of the staff of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs [Jo-Anne Vanin]."

Asian Cultural Center representative, Quynh Dang, said she was dissatisfied with a last minute phone call from O'Brien yesterday. "A phone call hours before a press release — we don't consider that to be 'Discussions have already begun,'" she said.

"Chancellor O'Brien doesn't seem to get the point that we refuse to meet and talk," said Alexander Nguyen, Asian Cultural Center representative. "It would only be a waste of time because the research has been done and the recommendations have been made. It is only a question of Chancellor O'Brien's commitment to minority issues" said Nguyen.

"My one plea," wrote O'Brien, "is that we approach these problems in a way in which we show mutual respect and courtesy."

Nguyen responded to the press release by saying, "O'Brien needs to understand that historically the University has not treated us with 'respect and courtesy.'"

Speaker offers Israel update at Hillel House

By KURT MOFFETT
Collegian Correspondent

The Israelis and Palestinians must compromise if they are to live together peacefully, said a top spokesperson last night for Jewish affairs.

Efraim Zinger, the regional director of the Israel Aliyah Center in Boston, said both sides "can't expect to have 100 percent of their rights" represented under the same government.

About a dozen students and Zinger sat in chairs arranged in a circle at the Hillel House lounge to discuss past and present issues of Israel. Topics ranged from immigration to standards of living to the current negotiations occurring in Madrid, Spain between Israelis and Arabs.

Even though 350,000 Jewish immigrants have come to Israel in the last two years and 10,000 of them are Russian, Zinger said, "they are just numbers." The important part is the consequence that the immigration will have on Israel.

Zinger jokingly asked the students if they knew about waiting in long lines for goods and services in Israel, then wondered how worse it will get with thousands of more immigrants. He said there is "a need to improve the standard of living" in Israel, but in a materialistic, Western sense.

Zinger said that jobs, health care, homes, and education are going to be needed for the thousands of Jewish immigrants. He said there are 50 to 60 students in an average classroom. "That's reality," Zinger added.

When asked by one of the students who the Russian immigrants would vote for in the next Israeli election, Zinger responded that if they are successful, then the immigrants will vote for the party currently in power because they won't be able to tell the difference between the different parties. He then joked that Israelis can't tell the difference either.

Zinger said that negotiations for the Israelis is a "zero-sum game." He added, "They feel if they make a mistake, then that will be their first and last mistake." The Israelis feel they will lose all they have gained if they slip up in negotiations with any opposition.

Zinger said there is an "internal debate" brewing within Israel about its future. "Let's look to the future," he added, because peace is needed in the Middle East.

Looking to '92 elections

First of a two part series.

Four years go by so quickly, don't they? It seems like only yesterday that Michael Dukakis took a hard fall from grace and George, Barbara and Millie Bush moved into the White House.

Polls have shown Bush as virtually unbeatable, which may explain the current lack of campaign fever. In fact, Thursday night, George Bush and Dan Quayle held a $1,000 per plate fundraising dinner in Houston, collecting more quick cash than had been mustered so far by all six Democratic candidates.

He may have plenty of monetary muscle to flex, but now that there are six hopefuls (seven, if Cuomo decides to dive in this week) enthusiastically exposing Bush's domestic policy, George Bush is forced to realize his promises.

"Right now, Bush looks unbeatable. But now the candidates are bringing up unemployment, health care, civil rights. I think there are enough middle class people around who are unemployed, who are seeing friends around them lose their homes," said Kathy Flaherty, president of the University Democrats. "They're starting to realize how flawed the domestic policy is. I think Bush is starting to see it too."

UDems Vice President Zeph Parmenter lists off the candidates: Bill Clinton, governor of Arkansas; Paul Tsongas, the ex-Senator and ex-Board of Regents in Massachusetts; Tom Harkin, senator from Iowa; Bob Kerrey, ex-governor of Nebraska, senator from Nebraska; Douglas Wilder, the governor of Virginia, and Jerry Brown, the ex-governor of California.

"I can tell you right now," she admits, "that Tsongas, Brown and Wilder have very little chance at getting the nomination. Paul Tsongas is a Greek liberal from Massachusetts — enough said? I think people see Jerry Brown as being a bit flaky, and as far as Wilder is concerned, I just don't think this country is ready for a Black president, sadly enough."

Is the country ready for a president whose first and last names end with the letter "O," a common American prejudice?

"I would hope that the country could get over something like that. They elected Kennedy, who was an Irish Catholic, and that was a milestone right there. Mario Cuomo is such a great governor and such a charismatic person that people would be able to get over those ethnic prejudices. If he entered the campaign, that would change it a lot," Parmenter said.

But what have the Democrats got on Bush? How can a party that has plenty of problems of its own challenge a man as popular as George Bush? Really, do they have any chance at all?

"The chances of [Bush] winning are good, because he is an incumbent. But if people are properly shown just how appalling his domestic policy is...", Parmenter says, growing agitated. "He titled himself The Environmental President, and completely backed out on that. His education policy is completely corrupt. He has no concerns for the middle class, no concerns for the lower class. He just doesn't realize that people are hurting — this isn't just a recession."

Flaherty adds, "Bush will win like he did in '88, if he can convince people that he's taking care of domestic policies — he'll push the unemployment bill, for example.

"He might win, but he won't do anything after the election -like last time. But he'll convince people for the next couple of months," he said.

Zeph Parmenter (left), a Junior history major, and Kathy Fleming, a Junior studying political science, head up the University Democrats. Parmenter is Vice-President while Fleming serves as President.

Flaherty, Parmenter and the rest of the University Democrats are very enthusiastic about these candidates, possibly because they mark a change in democratic attitudes.

"They'll definitely give a challenge to Bush because some of them balance out being pro-business and being a Democrat," Parmenter says. "In the past, you would have gotten democrats who would have been totally against any economic policy Bush has ever offered up, and the thing is, if we're trying to win a race, and if we want to keep people in the party, we have to face some economic realities. We can't live off ideals strictly."

The UDems are also hoping for a cleaner campaign than the notorious mudslinger of '88, which Parmenter recalls with disgust:

"I can remotely respect George Bush as president, but I can never respect him for what he did in the '88 campaign — he wrapped himself in the flag and Willie Horton. Everybody knows what a dirty, racial campaign that was."

Winter break will be a busy time for the University Democrats — they will be in New Hampshire, campaigning in preparation of the February primaries. They will be standing on street corners, holding signs, handing out campaign literature and talking about the Democratic hopefuls with anyone that will listen. Flaherty then plans to join the Kerrey campaign instead of returning to UMass in the spring.

George Bush is strong. He is popular. The University Democrats insist that he is also beatable:

"You just never say never in politics, you never affirm anything.", Parmenter laughs, "Who thought Weld would beat out Silber? Who though Silber would ever beat out Bellotti? Remember that 'Dewey Beats Truman' headline? And he didn't. You never say never and you take it one day at a time."

that they made an offer to try to offset exorbitant health costs but they did not consider family needs," Isaacs said.

Isaacs said a graduate employee with a family would still have to pay $1,915 for a year of health benefits.

The organization has also been fighting for job security, what they label as parity in cuts to assistantships.

The administration offered to negotiate in the future with the organization if teaching assistants were cut not due to graduate or undergraduate enrollment decreases or budget shortfalls. Again, Isaacs said the GEO negotiating team didn't accept this proposal.

"Both sides have been moving to control the number of cuts to teaching assistants," Isaacs said. "We just need assurances that graduate assistantships won't be eliminated disproportionately."

Pearson did say "they told us it sounded very promising."

In addition, the organization has been fighting to get a service fee on their contract, which the four other unions on this campus enjoy. This collects a service fee from non-GEO members.

Lawyers representing the United Auto Workers, GEO's parent union, say such an agency fee would be legal. On the other hand, University lawyers said it's illegal since the organization is not officially recognized as a union by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, which certifies all unions in the state.

Pearson said the administration offered the organization to ask the Attorney General to analyze both sides and make a ruling on this issue.

"We'll ask an impartial person," Pearson said. "I think [GEO's] concerned partly because it take some time." She could not specify how much time getting an agency fee on the organization's contract could take.

Pearson said if the organization gains recognition by the commission as a union, "it would make some aspects of the process easier." She said they have "repeatedly suggested" that GEO petition the commission to certify them as a union.

Patricia Greenfield, director of the Labor Relations and Research Center, said it's in everyone's best interest to recognize the organization as a union to facilitate negotiations.

"The outcome could be very different if the administration went with GEO to the commission and said for the purposes of bargaining — they should be employees," Greenfield said.

Greenfield said this would eliminate the obstacles blocking agreement on the agency fee question. She also said state fiscal woes are slowing agreement on health fees.

"The administration feel constrained by the budgetary situation," Greenfield said. "Certainly, both sides are in agreement that health fees have skyrocketed. It's understandable that GEO wants at least some type of waiver.

"They're down to a few key issues," she said.

Greenfield also said a possible strike could damage the University. "There's no question that [a strike] impacts very significantly on the teaching mission of this University," she said.

future for women, saying, "I firmly believe that change can happen."

A speaker from outside the University, Jan Warner, said women suffer even more when they bring harassment charges into the open. She said she spent over a year in a situation where she "put up with" harassment. In the office where she was employed, women tended not to stay for long.

"Nobody noticed how women filed through the department like through a revolving door," she said.

"My spirit has been squelched," Warner said.

Melissa Weinberger of the UMass POWER organization expressed her feelings about woman's "pathetic economic position as a sex."

Weinberger also told her feelings about a woman's right not to be abused. "To be degraded is degrading," she said. "Feelings are never wrong, and if it feels wrong it is wrong."

The rally ended as Donna Hebert stepped to the podium to sing a song about women's struggle with men entitled "Jerks."

After her song, Hebert acknowledged those women with histories of abuse by saying, "For those of you who have stories to be told — we're with you."

Don't let exams get to you

It is already Nov. 6, and it seems as if the semester is almost over. In fact it is almost over! We as the student body have entered the abyss of empty space.

Midterms are over, for the most part, and finals are just around the corner. Frustration and tension seems to encompass your whole body. You are in a mental state of confusion and anxiety.

I am sure that every upperclass-person can understand what I am saying. For most of the freshmen, I am sure that you are in a state of confusion. You do not know what is happening.

and it seems as if it will last an eternity. "There will be ample time to get your work done," you tell yourself. But in reality you are putting yourself in the position for an emotional uphill struggle.

As each day slips away, denial begins to immerse itself rather comfortably into your mental state. Weekend after weekend seems wasted. Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights are set aside for one thing, partying.

Needless to say the weekend days are a washout, with normal sleeping hours extended to late afternoon. When the voice of reason attempts to invade your head, your brain simply avoids it by falling back to sleep.

You do not do so well on your first exam. "Don't worry I will do better on the next one," you tell yourself. The next test rolls around and you do not do as well as you expected. What are you going to do? You have painted yourself into a corner and there seems as if there is no way out!

Let me give you a little advice. Take it with a grain of salt, if you will, or rather take it to heart. Although it might seem as if the semester is a washout, in fact it really is not. There is still a chance to salvage a decent GPA, if you are able to show some dedication.

The perfect opportunity has presented itself to you this weekend. A long weekend is the best time to catch up on work that you been putting off. Also, in a few weeks Thanksgiving will be upon us. This is another opportunity to play "catch up."

Believe me when I say this, "The ship is not lost, unless you abandon it." I have learned this lesson from prior experience. "I am not just the procrastinator club president, but also a member!" Well, I am off to study for a chemistry test I have in less than two hours. Until next week. . .

You might start to think that you are not able to handle the pressures of college. You were destined to go to Barbizon Hair Academy and become a hair stylist. Or ITT Technical Institute, where you could get the training, "to provide you with the real hands on experience you will need in the real world."

I am not knocking any of these schools or professions, but I think you have to give college a second look over before deciding that it is too academically challenging for you. But don't fret, it only gets worse.

You seem as if you are going to hit the wall. In fact it seems as if it is only getting worse. The next stage you enter will be deep depression.

The depression that develops survives off of your anxiety. It feeds off of your problems and becomes a cancerous growth that seems unstoppable. You begin to act as if you are a zombie, going through the motions that can only be termed as surviving.

The downfall begins the first day of the semester. It is the beginning of the semester

Columnist warps good and evil

The world according to Michael Morrissey is a bipolar place. To some extent one is tempted to follow his column in Friday's Collegian. One might believe that there are in fact two kinds of people.

It is quite a common place to distinguish between people who scratch their butter and others who cut it. Also there are people who scoop their yogurt right away and others who stir it up first.

Yet Mr. Morrissey does not concern himself with such petty problems. He distinguishes between humans and people who are "simply. . . less than human." According to him, those subhumans are responsible for murder and drug traffic in the U.S.A. and should be "eliminated." In such cases, he argues, the death penalty should be mandatory, with no chance of appeal outside "extenuating circumstances." He claims this limit of appeal would save money and, I take it, money is on the good side of his good-vs.-evil universe.

Little does Mr. Morrissey know that he employed the arguments used by the Fascists to legitimize their mass murder. For him it might be an unimportant detail that his definition of unworthy life is as arbitrary as the Nazis'. He wrote his column in the 90's as if the 30's somehow had never happened. The Third Reich somehow evaded his attention. If not, then the Nazis certainly are on the good side of Morrissey's world. After all, they did what he supported so eloquently: state murder with no chance to appeal.

Still to some extent I support his bipolar view of life. I believe there are intellectuals and others who are just sloppy and lazy thinkers. The latter certainly should not hold positions as Collegian columnists.

Things you didn't know

My state of mind has been out of sorts and rather chaotic lately, so if I ramble on endlessly like a babbling fool, (much like I am doing right here and now at this precise moment) please do forgive me. The causes for my lack of snappy sprightliness can be attributed to the havoc-wreaking aspects of my oh-so-exciting life these past two weeks. Be prepared for some really swell stuff here. (Okay, so I'm slightly obsessed with Ward and June Cleaver.) Before we embark upon the zany mental scatter, I'd first like to share with you some interesting facts I obtained from the course of this past weekend.

Lorrie Cozzens

1. Ants will not cross over a chalk line. I don't know why. Nor have I tried it, but I certainly intend to.

2. No one can sneeze with her/his eyes opened. try it. It is a neat bar bet that could make you some bucks (or enemies).

3. Captain Kangaroo is Dweezil Zappa's grandfather. I'll bet that's something you never would have guessed. Oh, the amazing wonders of genetics.

Now back to our regularly scheduled column.

Did you ever procrastinate so badly that you spontaneously cleaned your whole room from top to bottom just to avoid reading that yawn-inducing book? For example, last Sunday I held my official "Monstrous Laundry Fest II." I even included the hand washables. You know it's a bad situation when I roll up my sleeves and break out the Woolite. I guess one more positive aspect of this whole thing is I won't have to do laundry again until at least Thanksgiving.

Is it just me, or is everyone around you (including me) feeling horribly sick and pathetically miserable? My mom promised that if I took those vitamins she sent everyday, this sort of suffering wouldn't happen anymore. Damn it! This is the second cold I've somehow managed to get this semester. I guess I'll call it "Cold Fest II." Oh please, someone pass me the Kleenex and the bottle of vitamin C.

Oh yes! For those of you who have been loyally following my column, you'll recall my last one was about assertiveness. A few people were kind enough to render me their outcomes as a result of reading my column, and I thought you might enjoy these "little ditties." (I'll bet you have not heard the word "ditty" since Mellencamp's "Jack and Diane.")

Goose reported that he made long term eye contact and exchanged hellos with a woman wearing an ROTC shirt. He was unable to pursue the conversation any further due to classes, but said that he did have a case of "warm fuzzies" for quite some time. I was offered a free facial, too.

But I know the one you've all been waiting for. You all want to know if I ever met up with the mysterious Monday Goat Trail Man. No! He never resurfaced. At least I tried.

I've come up with a way to to evade Housing once and for all.

I'm getting married. That's right! I'm taking on the old ball and chain. It's a marriage of convenience. See, a friend of mine needs more financial aid. I want to live off campus. We save on taxes. Plus, we can get married at the Silver Bells Wedding Chapel in Las Vegas for $55. What a deal.

My future spouse wanted to be wed at the Little White Chapel where they have a drive up window. I refused. I have this little nightmare of the minister saying, "Okay. So you take him. He takes you. You can kiss her now. Do you want fries with that?" Who knows? Anything is possible on this weird and crazy planet. If you can't be yourself, who can you be?

By the way: Yes, K.P.O., you can have my hand in matrimony.

Midterm stress breeds insanity

Midterms, midterms, midterms. That dreaded word midterms! "Oooh nooo, Mr. Bill!"

Okay, I think I can be sane now. What's my point? Hmmm. . . could it have something to do with midterms?

Starting with the stress of midterms beginning at the end of October and ending with the last final in December, a student's life quickly progresses into a painful series of headaches, nausea and pure lunacy. This period, the third in a total of seven stages of student development, is found immediately after the "partying stage" that comes from the beginning of the semester and the "other partying stage" caused by the never-traumatic ending of ceaseless finals.

Diana d'Avanzo

So what is my point, right? My point is this: we should get paid for what we go through! Think about it. Stress, fatigue, yucky food. Our lives have probably already been cut by third. The ironic thing is we don't get paid. We pay them! Now that is a classic.

Actually, I only want to share some humor with you, the reader, in an attempt to brighten your day — kind of like my column being one big Tylenol for thousands. Don't worry, I'll try to contain my excitement.

To start, let's look at our daily routine. For me, the little things become so noticeable and so darn funny. Take the simple process of alleviation. (How ya doin?) Did you ever notice when someone in the stall next to you produces a natural bodily noise they automatically cover it up with a clever clearing of the throat or they wait until they hear you leave before they, um, get up? Trust me, it happens. Next time you happen to be taking a load off your feet, listen. Don't say anything. Just listen because next time it could be you on the other fixture.

Speaking of hearing things, why do I always hear things during this time? Strange howls that proceed from the mouth for no other reason than to yell. And why am I always the source of these sporadic fits? Ha, ha, he, he, ho, ho! Just for the record, fits of laughter in the middle of a lecture are usually a sure indication that you're losing it. Unless, of course, the whole bunch of you lost it.

How about work? I always notice that I end up being really cracked up at work. However, it's not only me. Everyone is usually pretty messed up, but then again, who isn't? Besides, is it any fun if you're not?

Next topic: things that go bump in the night. A simple observation for your carnal pleasure. I've noticed that more things go bump in the nights around mid-semester than any other time. I was talking about slamming doors and the noisy pitter-patter of thundering footsteps, so get your mind out of the gutter.

I just want you to know I'm not really crazy. In fact, I'm quite sane when I don't have a ton O' work loading me down. Perhaps some day I'll have something serious to tell you. Actually, I will, but just not now. Now that I've gotten that off my conscience. . . A little tidbit of information for you: 1 percent slime solution reduces drag by 16 percent. Do you see the correlation? Well, I don't so could you try clearing it up for me?

When will it end? How will it end? Is this the end? Not yet, just one more paragraph. I was talking about midterms, remember? The question is midterms — those gut-wrenching Malmachian forms of slow torture that have been instituted to keep the masses in check. I would say skip them but that would be stupid. So just study and don't lose heart. Remember, if you're lucky you get to do this all over again next semester. May the force be with you.

U.N. sets the stage for another genocide

Imagine it is post World War II Europe and the Nazi Party has been invited to be part of a coalition government in Germany. If you can envision that outrageous prospect, then perhaps current events in Cambodia will make some sense to you.

In accordance with the plan of the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council, the Khmer Rouge will return to Cambodia as part of an interim coalition government, the Supreme National Council. Headed by the notorious Pol Pot, they killed over a million people in the 1970s, only to now be restored to rule Cambodia again. After the signing of the peace treaty in Paris at the end of October, the world is optimistically proclaiming that finally there will be "peace in Cambodia" after twelve years of brutal civil war and over two decades of bloody turmoil.

Numerous news articles have manufactured hopes of lasting peace. Yet, for the survivors of the Khmer Rouge genocide, this euphoria of peace evokes shivers of fear. The Khmer Rouge, whose genocidal atrocities are legend, will again enjoy power in Cambodia, albeit shared.

Certainly, one wonders why the murderous ultra-leftist Khmer Rouge are being allowed to participate in a power-sharing agreement when their crimes against humanity are well known. Is the world's memory that short? Is their apathy that strong? Or is this just the logical culmination of the activities of the West?

It has not been long since news of the Khmer Rouge genocide "shocked" the world. The brutalized and emaciated refugees' accounts of life under their regime of terror revealed their ruthless practices of torture, execution and slavery. However, this terrifying picture had a short life in the mind of the West.

After ouster by Vietnamese troops in 1979, and subsequent 12-year exile in Thailand, the rejuvenated Khmer Rouge are back, and headed by the very leaders who engineered the genocide during 1975-1979. Armed by China and "indirectly" supported by the United States, the Khmer Rouge is deadlier than ever.

They have never been punished for their crimes against humanity. Instead, they were used to fight a proxy war to counter Vietnam's influences in Cambodia. Through the 1980's to the present, they have been put in charge of hundreds of thousands of Cambodian people at the Thai-Cambodian border, in camps such as Site 8, which is under nominal United Nations' administration.

Boreth Sun

Ever since 1982, the Khmer Rouge have been rewarded by the West with control of Cambodian's seat at the U.N. The United States has repeatedly and exclusively voted in their favor, giving them political legitimacy to wage war against the Vietnamese-backed Cambodian government. Their military tactics continue to target civilians. They have planted thousands of land mines on roads and in rice fields that kill and maim 30-40 civilians per day, amounting to over 200,000 victims since 1979, mostly women and children. The land mines will be making life hell for citizens for years, as they cannot be recovered and defused easily. Nevertheless, these acts of terror seem to be acceptable to policy makers who have continued to use the Khmer Rouge as pawn in the "cold" war between Soviet, Chinese, and U.S. proxy armies.

Now, as the world enters the "New World Order," Cambodia and its problems will certainly be forgotten.

The fall of the communist bloc in Eastern Europe and the disintegration of the "Soviet Union" has forced Cambodia into a severe diplomatic and economic isolation. The Soviet Union has drastically reduced aid to Cambodia while the United States continues its embargo on humanitarian aid and trade. The four warring factions have gathered for various reasons in a UN-forced power-sharing agreement, including the Khmer Rouge and their allies. China is happy with the inclusion of its puppets, the Khmer Rouge, in the agreement. Westerners feel proud that they finally reached a peace accord that will end the prolonged and cruel conflict in Cambodia.

However, the U.N. peace treaty sets the stage for potential catastrophe. Only the Khmer Rouge stands to gain anything from it. The proposal calls for the demobilization of 70% of all military factions with the balance put under the U.N. supervision. Free elections are to follow and all political parties will be allowed to participate. While this plan sounds fair and just, the clear dangers are being ignored. The Khmer Rouge will surely elude disarmament due to thousands of secret arms caches in remote areas. Predictions that the Khmer Rouge will be defeated in an election do not take into account how they may react to such a defeat. Absent any evidence to the contrary, one must assume that they will immediately resume their former practices.

However, thanks to the West and the U.N., they are in place to forcibly take control of the country again. Only one day after the signing of the peace treaty, the Khmer Rouge have already prepared to forcefully repatriate tens of thousands of civilians living in the refugee camp under their direct control. Moderate camp administrators have mysteriously disappeared and been replaced with local Khmer Rouge commanders.

As a survivor of Pol Pot's genocide, I cannot understand the actions of the U.N. in asking the Cambodian people to make peace with their butchers and to restore these criminals to power. The Khmer Rouge have committed outrageous genocide without the world's condemnation. In fact, they have not just been tolerated, but revived and rehabilitated. This injustice demonstrates that the world is willing to toy once again with Cambodian lives.

The Cambodian people have suffered enormously for the misdeeds of their leaders and the whims of the Western World. We want lasting peace. This potential peace may be our last chance to live without fear of another bloodbath. It may mean we will finally be reunited with our families after being forcibly separated by years of violence and war. Yet, this "peace plan" that involves the perpetrators of the genocide may also be the beginning of another nightmare, unless the Khmer Rouge are prevented from gaining real political control.

We must ensure that the Khmer Rouge shall under no circumstances be allowed to have another opportunity to commit genocide. We must insist on the right of the Cambodian people to bring the criminals to justice, and prove that such crimes will not be tolerated. Pol Pot, Ieng Sary, and other top Khmer Rouge officials must be bought to justice to pay for their crimes. The history of the genocide must be remembered, not erased, if the world community intends to prevent another human catastrophe. The world owes this to the Cambodian people.

'International' or 'interfering' organizations?

Our Father who art in the "First World",
Hallowed by thy shame.
Thy kingdom come,
Thy will be done,
In Earth and in the "Third World".
Give us today our daily oil,
And forgive us our trespasses,
For we love the sins of the New World (Dis)order.
Do not lead us into the temptation of making nuclear bombs.
But please O Lord
Deliver us from the bleeding-heart, caviar internationalists.

We love internationalism, because it sounds like imperialism. Let us start alphabetically with Amnesty International.

Human rights evoke great passion among the intelligentsia of this hoary clubhouse. Isn't it true from their repeated reports that cannibalistic Neanderthal man inhabits the Third World?

Amnesty shed tears in India by being "concerned about the use of the Essential Services Maintenance Act of 1981, which allows the dismissal and arrest of strikers in a wide range of sectors declared to be essential services." Railway workers who earn a fortune compared to peasants can go on strike and make food rot in one place and cause starvation. After all, Amnesty's Persian Carpet can fly trains to India to take care of the situation.

Its reports on the Sandinista government of Nicaragua were replete with criticism for a "far-reaching public order law," but silent on the international order imposed by you-know-who.

The Amnesty International has amnesia about Article 28 of the International Declaration of Human Rights, which states - "Everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights...can be fully realized" - right to food, clothing, housing, medical, care, education etc.

It even ignores its own statute which calls to "maintain an overall balance between its activities in relation to countries adhering to the different political ideologies and groupings."

Its international executive committee is international indeed. In Pre-Orwellian 1983, it had only one Third World representative on its nine-member committee. Its coffers should not be so empty that it cannot purchase more characters from the Third World.

HOMELESS - Wafa Al-Abasi sits with her children in silent protest at the seizing of her home by Israeli settlers.

Rabi Dutta

In any case, before we are too enthusiastic about the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, let us examine the implication of Article 7 - "Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own...". Wonderful right for importing large kilograms of Indian and Chinese graduate students in the sciences and engineering. R2D2, the robot, must be jealous at how well some of the creme de la creme of these populous nations have been programmed to articulate "First World" interests.

Deliver us beasts from Amnesty International and Human Rights.

A for Amnesty, B for Bombs, C for Chemical Weapons, D for Death Squads, E for Exocets, F for fuel-air explosives, G for...you guessed it... GREENPEACE...

The plethora of Green parties are the greatest friends of the Third World. Through their untiring efforts they teach us that the depletion of the ozone layer would cause cancer to sunbathing mammals. Is it not wonderful that chlorofluorocarbons, the chief agent used in refrigeration cause the depletion? We don't refrigerate our vegetables too much now, and we don't deserve to do so in the future. We are therefore forced into unequal treaties with vague promises to compensate us with some money and maybe some obsolete technology, because we howled rather loudly.

Let us talk about carbon dioxide emissions. Most of the emissions are caused by Europe and North America. China and India would love to tax the motorists and electricity users in North American and Europe as compensation. Make that the Green manifesto and see how many accolades you get in America, Europe and Japan.

Imagine what would happen if the Third World got as civilized and industrialized as the First world. Won't the world get choked from their coal based power plants... but wait, you must hide the relatively clean nuclear technology in the chest because after all, it might be used to make bombs instead of producing energy.

Deliver us from the smoke and fire of the environmentalists.

The old bad boys of the U.N. are always there in the form of the veto-empowered oligarchy of the Insecurity Council to restore stability and stop revolution in the world. It is the most brilliant product manufactured by the victors of the second great tribal war (the Second World War according to my Third World dictionary) of the industrialized countries. Under the umbrella of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, Intellectual Property rights are imposed on the errant barbarians.

Under the umbrella of copyright, patents, and trademarks we would be forced to pay royalties to the kingly multinationals in the civilized world. India cannot produce cheap medicines like tetracycline without paying money to someone whose granddad invented it. Wonder why these individuals and corporations of the industrialized world don't pay taxes to the Third World countries in which their inventions will be protected.

They demand trade in services. This means that the banks and insurance companies of the oligarchy can operate in the Third World freely. However our carpenters and barbers cannot work in industrialized countries. The "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity" regimes of the First World have always claimed banking as civilized and carpentry as uncivilized. Some in the Third World are already selling their kidneys, hearts and livers to bestow immortality on the gods of the First World. Maybe we are expected to seal our carpenters in wooden crates made in the First World and indulge in merchandise trade instead of trade in services.

The depredations of the International Monetary Fund, the World bank and financial corporations of the world are too dangerous to discuss here. Hence, I am imposing self-censorship.

Deliver us from these august institutions.

The religious groups indulging in the imperialism of righteousness are the gentlefolk of the industrialized world. They don their spotless white robes and merrily convert the heathen with promises of money. After all doesn't the euphemism 'developing nations' mean that they are not just economically but morally, culturally and spiritually underdeveloped?

The Nobel War prize gets awarded to Kissinger and Amnesty. I have no quarrels when they award prizes to themselves. However, now they award it to protest the actions of a government which has cut all land links from the rest of the world. Now, I don't know what the situation in Myanmar is. But, I sure know that whenever someone gets the War prize there must be a reason.

Deliver us from the missionaries of mercy.

Lastly let CNN broadcast everyday the 10 commandments to the Third World.

Thou shalt toil hard.
Thou shalt sell for free all thy produce.
Thou shalt not have the right to bear arms.
Thou shalt not form regional associations.
Thou shalt pay thy debts to bankers.
Thou shalt not educate thyself.
Thou shalt not covet thy neighbors' wealth.
Thou shalt be respectful in thy conduct to thy masters.
Thou shalt not think.
Thou shalt not protest.

Trekkies get a dose this week on HSCN

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

Hey all you Trekkies out there! This is your week for movies! The first three Star Trek movies are being shown as well as many other picks and pans.

All About Eve — Bette Davis, Anne Baxter, George Sanders. Based on the story "The Wisdom of Eve," by Mary Orr, this brilliant script takes a close, cynical look at the life of the theater. Six Oscars were won for this accomplishment. ****

...And Justice for All — Al Pacino, Jack Warden, John Forsythe. Pacino is a lawyer who battles the judicial system of Maryland. The satire is hysterical and mixes well with some touchingly sad moments about the lies and truths of justice. ***

Star Trek — The Motion Picture — William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelly. The crew of the starship Enterprise embarks on a journey to battle a deadly force field headed for Earth. Slow and wordy, but dazzling special effects and an amazing score by Jerry Goldsmith. 1/2

Star Trek II — The Wrath of Khan — William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley. The Enterprise crew comes up against the evil villain (Ricardo Montalban) shown originally in the 1967 "Space Seed" episode. Cute but somewhat pretentious. Recommended mainly for Trekkies. **

Star Trek III — The Search for Spock — William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley. (Surprised?) Nimoy directed this film, picking up where the second one left off. No great surprises in this one, but it's put together much better than the previous movie. ***

City Slickers — Billy Crystal, Daniel Stern, Bruno Kirby. Views middle-aged men on the verge of a middle-aged crisis. They go to a ranch and meet up with crusty range-rider, Jack Pallance, who is superb in the role. I smiled for days afterwards. ****

Enemies, A Love Story — Anjelica Huston, Ron Silver, Lena Olin. A Jewish intellectual manages to evade the Nazis during World War II and comes to America, living a double life married to two women and fooling around with a third. Tastefully witty and haunting. ****

The Freshman — Marlon Brando, Matthew Broderick, Maximillian Schell. An NYU student falls in love with a mob family in this light comedy. Brando is wonderful in his "Godfather"-like self. ***

From the Hip — Judd Nelson, Elizabeth Perkins, John Hurt. A pathetic lawyer whose courtroom antics are clever enough to induce a yawn finds that he must defend in a murder case. Hurt's performance is the only bright spot in this disastrous movie. *

Heathers — Winona Ryder, Christian Slater, Shannen Doherty. One of these days, Christian Slater will realize that there is already a Jack Nicholson in the movie business. This movie is a startlingly truthful portrayal of high school snobbery. ***

Home Alone — Macaulay Culkin, Catherine O'Hara, Joe Pesci. Okay, is there anyone out there who hasn't seen this one yet? Hello? Anyone? Okay, okay, if you haven't tell me you don't know the plot. There was more hype to this movie than I thought humanly possible, and I thought I was the last one to see it. I loved it anyway, despite its cutesie-pieness. Sigh. ***

I Love You to Death — Kevin Kline, Tracey Ullman, Keanu Reeves. A slick womanizer (Kline) thinks his extra-marital affairs are unknown to his wife (Ulmann), but she does find out and attempts (unsuccessfully) to murder him. Some hysterical scenes make this movie enjoyable and fun. Ullman'll leave you in stitches. 1/2

Date With an Angel — Michael E. Knight, Phoebe Cates, Emmanuelle Beart. An angel with the appropriate striking beauty (Beart) crashes into Knight's pool on the night of his bachelor party. Unfortunately, not much can save this monstrous disaster. In a word: Heinous. No Stars.

Jacobs Ladder — Tim Robbins, Danny Aiello, Macaulay Culkin. A Vietnam Vet goes through nightmarish psychological deterioration induced by drugs. Where dreams become reality and vice versa confused me thoroughly, and I was thoroughly disappointed. *

Jumpin' Jack Flash — Whoopi Goldberg, Stephen Collins, Carol Kane. Goldberg is a computer operator in a bank who accidentally becomes involved in the plea of a man who is trying to defect. Goldberg is entirely too talented for this pitiful script, but she does add a lively note to the drabness. One particular monologue when she is in the bank alone at night had me on the floor. *1/2

Labyrinth — David Bowie, Jennifer Connelly, Toby Froud. Directed by Muppet master Jim Henson, this take off of Alice in Wonderland is a fresh, honest movie. Conelly's baby brother is kidnapped by the king of the Goblins (Bowie) and she must embark on a journey through a seemingly impossible labyrinth to rescue him. 1/2

School Daze — Larry Fishburne, Giancarlo Esposito, Tisha Campbell. Director Spike Lee describes life on a black college campus in the south where one student fights a battle against the administration as well as his fellow students. Entertaining and insightful. ***

Silver Streak — Gene Wilder, Jill Clayburgh, Richard Pryor. Hitchcock imitation of a murder on a cross-country train with a comic undertone. Wilder is hilarious as ever, but the sudden switch from comedy to violence is sometimes confusing. **

Movies not reviewed but appearing on HSCN this week are Madonna: Truth of Dare and Postcards from the Edge.

If you love college life, make a career of it.

Boston-Bouvé College, at Northeastern University in Boston, is the only institution in eastern Massachusetts that offers a Master's Degree program in the area of student personnel services in higher education. By stressing both counseling and administrative skills, the program trains you to effectively provide students with vital support services. Two concentrations are offered: COLLEGE STUDENT PERSONNEL WORK and ACADEMIC ASSISTANCE COUNSELING. The coursework and the student services practicum may be completed in one year of full-time study or on a part-time basis. Many of the full-time students are awarded graduate assistantships that are related to the program and which provide partial or full tuition remission and a stipend. Some of the assistantships also include free room and board.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): A great day for making a fresh start! Replace bad manners with good ones. You get support for a pet project that was rejected earlier. Evening will provide a happy romantic surprise.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): An excellent day for signing contracts and agreements. Legal matters are likely to be settled in your favor. You are practiced at getting your own way. Share the limelight with loved ones.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): A period of reflection produces a wise decision and inner peace. Your co-workers look to you for leadership. Do not let them down. Plan a dinner for two at your favorite restaurant with your favorite Scorpio.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Put a child's needs ahead of your own. Romance may have to wait. Your colleagues respect you but are afraid to hire you. They fear that you know more than they do!

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Give generously of your time or money. A special favor will be richly repaid. Anticipate delays or foul-ups in a business transaction and be patient.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): To keep the course of romance smooth, be patient. A verbal or written financial arrangement proves beneficial. Words bring change - make your views known to influential people.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Ventures shared, either for profit or pleasure, bring tremendous satisfaction. Why not use a gift to say something nice? Your down-to-earth manner impresses a potential romantic partner.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good day to perfect both business and family plans. Pour your energies into a project already on the launching pad. A woman's ideas give your spirits a lift. Dine out tonight.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day for instigating changes at work or home. Greater self-discipline will help you solve a tricky personal problem. Give a close friend a token of your love.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Those with tax problems should consult experts only. A lawyer or accountant offers excellent advice; follow it to the letter. Romance takes on exciting new overtones. A wedding date may be set.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Now is the time to make big changes! Creative and artistic pursuits deserve top priority. Career advancement is easier than in the past. An important event could take place this evening.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): The financial picture improves, thanks to a friend's behind-the-scenes maneuvering. Keep a promise to your loved ones. The more you give, the more you will receive.

Women's swim team drops first to Vermont

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swim team placed first in four events yesterday at Boyden Pool. However, it wasn't enough to win as they dropped their first meet this season to New England rival, the University of Vermont, 172.5-127.5.

"We swam well," Coach Bob Newcomb said. "We were just on the wrong end of the final score."

It was the first time Vermont defeated UMass in four years. Vermont coach Joe Fischer said his team, which is composed of a majority of seniors, was motivated by revenge coming in to the competition.

"They just wanted to beat UMass at least one time in four years," Fischer said. "We had a tremendous team performance as we prepared mentally and really pulled together as a group."

"I knew it was going to be a competitive meet," Newcomb said. "They always seem to be up for us."

Kim Broad led the Minutewomen, placing first in the 500 and 1,000-yard freestyle events with times of 5:21.09 and 11:02.82, respectively.

UMass' Jen Jackson led the field in the 200-yd butterfly, finishing in 2:11.68, which qualifies her for the Eastern Championships at the end of the season. Jackson also placed second in the 100-yd butterfly with a personal best time of 1:00.92

The University of Massachusetts women's swim team was defeated by the University of Vermont yesterday at Boyden Pool. The Minutewomen placed first in four events.

Minutewoman Kate Riddell swam to a personal best time in the 200-yd backstroke, finishing fourth in 2:21.57.

"We swam the way we thought we were going to, even better," Newcomb said. "We're swimming fast and with the talent we have and the way we've been training, we'll improve."

Diver Allison White, who holds the UMass school record in both the one and three-meter dives, continued her dominance of the events as she won the one-meter yesterday with 225.45 total points. Her score of 203.55 positioned her third in the three-meter.

"They're a super team," Fischer said. "I thought they had a great meet today, we just had a better one."

Vermont's Lisa Clavaglia took the top spot in the three-meter dive with a point total of 209.30

Newcomb said the team has been set back by several injuries and sickness so far this season.

"It's going to take another three or four weeks before we return to a healthy team," he said.

Last Saturday, the Minutewomen started the season on a more positive note. The Minutewomen traveled to Smith and returned with a 185-113 victory.

Michelle Kersberger, Nancy Deluca and Amy Bloomstein had standout performances.

Amy Lewis also swam well in both the 100 and 200-yd breast stroke events and Trish Dowdall impressed in the 1,000-yd freestyle.

Newcomb described this year's schedule as "upgraded from last year" with the addition of Boston University and Delaware.

"We expect to start off the season tentatively," Newcomb said. "But, we should have a strong team built up for the New England Championships at the end of the season.

Newcomb's young squad continues their pursuit of a New England title as they host Boston University at 7 p.m., Nov. 13.

Scott's shots testing the column market

In order that we may serve you, the reader, in a better way, this column is conducting a test.

This is only a test and the only obligation you will have is to respond in some way, shape or form as to whether or not this melange of sports obscurities should continue on a weekly or monthly basis, or if the whole concept should be scratched like a dog with fleas.

All respondents will be entered in our "Have a Beer with Tamir (pronounced Ta-Meer)" contest. Ladies, don't miss this once in a lifetime opportunity.

Here is your free sample of "Scott's Shots":

• All of this talk about Don King being involved with organized crime is about as surprising as Dick MacPherson saying, "The boys really played their hearts out today."

Let's be real, boxing and organized crime are synonyms much like watching the New York Marathon was as good as saying you took a two-hour nap.

• The Patriots are looking for a field goal kicker to replace Jason "Call me Stravinsky" Staurovsky. If they can wait until the tournament is over, UMass women's soccer goalie Brianna Scurry is a prime candidate.

She couldn't do any worse than Houston's ex-kicker Ian Howfield, who missed a potential game-winning field goal in the Oilers' loss to Washington last Sunday. He also missed three extra points the week before and was released yesterday.

David Scott

The rookie cried when he met the press after being cut. Somehow I can't picture a linebacker crying if he was canned, but it did show the human side to sports.

• It's amazing all the ink that Jordan is getting at the Middle East Peace Conference. First the guy dismantles the Lakers in last year's NBA finals and now he's trying to reorganize the West Bank. I like Mike, but he should stick to hoops.

• I'd say the Celtics are hurting a bit when a 300-pound beach ball (John Bagley) is bringing the ball up court. Dee's out and Brian Shaw's injuries recur as often as stomach pains after a three-burrito meal at Taco Bell. It might be nice for Bob Cousy to take off the headset and pick up the ball.

• Robert Parish is surely one of the most underrated players in the league, but Chief doesn't seem to mind - he just keeps doing his job. He's a man of few words but his play does most of the talking.

• In other boxing news, the Bruins scored a fourth round knockout of the Red Wings last Saturday night at the Garden. The melee was one of those rare times when fan participation was somewhat allowed. The B's won the undercard as well.

• The Marathon Men were the first to learn that Coach John Calipari's hoop team is going to be a force this year. The Oil guys were lacking the bench necessary to compete with UMass' depth and they seemed baffled by the way William Herndon can be such a force with his shorts at his ankles. (Each time Herndon

Patriot shares message at UM

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

On Sunday afternoons New England Patriots free safety Fred Marion is a receiver's worst nightmare with his tenacious defensive prowess and incredible tackling abilities.

Conversely, the Fred Marion that was in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center yesterday resembled almost anything but a man who has over 850 career tackles.

In Amherst to speak with junior and senior high school students, Marion, a 10-year Patriots veteran, spent two hours in the concourse on behalf of the Alliance Christian Fellowship, a registered student organization.

"I'm here to share the spiritual need that is in every man's life," said the soft-spoken Marion. "Just letting people know that despite what happens, the Lord can always help us out of every situation."

Marion said he became a Christian in 1985, the same year the Patriots went to the Super Bowl. He is convinced there is some correlation.

"My career really took off after the Super Bowl," Marion said. "Ever since then, there have been good things happening to me."

Marion was a 1985 Pro Bowl selection and had a key interception in that season's AFC Championship game against Miami. (Coincidentally, Marion is native of Gainesville, FL and a graduate of the University of Miami.)

Marion, 32, is tied for fourth on the Patriots all-time interception list and has started in over 100 consecutive games for the Patriots.

Even the disappointment of last year's abysmal season, when the Pats went 1-15, was alleviated through Marion's belief in Jesus Christ, he said.

"I have attained so much in understanding the importance of Christ, not just last season but every day of my life," Marion said.

Elizabeth Tan, associate director of the Alliance Christian Fellowship, said that Marion's presence helped convey the Fellowship's message.

"We're trying to make a available the opportunities to find out that believing in God is relevant in the 1990s," Tan said.

Perhaps all this talk of finding meaning in religion is ironic for a man who plays in a sport which players earn millions of dollars. But, Marion makes an interesting analogy.

"Even the wealthiest men or women in the world, who you would think have achieved so much materialistically, are missing something," Marion said. "It's our obligation to show people that if they submit their life to the Lord. He can change their lives."

Reorganization of both upper management and the coaching staff, gives Marion reason to believe that the Patriots are heading in the right direction.

"We're starting to focus on the positive and not dwelling on the negative," Marion said. "In time, the close games we're losing now, we'll win."

Marion said he pulled an abdominal muscle during the Patriots' loss at Buffalo last Sunday but he will be ready to go this Sunday night against the Dolphins.

"By the grace of God I will be able to play," Marion laughed.

Field hockey hosts Dartmouth

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Things aren't always as bad as they seem. Except when they are.

Confused? Don't worry. The University of Massachusetts field hockey team may be confused also, and with good reason. As they prepare to face Dartmouth College today (3 p.m., Totman Field) in their home finale, the team's post-season fate is still in limbo.

UMass survived the latest NCAA poll yesterday, as they only dropped to No. 9 in the country, while Northwestern, Temple and Boston University moved ahead of them. The Minutewomen lost to BU, but beat both Northwestern and Temple. The drop hurts their chances of an NCAA playoffs berth, but doesn't kill them, as some feared.

"Considering our weekend, for us to go from six to nine, I'm thanking my lucky stars," Coach Pam Hixon said. "It gives us life, it really does. We thought we were history, but everyone else seemed to lose too."

In addition, the Atlantic 10 Conference winner does not receive an automatic berth in the NCAAs, due to the departure of Penn State.

The NCAA only gives automatic bids to conferences with six or more teams in a given sport. The A-10 presently has five teams participating in field hockey, but they had six last year until Penn State left.

On the flip side, UMass is now below Temple in the poll. It takes some pressure off it being a favorite and an upset win over Temple in the A-10 Championships would most likely lift them into the NCAA Tournament.

"Temple has moved up in the rankings, which is great," Hixon exclaimed. "Being the underdog is great. Now somebody else has got to take the heat, and we can play a little reckless."

UMass may play a little reckless tomorrow against Dartmouth, a 4-10 Ivy League team that may struggle to be competitive with the Minutewomen.

Dartmouth's only scoring threat is sophomore Jane Eckels, who leads the team with seven goals. Eckels will be the most-watched player on the field by UMass.

Goaltender Jen Clark has an unsightly 2.12 goals against average, which may or may not reflect the poor play of the team.

As for Hixon's strategy against Dartmouth, expect the Minutewomen to shoot the ball early and often. The team will also try to do what they can to keep the ball away from Eckels.

Hixon said she felt the team has become more outcome oriented, rather than performance oriented.

"We're back to the basics, and we're just going to shoot to be competitive every minute," she said. "We got to a point in the season, in the last couple of weeks, where we were afraid to lose. That's the sure sign that you're going to.

"Now we have to step out there, and we just have to play to win."

HOOP TICKETS

Student tickets for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball game against the Lithuanian National Team on Tuesday, Nov. 12 will be available between 7 a.m. and 3 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 7 in the lobby of Curry Hicks Cage.

Tickets will be issued to students in possession of a VALID UNDERGRADUATE I.D. ONLY.

Graduates to strike next week

TAs say better contract will halt action

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization "overwhelmingly" voted to strike next Thursday unless the University administration offers further concessions toward their three remaining demands, said a top GEO official after a three-hour closed-door meeting attended by about 600 graduate students.

"We feel now that we are forced to go out on strike in order to get our demands met," said co-speaker Emily Isaacs at the press conference immediately following the membership meeting. "Clearly, if there is a contract we can ratify, we'll take that move."

The three demands the organization said remain unmet at this time are health benefits, an agency fee and job security.

The graduate students will hold a rally at noon today at the Student Union steps and march to Whitmore, Isaacs said. Extended balloting will be offered today and Friday to members unable to attend yesterday's meeting, she added.

The organization voted for the strike by a hand vote.

GEO represents all graduate students including 2,200 teaching and research assistants, interns and fellows.

"This has been a long fight for us," Isaacs said. "It has been 10 months." She said the campus community has been "extremely supportive."

Isaacs also asked for undergraduate support.

"They have the power to pressure the administration to end this dispute," she said.

When informed of the results of the membership vote, Chancellor Richard O'Brien said, "I am dissapointed since we have made some outstanding offers."

He said granting graduate employees a partial waiver on health benefits agreeable to the GEO has been made impossible by budgetary constraints.

"There is no spare money," O'Brien said. "We've agreed to tax the whole University to pay part of their health fees."

The GEO has rejected the administration's lastest offer to pay a part of the graduate student's health benefits.

Susan Pearson, chief negotiator for the administration, said they proposed yesterday afternoon to pay for 20 percent of the graduate students' total health costs for this year.

"I'm certainly disappointed," Pearson said. "I think we made a more than reasonable proposal this afternoon."

Isaacs also said the administration "has not offered us adequate language to prevent disproportionate cuts to teaching assistants." The GEO has demanded such cuts be proportionate to declines in the undergraduate enrollment.

O'Brien responded that the GEO has been utilizing "erroneous numbers" to support their demand for job security. He said undergraduate enrollemnt has declined 15 percent in the past three years and said, "The number of TAs has gone down almost exactly the same amount," O'Brien said. "The decline of TA's has almost exactly mirrored that."

Student Senate debates GEO

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate debated undergraduate concerns revolving around the impending strike by the Graduate Employees Organization last night.

Speaker Bob Monaghan said the meeting was designed to gain a sense of the undergraduate community's feelings about the stalled contract negotiations between GEO and the University administration.

"We wanted to make a determination of how people feel about the issue and have the senate leadership act accordingly," Monaghan said.

Monaghan said the issues affecting graduate students at the University could have a definite impact on undergraduates.

"It's positive for undergraduates to become active — students will start to question their living situation," he said.

Half way through the debate, GEO member Jim Delle came in and announced that GEO would delay announcement of a strike until next week, pending the results of further negotiations with the administration.

Delle urged undergraduates to write

UM candidates' 'straight pride' views examined

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Anti-gay statements expressed last semester by Paul McGonnigal have caused some to question his candidacy in the race for the Amherst-Pelham state representative seat vacated recently by Stanley Rosenberg.

The heart of the controversy stems from the second annual "Straight Pride" rally held last semester by three conservative groups on campus — the Republican Club, The Minuteman and the Young Americans for Freedom.

The rally became a shouting match between conservatives and members and supporters of the Lesbian Gay Bisexual Alliance. Whistles, shouts, chants and screams came from the crowd and the speakers shouted back, angry about their inability to be heard.

Over 2,000 dead in Philippines

Tropical storm causes flash floods and landslides

By OLIVER TEVES
Associated Press

TACLOBAN, Phillippines — Flash floods triggered by Tropical Storm Thelma unleashed landslides in the central Philippines that killed more than 2,300 people and left 1,500 missing and feared dead, officials said Wednesday.

Officials said the bodies of the missing may never be found because they were swept out to sea or buried under tons of debris.

Most of the deaths from Tuesday's storm occurred in the port city of Ormoc on the central island of Leyte, where nearly six inches of rain fell in 24 hours on steep mountains that were heavily logged and thus open to landslides.

In Ormoc, witnesses said the victims, who were mostly children, were buried or swept away in a landslide that rolled through town, tossing away trucks and burying coastal shantytowns under mud, debris and floodwater.

Officials in the provincial capital, Tacloban, said the death toll was based on body counts. But Vilma Tan, a regional civil defense official from Ormoc, said authorities were so overwhelmed by the calamity that they were having problems compiling complete, accurate casualty figures.

Winston Garcia, a provincial official on neighboring Cebu Island, said officials there had received a radio appeal for help from Ormoc Mayor Maria Victoria Locsin. "Ormoc is completely cut off," he said, quoting Mrs. Locsin. "The bridges are completely out. There is not much food in the area."

Although the storm struck Tuesday, communications to the central Phillippines are primitive, and the devastation was so swift and complete that it took a full day for officials in Manila to grasp the scope of the carnage.

Aurora Ladoy of the Leyte Provincial Disaster Coordinating Center said the death toll on Leyte stood at 2,337. The island, where former first lady Imelda Marcos' home is located, is 250 miles south of Manila.

Of those killed, 2,002 people, many children, died in Ormoc, and 52 people died on the neighboring island of Negros, Mrs. Ladoy and other officials said.

She said the landslide in Ormoc from nearby mountains was so powerful it washed away trucks and vans and buried people before they could escape.

Travelers from Ormoc said bodies were lying unattended in the streets more than 24 hours after the disaster.

Cebu provincial Gov. Lito Osmena, who flew to Ormoc by helicopter today to offer assistance, said: "It looked like it was a Nazi (death) camp. Children and old people were piled on top of each other."

Yet he said the death toll from the midday landslide could have been higher if it had taken place at night. If that had happened, he said, "We would have tens of thousands dead."

The death toll appeared to have surpassed two other major natural disasters in the Phillippines. In July 1990, an earthquake measuring 7.7 on the Richter scale killed nearly 1,700 people on Luzon, the main island.

About 700 people have been killed on Luzon since Mount Pinatubo volcano erupted in June. Many of the victims died of disease in refugee camps or from avalanches of volcanic debris.

Mrs. Tan said there were so many bodies littering the streets that officials were hauling them away in wheelbarrows.

"I saw one van with bodies piled on top of each other with legs and arms protruding out," Mrs. Tan said by telephone from the provincial capital, Tacloban.

She said officials in Ormoc were carrying out mass burials because they lacked decontaminants, but that a makeshift morgue had also been established at Ormoc's health clinic, where families could go to identify and retrieve bodies of their relatives.

Swaggart caught with prostitute

INDIO, Calif. (AP) — Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart paid a $205.50 traffic ticket issued after the embattled preacher was stopped while traveling with a woman who identified herself as a prostitute.

Swaggart paid the fine by mail and avoided a scheduled Nov. 15 court appearance, an Indio Municipal Court official said this week.

The evangelist was charged with driving on the wrong side of the road, driving an unregistered vehicle and failing to wear a seat belt.

Police stopped Swaggart's 1989 Jaguar after the car swerved onto the wrong side of the road Oct. 11 in this desert town about 100 miles east of Los Angeles.

His companion, Rosemary Garcia, 31, of Indio, told reporters that she is a prostitute. She said Swaggart became nervous when he saw the police car and weaved when he tried to stuff some pornographic materials under a car seat.

Swaggart since has resigned from the board of his Jimmy Swaggart Ministries and is on leave from the pulpit.

In 1988, Swaggart resigned from the Assemblies of God, the nation's largest Pentecostal denomination, after a fellow preacher released photos showing him with a New Orleans prostitute.

Anti-choice activists still in jail

CRANSTON, R.I. (AP) — Ten of the 98 abortion protestors arrested Saturday at a Cranston women's clinic have posted bail, leaving 71 under lock at the Adult Correctional Institutions.

The activists, members of the Christian anti-abortion group, Operation Rescue, were arrested at the Women's Medical Center during a protest that attracted 1,000 people from both sides of the abortion issue.

They were charged with disorderly conduct, conspiracy to commit disorderly conduct and obstructing a police officer.

Ten were released Tuesday after $500 was posted by friends and family members of each, Corrections Department spokesman Joseph DiNitto said.

Mary Schumacher, Boston coordinator of Operation Rescue, said the group would go to federal court to challenge the bail that was set by District Court Judge Gilbert Indeglia after many of the protesters refused to provide their Social Security numbers.

"They know we're going to return to court. In fact, we probably want to go to court more than they do," she said. "We suspect he wants to take bail from us so we can forfeit it later if we are found guilty."

But Operation Rescue lawyers had not filed the papers by Tuesday evening, court clerks said.

Schumacher said protesters, whom she refused to identify, complained of being kept in segregated cells with more violent prisoners, of verbal and physical abuse by prisoners and guards and of a priest being forced to shower in front of women guards.

Freed activist Ralph T. Carlton of Arlington, Mass., complained about his care to Indeglia during Monday's hearing.

We're being strip-searched in front of women guards at the prison," Carlton said. "And women are watching men take showers."

Another group of activists was frightened into silence in a cafeteria when another inmate took exception to their singing songs during meal time.

"He screamed at them, and you could hear a pin drop afterwards," an unidentified prison official told The Providence Journal-Bulletin.

Winter Session 1992 Catalog Is Here!

So, what exactly is Winter Session?
- a unique "mini-semester," just three weeks long

Well, what's so unique about it?
- you can earn 3 academic credits in only 3 weeks
- over 100 credit courses, including gen. ed. designated classes

How can Winter Session help me?
You can:
- take a class you couldn't get before
- make up credits
- meet graduation requirements
- lighten your spring course load

Winter Session 1992 — January 2-23
Registration by mail only begins November 9.
(Registrations must be postmarked no earlier than November 9.)

'English only' discussed

Said to produce racism, xenophobia

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

"Racism and Xenophobia are products of 'English Only'," said Sonia Nieto last night, a University of Massachusetts professor of multicultural education, as part a five-strong panel discussing "Multiculturalism and the 'English Only' movement."

All five members of the panel were against the 'English Only' movement, which they said, advocates uniformity of language and thus culture throughout the United States, foremost at grass-roots level, in K-12 schools.

Emmon Bach, Professor of Linguistics at The University of Massachusetts ascribed the "English Only" movement to the typical American thrust "toward uniformity" in all areas of its culture. He stressed the damaging and narrowing effects the success of such a movement would have on the diversity of American society, an intricate patchwork of different cultures and languages.

Bach dismissed the movement's claim that a large number of immigrants to America have no desire to learn English, and the resulting threat to "American culture." Bach said classes teaching English as a second language were already overcrowded across the country. He stressed the absurdity of what he spoke of as the typical American fear of anything that is "different."

Harry Seymour, professor of communication disorders, here at the University of Massachusetts, who has the "responsibility of identifying those with speech problems," said that a disproportunate number of foreign children have been classified as mentally handicapped or as having severe learning disabilities in The United States. It is a gross "misclassification" according to Seymour, who insisted that speech tests should be carried out on children in their native tongue, not in a language which they are relatively new to. He attributed the high drop-out rates of minority groups (25-75 percent) from high school to these misclassifications.

Sonia Nieto spoke "as educator," describing English Only as "Robbing people of their dignity." The high hopes of first-generation immigrants become crushed under the shame they are taught to feel for their native culture and language, she said.

In a survey conducted last year at Holyoke Public High School, at which a high proportion of the students are Puerto-Rican, Nieto said figures showed that of those Puerto-Ricans who had received a bilingual education, in Spanish and English, 31 percent had dropped out prior to graduation, whereas of those who had received only an English education, 69 percent dropped out. She asked those assembled, what more proof could be needed to demonstrate the destructive nature of the 'English Only' movement.

Also on the panel were Rosalie Pedalino Porter, the Director of Research in English Acquisition and Development, Washington D.C., and Marcus Raskin, Director of the Institute for Policy Studies, Washington D.C.

Human error shuts down long-distance calling

By TONY ROGERS
Associated Press

BOSTON — A malfunction that knocked out most long-distance calling in New England and caused flight delays as far away as New York was caused by human error, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. officials said Wednesday.

Tuesday night's failure was the second major disruption of AT&T service in as many months, and analysts said the glitches show how the nation's largest long-distance company has neglected its backup systems while competing with other carriers.

"AT&T was accused a long time ago of building in too much redundancy," said Richard Toole, a Merril Lynch & Co. analyst.

"Then they get into a competitive mode where they have to compete with MCI and Sprint, and obviously they don't have the redundancy to keep this from happening."

AT&T officials disputed that charge, and blamed the recent breakdowns on an increase in the volume of calls.

"The fact that we're now in a fiercely competitive industry has spurred AT&T to invest very heavily in enhancing the reliability and quality of its network, to the tune of many, many billions of dollars," said AT&T spokesman Paul Karoff.

The breakdown disrupted 60 percent of long distance telephone service for 2 1/2 hours in parts of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, and Maine, AT&T officials said.

The failure was caused by a worker doing maintenance at a long-distance transmission facility in Blackstone, a town southwest of Boston near the Rhode Island border, Karoff said.

"The preliminary assessment is that a step was missed in what should have been a standard operating procedure," Karoff said.

"They were changing hardware on the system, which has customer-like components to it."

Karoff said the work had been done at three similar AT&T facilities around the country without incident Tuesday.

The interruption occured about 7:55 p.m. Service was restored about 10:30 p.m. by rerouting calls. It was unclear how many customers had been affected, Karoff said.

AT&T service was disrupted to and from New York on Sept. 17, bringing air traffic to a halt at the city's three major airports and affecting travelers nationwide, including Logan airport in Boston. Long-distance telephone service to and from New York was not restored for seven hours.

The New York malfunction was also blamed on employee error. The company suffered a nationwide service outage in January 1990 because of software problems.

"We're taking steps to make sure this doesn't happen again," Karoff said. "You try for perfect service every minute of every day, but in the real world we're talking about systems and people behind systems, both of which are fallible.

Mike Ciccarelli, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in New England, said the telephone outage affected communication between some aircraft and ground personnel at airports.

The breakdown caused 20 delays of at least an hour in departures from Logan Airport, said Mary Culver, FAA spokeswoman in Boston.

Conservative UMass mellows

By ARI VAIS
Collegian Staff

Second in a two-part series.

The Republican Club isn't what it used to be. Former University shock-jounalists and campus celebrities Brian Darling and W. Greg Rothman have graduated and left the area (the former is now working for a conservative talk show in Washington D.C., while the latter has been selling real estate in Harrisburg, Pa. and has recently joined the Marines.)

The new face of conservative UMass is kinder and gentler. The Minuteman newspaper, which used to make a point of offending the politically correct crowd, has evolved into a more serious conservative journal of opinion.

Now led by Charles Delano, editor of The Minuteman and Jim Garstka, president of the club, the Young Republicans has toned down its ultra-controversial image considerably. The notorious shouting matches between the conservatives and the liberals outside of the Student Union have all but been forgotten.

As far as the upcoming presidential election is concerned, members of the Republican Club and the University Democrats share many opinions: both organizations feel that George Bush has a excellent chance at serving a second term; neither club, however, regards the president highly.

Of the Democratic candidates, both see some as having no shot and others as being intelligent and worthwhile.

But as the UDems prepare for a busy year of campaigning, Delano and Garstka are confident and relaxed.

"There isn't very much we need to do. People already know who George Bush is, they already like him. And he's got plenty of campaign money already.", Garstka said, pacing the spacious Republican office confidently. He and other members of the club will do some campaigning around the University in the spring, but not a lot else.

Delano said the only issue that could possibly hurt Bush is today's economy.

"That's all [the Democrats] can possibly say. He is still very popular. Immediately after the war, his popularity skyrocketed. If we can have a Middle East resolution soon, he will be unbeatable."

"It's a mild recession!", Garstka shouts.

"Well, I wouldn't say mild. . .", counters his partner.

The Republican Club office is adorned with photos of Abraham Lincoln, Ronald Reagan and Jack Kemp, among others. A photo of George Bush is missing. This lukewarm opinion of Bush may be another reason the Young Republicans won't be working harder.

"He's okay, but not great," Garstka explains. "Get Reagan

Women, colonialism discussed

Professor: gender, race, class interlocked

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Correspondent

Society needs to examine the nature of gender, race and class together, said a University of Massachusetts anthropology professor at yesterday's Brown Bag Lunch.

"I think we don't pay enough attention to the interlocking nature of gender, race , and class together," Page said.

Professor Helen Page gave a speech entitled "Conditioned Aspirations and Gender/Race/Class Relations in Colonial Zimbabwe" to a crowd of about 30 people on the the impact of the colonial state on women and how women's aspirations were conditioned by colonialization.

Page said colonizers conditioned relations and aspirations. She said women were subordinated and they lost rights and protection. But Page added that women were put in charge of agriculture production and this "sacred act gave women higher status and ritually empowered them."

Page said African colonialism caused many changes including the extraction of labor and the attack on means of self-sufficiency, how women were burdened with labor.

She said the attack forced women to resist by holding on to their culture and maintaining their traditions to hold on to tradition and maintain culture.

Page went on to describe the "very traumatic effects the process of community development had on women. Women had to do more work on farms, had a need for more money, forcing them to seek work, and made efforts illegal."

She described the anger and resentment women felt having their husbands and sons taken away, subjected to great dangers, and their sons' new sets of values and ambitions.

The colonial state attempted to silence dissident African women, Page said. Women pleaded and demanded with men to stop working for the Colonial State.

"Colonial settlers saw women as interfering and set up means of attacks on women."

"The colonial state worked to undermine the influence women had over men to get their national state developed," she added. "The colonial state actively developed a state of Rhodesia and tried to inhibit the tendencies of Africans."

Page discussed the notion of the settler state, and how African women were subordinated to African men in the image of White men and women. She said women were essentially equal in the pre-colonial reality.

Colonizers persecuted women for leaving home, seeking employment, prostitution or any dissident behavior so that the colonizers could manifest the state of Rhodesia, Page explained.

Page also said settlers considered African men effeminate. She discussed how the mind of the settlers considered African men as effeminate. "This caused men to want to act and feel like the white settlers," she said.

David Booth eulogized by family, faculty

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Over 100 friends, family and colleagues gathered yesterday in Memorial Hall to pay tribute to University of Massachusetts professor David Booth, who died two weeks ago after 25 years of teaching and service to the University.

Booth, a political scientist specializing in state and urban politics, was an active member of the Faculty Senate and served as president of the Faculty Club for five years.

"It's fair to say that no one gave more to the University than David did," said George Sulzner, chairperson of the political science department. "He was the most extraordinary and talented individual I've met in my professional career."

Chancellor Richard O'Brien noted Booth's "sense of work, devotion and responsibility."

"Whenever we asked him to do something, what he did frequently became a pattern for others," O'Brien said.

O'Brien noted when he first came to the University seven years ago, on one of his first days on the job, Booth came over to him and said "I want you to know, Provost, I'll do anything you need me to."

"I didn't then realize that I'd cash in many of those chips on David," O'Brien said.

Several colleagues noted the extensive contributions Booth made to the Faculty Senate, where he served four terms. Booth's positions included the chairs of the Senate Rules Committee and the Academic Priorities Council, which was charged with reallocating the University's dwindling resources.

"[Booth's] insistence on rules, organizations and accurate minutes avoided much confusion," said sociology professor Roland Chilton. "I saw much in work to be emulated."

Former University Chancellor Oswald Tippo noted that as president of the Faculty Club for five years, Booth worked the grounds around the club and planned many of the menus.

"All aspects of the club had to be above reproach," Tippo said. "It was the only real community on campus."

"It would be great to lift the rest of the University to the level of the Faculty Club," Acting Provost Glen Gordon said. "It would be a formidable task indeed."

Laborers must organize

In the beginning, there were small shop owners, artisans each with a specific craft. These craftspeople, mostly male and family men, worked in little shops or their homes, making their goods with the materials of their choice, going at their own pace.

Gayle Long

Then, the factory came into being. All the little shop owners were herded into large buildings, working for 12 hours a day, making their goods — but this time, they are timed, they cannot choose the materials they use, and another man sits in a heated office, looking down on them, making sure each pulls his weight.

Needless to say, the man in the shop made more and enjoyed his work much more than the endless hours in the factory, where he is told what do make and how fast to make it.

Then, the factories grew bigger, and the men — still with a family to support — are no longer making an entire product — they work on assembly lines doing one part of the larger product.

The man in the heated room looks out of the window in his office, counting the money on the table. The men in the plant are still working 12-hour days, but the wages are shrinking because the man in the suit has decided he is not rich enough.

The wages continue to go down, and the family man is evicted from his home. To keep his family fed, he rents rooms in a tenement, and his wife and child go to work in the factory as well. The wife and child work the same long hours as the man, but they make less — barely enough for warm clothes and food.

Finally, the worker loses the craft — he can no longer remember the days of his little shop, the pride he took in his work, and the quality which went into each and every product. He dreams of the man in the suit giving him a raise, being able to let his son go back to work, and even of re-opening the little shop. But it is all a dream.

The man begins to talk to the other men in the factory — and they all share this dream. Dream of being paid for the quality of their craft and the enjoyment they used to receive when the job was done and done right.

They decide they do not have the ability or resources to reopen their shops, but they do control the one thing the man in the suit needs — labor.

The men go on strike — they want to be recognized for the hard work they do each day for the lousy wages and the poor conditions. The man in the suit replaces the workers — after all, he's got the cash, he can fire anyone he wants to, right?

The men go further. The next strike they have, they refuse to leave the workplace and the owner cannot get others to do their work. The owner gives in, and the men unionize.

The union gives them the ability to speak as one, to work as one, and to have the ability to bargain as one. Unions had a long and hard battle to fight for recognition, primarily because the men in the suits cared only about their own pocketbook.

Now, unions are legal and have much power in the workplace. The men in the suits don't like that because they can no longer exploit the workers the way they used to. They have to pay people fairly and give them the rights they deserve.

Because of Ronald Reagan and the air controller strike, the men in the suits today think they can bust unions — they think because of their money they control the world. But they don't.

When the majority of us graduate, we will not be the CEO of a major corporation — we will be working for someone with a great deal of money. And though most of us will be considered professionals (people who think they don't need a union) they will still be subjected to management solely out for profit.

This brings us to GEO (the Graduate Employee Organization for those who don't usually read the Collegian). What a great way to teach so many students so cheaply, right? I mean, the average stipend of the average teaching assistant is $6,000 per year, and professors are much more expensive, says the man in the suit in Whitmore and the administration.

Not only that, but we can fail to classify them as employees for the simple reason they are students at the same time (not a bad deal, huh?). What a money-making scheme.

The moral of the story is — work where you'll be appreciated, find value and enjoyment in your work, and if these things aren't possible where you work — ORGANIZE.

GEO's priorities are unfair to undergrads

There comes a time when one must set his priorities straight. Now is one of those times. UMass is a public institution dedicated to higher learning. This is, or at least should be, the highest priority of the university.

The goal of all students here is to learn. The fate of this goal is rather shaky with the impending Graduate Employee Organization strike. There is a massive game of tug-of-war going on between the GEO and the administration, and the undergraduate students are playing the rope. This conflict should not have gone this long and it is time for an end, an end before the undergraduates bear the burden. The graduate students at this university must learn that punishing their students is just not right.

The undergraduates her pay nearly nine thousand dollars per year if they live in-state, and close to $13,000 per year if out-of-state. They pay to enroll in an average of 15 credits, and expect to learn that amount of material. Roger Long pointed this out in his article [Collegian, November 5] with his "Administration Screw-over Scale (ASS)."

His point was valid. The undergraduates would not receive that for which they were paid, but his error is in thinking it is the administration's wrongdoing. The one sure way to prevent the cheating of undergraduates is for the GEO to not strike.

The GEO has four major demands. They want a health fee waiver, an agency fee deducted from the TA's checks, "binding arbitration" and job security. First, the health fee for graduate students is $800. If an undergraduate was to pay the supplemental health fee which would provide comprehensive coverage, it would cost $1,020.50 per year. We pay more. As for the agency fee, it is not Whitmore's position to keep the GEO alive, it is the GEO's responsibility.

As for the issue on binding arbitration, the GEO is not a group with permanent members like the other unions on campus. The graduate students will not be here for more than four to six years. They therefore do not need such a position. Finally, few people have job security in today's economy. Huge corporations like Wang and GE are laying off people left and right, and even the full time faculty at the University could face layoffs with the state cuts and lower enrollment.

It is time for the GEO to realize what a strike could do. Graduates, like us, the undergrads, are here to learn. Your strike could prevent us from accomplishing that goal.

I ask that GEO re-evaluate its priorities and stop playing games with the undergrads as your toys. No one is threatening to take away your instructors.

There is meaning behind the words

The power of words is amazing.

Jumbled arrangements of letters, when put together in conscious streams called language, have the capability of producing numerous reactions from people. With beautiful poetry, intelligent prose and hateful accusations, words function as the core of our communication.

Felice Cohen

Words are the way through which we exercise our minds and express our beliefs. These configurations of squiggled lines have the power over others to emit trust, while at the same time, hurt and deceit, as it is the ultimate way we pass messages along.

When young, we learn the phrase, "Sticks and stones can break my bones, but names will never hurt me." No matter how many times I had repeated that to myself, the pain from name-calling always lingered on long after the actual bruises had disappeared. For the names will always remain.

Remember when Mr. Brady told Peter to "try talking instead of fighting," and Peter came home with a black eye? Bullies who rely on muscle power are only hiding behind their inability to express themselves with words. Frustrated in this respect, it is much easier to heave a rock at someone you dislike then to tell them how you feel.

How different is this from the Middle East peace talks going on today? For years, they tried to solve their disputes with sticks and stones. Now they are making the effort to talk. (Use words? Wow, what a revelation!) Do you think they ever watched The Brady Bunch?

When I was 12, I remember struggling to write a poem for school. My dad told me something I will never forget as long as I write. That is, "writing is thinking outside your head." Though it was not until years later that I understood the deeper meaning.

Words, the messengers of people's thoughts, is what is most frightening to our society. Since many lack the ability to think for themselves, they must cling to others' thoughts. That is why we have politicians. Sure we have our own opinions, but it is through these "word-people" that we are able to express them.

But there are those who generate terrible destruction from the words they use. Adolph Hitler, while viewing his ugly thoughts, began a following which many empty-headed, non-thinkers wound up latching onto, and accepting as legitimate.

Distinguishing the difference between our reactions from the spoken word and the written word, we must address the fact that both are capable of emanating powerful messages. And it is how the individual interprets this information that sparks the most controversy.

This is why name calling hurts. This is why jokes sting. In reading words, you have your own interpretation, but hearing them spoken, they become more directed and focused.

When someone tells me they were touched or moved by something I have written, even if only by one person, then I feel I have accomplished what I set out to do. This has helped me to understand that it is not the words people relate to, but the meanings behind them.

On Monday evening, I was showered with the most powerful, biting and inspirational words I have ever heard spoken. Jonathan Kozol, speaking on the injustice of public education in America, lifted me out of my seat and had me trailing on his every word. Though the words he used were familiar, it was the structure and organization that appeared new and refreshing and meaningful.

"Use your youth, strength and energy to make America the decent land that it is not." As his words spilled onto the crowd, chills raced through my body.

If it is true that words do not cause pain, why get so upset over individually targeted deviant remarks? Maybe we should switch that famous quote to, "Sticks and stones can break my bones, but names will hurt forever."

The ability to read and write is an assumed privilege. The ability to read and write well is a valued gift. And it is the responsibility of those who possess this gift to share it with those who do not.

TAs are greatly underpaid for quality services

I was excited to be able to attend UMass this fall. In fact, I was so thrilled that I brushed off the fact that the tuition is higher than predicted, the curriculum fees are astronomical and the health care cost and services aren't exactly what the brochure promised. But, what the heck.

Now it's November and the promise of my "quality education" is being threatened. The administration of this university insists on playing a very dangerous game of hardball with the GEO at the expense of our education. In these tough economic times is it really all that wise of Chancellor O'Brien and the other high mucky-mucks to deny the meager requests of the GEO? I think not.

Aside from the chaos that will ensue with picket lines all over this place, the students — you know, US, the ones who foot the bills around here with our astronomical tuition and fees — are the one who will suffer.

Thanks to my freshman writing TA, I am able to write an essay and have it understood. She works as hard as any full-salaried teacher in this university. The TA in my poetry class, a discussion class, has to read and grade over 90 essays every other week, and makes himself available at any time to help a student in need.

They deserve a lot more than they are asking for. I will blame the administration, not my TAs, for any strike that may occur.

My point is this: graduate TAs work hard and they deserve what they are asking for. If the administration continues to ignore the GEO's demands, everyone loses.

Paul McGonnigal's past statements come back to haunt

I read about David Duke, former KKK grand wizard, and his campaign for the Louisiana governorship the same day I opened a Daily Hampshire Gazette and discovered UMass Republican Club member Paul McGonnigal was running for the Massachusetts state House of Representatives.

I began to wonder if I had woken up that morning or if I were trapped in an awful nightmare about political neo-Nazis.

Although McGonnigal says in the Gazette he does not want to be considered "the student candidate," I think a close examination of his student political record is necessary in order to understand his politics, since he has no other political record.

I think it was wise of McGonnigal to try to keep attention away from his student activities, considering the right-wing reactionary low-lifes with whom he has associated. McGonnigal was a very active member of the UMass Republican Club last semester, a fact he conveniently failed to mention in his Gazette interview. For those who don't recall, this is the club that sponsored the gaybashing "Straight Pride Rally" last spring, brought a pro-apartheid speaker on campus, and sponsored an anti-abortion rally. The Club was also involved with the horribly sexist and homophobic "Guy Glodis Talk Show."

McGonnigal has also been a writer for The Minuteman — you remember, the ragsheet that has consistently been anti-gay, anti-women, and anti-just about anything else remotely related to human rights or civil discourse.

The UMass Republican Club has historically been this campus' equivalent to the South's KKK. Guilt by association should be enough to put the nails in McGonnigal's political coffin.

But there's more. An examination of a transcript from last semester's "Straight Pride" rally further reveals McGonnigal's blatant homophobia. Among other things, McGonnigal does not think UMass should fund Gay, Lesbian, or Bisexual programs:

"I'm sad to say that many of those dollars are being incredibly wasted by you people here today," McGonnigal said, addressing the GLB crowd that showed up in protest.

Trystan Skeigh

What a distressingly unreasonable and exclusionary position. If one were to count how much money is spent on heterosexist programming at this University and weigh the percentages, GLB programs receive pennies in comparison.

McGonnigal also does not support the Massachusetts gay civil rights law: "Legislation passed to ensure certain rights to others exclusively one sexuality or another is wrong. Keep government out of our bedrooms. You're doing nothing of this sort by supporting the Gay Rights Bill."

Reading this twisted argument reminds me of the doublespeak described in Orwell's 1984. Contrary to McGonnigal's assertion, the state civil rights law does not extend any special privileges to gay people. It protects them from being denied the privileges given to everyone else, particularly in employment and housing.

The fact is, government has been in our bedrooms for a very long time, because sodomy laws are still on the books. If McGonnigal wants to keep government out of our bedrooms, he should be campaigning against the Supreme Court's 1987 Hardwick decision and support the decriminalization of anal and oral sex.

Equally disturbing about McGonnigal is his blatant disrespect for women. He spoke twice at last semester's "Straight Pride" rally and his second speech was utterly despicable.

McGonnigal told the angry crowd he wanted to talk about "sleeping with the enemy" and then proceeded to name an openly bisexual UMass woman and claim that he and she had "built bridges together." The sexual allusion was obvious and in horribly bad taste. If a sexual liason did occur, McGonnigal had no business publicly bragging about it. His insensitivity was grotesque.

But also, it raises a deeper issue. How can a man claim to have a bisexual lover, and then oppose civil rights for gays, lesbians, and bisexuals? McGonnigal's sexist hypocrisy powerfully reminds me of the Southern White slave owners who slept with their Black female slaves but refused to recognize their humanity.

McGonnigal's history of membership in sexist, racist, and homophobic student political organizations and his remarks at last year's "Straight Pride" rally reveal why he must not be elected to represent one of this state's most progressive districts.

Hopefully, as UMass Republican Club members begin to realize their past can come back to haunt them, they will stop engaging in their disgustingly uncivil behavior and join the rest of the human race. Until then, they all, like McGonnigal, should kiss their political aspirations good-bye.

Closing of center lacked support

On Monday, Nov. 4, 1991, an elite group of pseudo-nationalist/revolutionary, media hungry, Puerto Rican (Hispanic? Latino?) students officially declared the Latin American Cultural Welfare Center to be off-limits for anybody except Chancellor O'Brien. While waiting for the supreme's presence, who apparently didn't take these boys and girls seriously by not showing up, some angry kids desperately cried out: we're falling, we're falling, and we can't get up! In a show of support and solidarity to some elements of the Asian communities, our self-proclaimed, GQ-styling leaders joined in the struggle of autocratic oppression, for and against the SYSTEM.

However, the moral of our soap opera is that a "minority people," in representation of the oppressed (some of whom have been purposely alienated) are going to stand up against the SYSTEM, and fight until they die? Graduate? Or. . .

So where were the people? Were the Latin American students informed about their new struggle? Is there any kind of consensus or opinion? Is it a Latino, Hispanic, or Puerto Rican thing? Can anybody participate in the decision-making process? Or are we going to be continuously informed by the media?

Historically, the people in power have made certain concession to the social transformation of certain groups as a means of preserving their power or enhancing their hegemony. Nonetheless, it must be clear that a true revolutionary movement is carried out by the people and not by self-proclaimed philosopher-kings. Revolts, on the other hand, attempt to substitute one oppressor (leader) with another, which may satisfy certain particular needs of the insurgents. While a true and universalist consensus may not be rapidly reached, the people have the right to be consulted in any decision-making process that may affect them. It is the responsibility of our leaders to reflect the true reality of our people based on the people's opinions, not to assume assimilating autocratic attitudes.

We are already oppressed by identifiable oppressors; we should not attempt to redefine nor contribute to our own oppression, by assuming egocentric, self-proclaimed-god attitudes without the consent of our own people. Furthermore, how can we clean anybody else's kitchen when our own kitchen is full of filth and corruption. Let us not forget the old saying, "United we stand, divided we shall fall."

Officials warn of snowball danger

Once again we write to remind you all, as cold weather approaches, that the former "traditional" snowball fight between the University of Massachusetts and Amherst College students. It is now three years since the calamitous injury to Gary Gonya's eye occurred, but the possibility, indeed the likelihood, of such events is very real, and should be of concern to all. We applaud the restraint of students over the last two years, and urge everyone to ensure that we never run the risk of such trouble again.

Undergrads should support GEO

Teaching Assistants are vital to the quality and integrity of our education. 60 percent of the classroom teaching on this campus is done by TAs. They are university employees, in addition to being full-time students, yet they don't receive the same benefits as other staff and faculty. Though many undergraduates have concerns, reservations and questions about the possible impact a strike may have upon classwork and grades, most of us are very supportive of the GEO's struggle to gain recognition.

Now is the time to show that support. Our participation and support are absolutely necessary if we are going to be successful in protecting our rights to a quality education on this campus. Please get informed and get involved!

Suggestions for undergraduates supporting GEO:

1. Wear GEO stickers and buttons (GEO office, room 201).
2. Talk to your professors during class, ask them to change time or location of class.
3. Ask TAs not engaging in the strike why they aren't participating. Question their logic and reasoning!
4. Involve your parents — ask them to write letters or call and complain about the administration's lack of movement in negotiations.
5. Write your own letters to Chancellor O'Brien or local papers.
6. Join the picket lines, even if it's only for a few minutes.
7. Go to Chancellor O'Brien's office as a class or group and express your frustration.
8. Support your TAs by signing petitions (available at picket lines).

RE: How will this strike affect you and your grade?

Individual TAs will make their own decisions concerning the level of participation in a job action. For this reason, the effect of a strike on you depends on the department's policy. Each department will specify how to handle missed work and time in classes. Ask your TA for specific information.

Stylists exploit hair power

Do you want to obtain a position of real power in this world? Then why are you bothering with college?

(Why sir, you should have gone to beauty school!)

If you've ever gotten your hair professionally cut, then you know of what I speak. There is nothing to match the feeling of intense vulnerability than when your hair is in the hands of a scissor-wielding "artist." What power, that!

Brooke C. Wheeler

"Can I be honest with you? This length is so dated!" Snip, snip. Your crowning glory falls into a thick pile on the floor as your stylist takes "creative control." Your stomach wrenches, your hands weakly clutch the chair, your eyes glaze with involuntary tears of pain/sadness/frustration/anger/dispair. She/he hands you the mirror so you can view the disaster from all angles.

The back is all hacked up, short and startlingly different from the "trim" you requested. Your bangs! Those are irrevocably chopped, displaying the forehead you've been trying to conceal since grade school.

"It's something a little different than you had, but it opens up your face. What do you think?"

You don't want to be rude. But there are feelings welling up inside you, threatening to spill out all over your smug "stylist" and his/her evil scissors. You try to muster a semi-encouraging comment from the pit of your stomach where your self-esteem now resides. "I love it!" you sob.

In less than fifteen minutes, the hairstylist, that soul who didn't go to college, who might have dropped out of high school, and eventually ended up at the Wilfred Academy or Sam's School of Beauty and Auto-Repair, has reduced smart, important you into a nauseous, teary, frustrated lump of awkwardness. Now that's power.

It's amazing how they can manipulate your emotions and your outlook on life. Fran Lebowitz once said, "Undoubtedly, the safest sex in the world is having your hair cut." Ahh, the shampooing. Skilled fingers massaging your scalp, running gently through your wet hair, warm water streaming across your skin, the scent of coconuts wafting up around you. You lose yourself in this moment to pure relaxation. Someone else is washing your hair for you. What incredible luxury!

A hairdresser can make or break your mood and your "personal style." They can make you look absolutely fabulous for the next month or two, or they can turn you into an anti-social recluse with a destroyed self-confidence. Even one little extra snip can send you into an untouchable pissy mood. Or you could walk out feeling great, exuding powerful confidence, knowing that everyone is looking at you and your fantastic 'do.

You must treat them reverently. They are not hourly-wage peons here to serve your whims. They are not all high school dropouts with minimal ambitions and a flair for hair. These people make a lot of bucks. They grow up and get their own salons. They can make up to six figures a year (which is a helluva lot more than a lowly writer will ever make). And don't forget, they can make you cry.

Brooke C. Wheeler is a Collegian hair disaster

letters of protest to Chancellor O'Brien and to Associate Chancellor Susan Pearson regarding the administration's treatment of graduate students and the resulting consequences for undergraduates if GEO does strike.

Senate members had mixed feelings as to whether or not they supported the potential strike, with most agreeing that undergraduates would be adversely affected regardless of what the final outcome was.

Freshman Eric Guerrero (Kennedy) said many undergraduates he spoke to were supportive of GEO's position.

"Most students on this campus are able to see that their demands need to met and are supportive of this strike," Guerrero said. "I thought they would look at from a more self-interested point of view."

Junior David Anderson (Commuters) said that despite the difficulty graduate students have in paying bills and fees, undergraduates share an equal burden in financing their educations.

"It's tough to live on [a stipend]," Anderson said. "But we all have that problem when we make the commitment to go to school — everyone's got to pay the piper sometime."

In other news, SGA President David Gagne announced he was establishing student task forces to deal with the issues of student housing, tuition and fees and voting registration.

Monaghan will chair the Housing Review Committee, dealing with undergraduate concerns about their living situations. Student Trustee Kevin Newnan and junior Jen Wood (Commuters) will head the task force on tuition and fees, while sophomore Mathew Pavesi (Patterson) will head the force on voter registration.

THISWEEKEND

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

As we all stood around and waited for a deteriorating Bob Dylan to get his boring ass off the stage at last years' Concert on the Pond, we were struck with the blow of not having the privilege to see De La Soul. As the busses poured in the VIP parking lot, we hoped that one of those busses were transporting them (not Gene Loves Jezebel!), but it was not to be.

And if De La Soul, due to play this Tuesday night at Pearl Street "Nightclub", don't come in this time, there will be hell to pay. But they have to. Their manager, Lee Stallman, an organized and extremely patient man who keeps his word, promised me they'd make it up to us "UMass students next fall". Thus the only thing that might keep them from not appearing is if they died, a nuclear exchange happens, or if Pearl Street gets destroyed.

For all [illegible] hermit crabs out there [illegible] who they are, De La Soul are a trio from New York who've managed to churn out some of the best and most intelligent rap the industry has ever seen. None of this gold-chain, flat top "You Can't Play With My Yo-Yo" crap with nothing thoughtful to offer; these homies don't play that shit. Their debut album for Tommy Boy records 3 Feet High And Rising, gate crashed the charts like that journalist did Liz Talor's fancy dress wedding, mixing def, hip-hop beats with old scratchy childhood fave records, and adding a dash of their home(boy)brewed d-a-i-s-y-age love potion that made it all come to life.

That record not only turned some heads and shook some bootys, but also blew away everything else the record industry had to offer. Not only did it top my list of finest albums of 1989, but it also topped NME and Sounds, (both publications from Britain). And it came out at a time when Tone Loc's "music" was dominating the charts, and to see him have to move over was a thrill.

Anyway, their new album, De la Soul is Dead, took a sharp turn. De La Soul is Dead is one of those albums that doesn't hit you at first, but after a few joints and a couple of cocktails it sounds perfect. Here they attempt to leave the "daisy age" behind and get onto something new, but unfortunately a good 50% of the album is about nothing at all. I might be wrong, but it's either because I'm not listening carefully, or those joints and cocktails took a toll. Either way, you decide.

So it's well worth the time and effort to see De La Soul. After all, why not? Personally I wouldn't pass up seeing three good looking homeboys on stage dissing sell-outs, the Grammys, and just about everything else superficial that crosses their path. De La Soul are nothing short of clever, witty and enjoyable. So set aside your books, and bring your behind (and your ID!) to the door on Tuesday for a night full of oodles and oodles of Oh!'s.

De La Soul will jam at Pearl Street Nightclub on Sunday at 8 p.m. The show is 18+.

A cool Kenny Kirkland Quintet to come

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Staff

In performance tonight is a quintet of some of the most vibrant and interesting players on the scene today. The Kenny Kirkland Quintet, with Jeff "Tain" Watts, Don Elias, Charnett Moffet and Kenny Garrett.

Mr. Kirkland first came to prominence on the music scene as a member in the bands of Wynton Marsalis and Sting. He has been playing since age six, born and raised in Brooklyn, New York. He has played and combined many genres of music, including Afro-Cuban, European classical, rock, fusion, "jazz", and others. These wide ranging abilities have helped Mr. Kirkland to forge a voice that is uniquely his own, with his debut album Kenny Kirkland (on GRP), attesting to this. The album was actually recorded over a two year period, while Mr. Kirkland was busy touring with Sting. The album contains standards by Bud Powell, Thelonious Monk, Ornette Coleman and others, as well as showcasing Mr. Kirkalnd's talents at composing originals.

Jazz Scene

The personnel on the album is a mix of various players who have working relations with Mr. Kirkland, including Wynton and Branford Marsalis, Bob Hurst, Jerry and Andy Gonzalez, Steve Berrios, Chris McBride, and the players who will be performing with him tonight. Perhaps the highlight of the album is the arrangement of Monk's "Criss Cross" as a mambo piece featuring the Gonzalez brothers.

Mr. Kirkland's schooling years at the Manhattan School of Music were somewhat turbulent. With no courses in "jazz" performance or theory, he was locked into a program that only dealt with European classical music. He eventually dropped his piano major, picking up a theory and composition major, but faced reprimands from his instructors whenever he introduced "jazz" idioms into his playing. After schooling, Mr. Kirkland joined up with Wynton Marsalis in 1981, joining Sting's band four years later. Desiring to play more than just electronic keyboards, Mr. Kirkland set out on his own in 1990 to return to his favorite instrument, the acoustic piano, citing influences from McCoy Tyner, Kenny Barron, and Herbie Hancock.

In addition to Mr. Kirkland's credentials, the Quintet boasts one of the finer rhythm sections that one could ask for

Get an earful of blues

By KLAUS GAUGER
Collegian Correspondent

Successful bands often have modest beginnings. Such was the case with Roomful of Blues, who will be playing this Friday night, Nov. 8 at Pearl Street Club in Northampton.

Founded back in 1967, the group started, as so many others, as a typical drums-piano-guitar-vocal ensemble. They played in coffee houses and small bars in their home area — Rhode Island and Connecticut — and soon had a certain local success due to their danceable repertoire drawn from the R&B styles from the thirties to the sixties.

Reinforced by their increasing reputation in the national music scene, highly respected jazz critics like Helen and Stanley Kance gave them favorable critiques; tours, radio and television appearances followed.

Since then the band's musical career has been flourishing and their already nationwide reputation was further cemented by recordings with R&B senior saxophonist Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson and pianist "Big Joe" Turner. Both recordings resulting out of this collaboration were nominated for Grammies in the Best Traditional Blues category in 1983 and 1984.

Roomful of Blues are today considered, along with contemporaries like the Fabulous Thunderbirds and Stevie Ray Vaughan, as belonging to the group of truly innovative traditionalists. The band has received musicians like rock diva Pat Benatar on a Blues album, True Love, which made the Billboard Top 40 in 1991.

Comments made about Roomful of Blues by famous fellow musicians are certainly impressive: Count Basie described them as "The hottest blues band I have ever heard." And if critics were not on principle cautious when predicting the quality of a coming live performance, the writer of this article would strongly urge the readership to get their tickets right now. But if you do have some spare time and money, have a look at Roomful of Blues playing this Friday night at Northampton Pearl Street Club.

LOOK INTO MY EYES — You're getting very sleepy . . . you will enjoy my art! Christopher Ciccone, 30, poses Monday with No. 18 of his printing series "Figurate" at New York's Wessel O'Connor Gallery. Ciccone, though a college dropout has designed sets for one of 1990s biggest pop music tours, his first interior decorating job made the cover of Architectural Digest, and his first show of paintings opens this week. His advantage, he's Madonna's brother.

these days, with bassist Charnett Moffett, and drummer "Tain" Watts. Mr. Watts is a tremendous player, having been hailed by Max Roach as the best young drummer on the scene. Mr. Moffett (Charles's son), is also a fine player, having played and recorded with a who's who of today's younger generation. Rounding out the group is percussionist Don Elias (best known for working with Carla Bley), and Kenny Garrett, who was Miles Davis' last saxophonist. An interesting quintet that should provide an evening of solid music.

The Kenny Kirkland Quintet will be in performance tonight, Nov. 7, at 8 p.m. at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Call 584-0610 for tickets and information.

Year of the Gun pulses with authenticity

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

John Frankenheimer, director of the classic political thriller The Manchurian Candidate, has returned to the genre with Year of the Gun, a complex yet satisfying drama with its roots in real-life.

American David Raybourne (Andrew McCarthy) returns to Rome after a five-year absence. It's 1978 and Italy is being threatened by the terrorist group, the Red Brigades. Raybourne has an Italian girlfriend played by Valeria Golino whom he wants to take out of Italy. To raise money, he decides to write a fictional novel based on the events unfolding around him. He changes the names of people involved (mostly his friends) and creates his own plot twist: the kidnapping of Italian premier Aldo Miro. Raybourne meets up with hotshot political photographer, Alison King (Sharon Stone) who wants her photos to accompany his book, but he insists the book is totally fictional. When the manuscript fall into the wrong hands and the Miro kidnapping becomes a reality. Raybourne and King find themselves on the run and wondering who they can trust.

Alfred Hitchcock got plenty of mileage out of the innocent man in extraordinary circumstances plot. Hitchcock, however, had the benefit of a powerhouse cast. Year of the Gun falters in its bad casting and hokey acting. Andrew Mc Carthy (Pretty in Pink) is effective but not substansive as the naive American embroiled in a terrorist group. A badly miscast John Pankow (Mortal Thoughts) portrays an Italian professor. This problem gnaws at the film's authenticity, constantly reminding the viewer that this is a movie. Sharon Stone (Total Recall) is unbelievable as the photographer. If she shot and survived such horrors in Vietnam, why is she so surprised and shaken after a riot she involves herself in? And finally, Valeria Golino (Hot Shots!) pops up so erratically that she never quite makes an impact.

Year of the Gun methodically (and somewhat blandly) sets up the story, carefully placing well-needed jolts. When the film evolves to a chase melodrama, it only gets more exciting. Director Frankenheimer shot the film to match existing television footage. He eerily and sucessfully captures the back alleys and piazzas of Rome. Year of the Gun has a decisive edge over most contemporary thrillers: it feels real. The threat of the Red Brigades is all too real because it actually existed. The fact that the events really happened only adds to the film's pulsing authenticity.

Some bad casting and wooden acting should not dampen your choice to see Year of the Gun.

Four great local band releases reviewed

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

For every band or artist that lands the "big record contract" there are literally thousands who toil away with little or no recognition. The indies fill this void, but even that can be elusive. The first step is to produce your own album, release it locally, sell it at gigs, send it to radio stations and indie labels, and hope you get discovered along the way. Depending on their budgets, most local artists put their money into the recording process and put their work out in cassette form because it's currently the cheapest method. I've selected four outstanding local cassettes as a sample of what's here in our own backyard. All are for sale at local retail record stores.

Ray Mason writes well-constructed pop songs with excellent hooks and wry lyrics. His newest release Silvertone Pop is his best effort to date. This time around he features his band, which includes Jerry Ellis on bass and Keith Leverault on drums. Those in the know say this powerhouse rhythm section is the best in the Valley. Others fine talents figuring prominantly on this album are drummer Chet Pasek, guitarists Matt Cullen and Jim Armenti, and keyboardist Jim Weeks. This album features the sessions recorded at Longview Farms and it's essentially a finished product waiting to be pressed into a CD. The production, which included sound engineer Peter Keppler, is top notch. There are some great new tunes on the album such as "Between Blue and Okay" and "Lesley-Ann" as well as new renditions of old favorites such as "Angeline" and "It's Heartbreak that Sells".

The two blonde haired Herschler twins write powerful, anthemic, thought provoking songs built upon outstanding musicianship and intertwined vocal harmonies. Mark Herschler's brash guitar strokes and raspy vocals make one half of this pair. Mark is a one man jam session waiting to happen, and he has honed his skills to razor sharp while performing in Europe over the past decade. Mathew is an artist who's poetic flair and swirling bass lines form the other half of this dynamic duo. The first side of the Herschler Brothers Band debut cassette was recorded at Wendell Recording Studios while the flip side is a live recording of an Iron Horse performance. Some choice cuts are "Cain and Abel" a song about fratricide, "Prayer for a Friend" and the funky "Mother Street". The album also features jazz pianist Tom McClung, drummer Doug Raneri, guitarist Johnny Cruz, and newest member Jimmy Gordon on harp.

Jabberwocky

Ari Vais was born in Moscow and moved to the States in 1978. He has been a fixture on the UMass music scene since he first arrived here in the late 80s. Despite his ties to the Pioneer Valley he has also found time to travel extensively and perfect his songwriting. He has appeared in clubs in Hollywood and London, and he has opened for acts such as School of Fish, Throwing Muses, and the Violent Femmes. Ari is back in town to finish his degree and true to form he is also busy with his music career. This cassette, aptly titled "Unsigned", is a gem of alternative folk musings and was recorded at Gypsy Lane Studios in Norwich, England on digital technology. One tune called "Kimo ki Papa tay" has recieved airplay on WFNX in Boston. Other notable songs are "Alone in My Victorian", "Amsterdam" and a neat cover of "Summertime" by George Gershwin.

Thrashing Skumz released a cassette entitled "Give the Metalheads a Haircut" a few years back that became a local hit. Their newest effort is titled "The Gospel According to Jovi" and it displays a more mature and developed sound. The new songs still feature their brand of witty tongue-in-cheek humor but the music is more aural and lush and there is some wonderful psychedelic and gothic guitar going on, as well as incorporation of back-up instrumentation such as accordion, harp and flute. The Thrashing Skumz display a youthful exuberance mixed with heavy power cords. Some of the better cuts on this release are "The Public Transportation Nic Fit Blues", "Jovi's Karma" which is an amusing twist on political correctness, and "Hallucinations". Jovi, by the way, plays tambourine.

■ strike

O'Brien declined to gauge the effect of a strike on the University. "It's impossible to know how many people would participate," he said.

Striking graduate employees would receive a $100 per week stipend from their parent union, United Auto Workers. Some have said this could sustain a strike indefinitely since the average weekly paycheck of TAs ranges from $75 to $180 a week.

O'Brien said the stipend for graduate employees would cost United Auto Workers $200,000 per week. "I don't know how long UAW could sustain that," he said.

Isaacs said the administration still refuses to offer the organization an agency fee, a nominal fee ($1 per week) for non-member graduate employees, a benefit the other four unions on campus enjoy.

At this time, the administration does not recognize the GEO as a union and, after consulting with University attorneys, said the service fee would be illegal.

The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, which certifies all unions in the state, declared in 1979 that graduate employees at the University could not unionize.

Emily Isaacs said the GEO, which voted to be represented as GEO/District 65/UAW in November 1990, is a union. "It's fairly clear that we're a union in everybody else's eyes but the administration's," she said.

back in there."

Garstka and Delano see eye to eye when it comes to missing "The Gipper." They feel that Bush is too moderate and hope the nominations of David Souter and Clarence Thomas will at least overturn Roe v. Wade, the landmark Supreme Court decision permitting abortion.

"Ronald Reagan wanted to decrease the power of the government. He ran against the establishment. George Bush is the establishment," Delano said.

At the mention of the current democratic candidates, the two men perk up. Mario Cuomo's name comes up almost immediately. Jim Garstka is first up.

"Every single time he plays this game," Garstka said. "I just wish he'd enter the race already so he could lose and we'd stop hearing about him. If Cuomo gets the nomination, it's an automatic victory for Bush."

"He's a clone of Dukakis, for one thing. He's a liberal, he's got the same social issues, he's also a three term governor who rarely leaves the country. Cuomo got the state of New York into the worst shape in the Union. Even worse than Massachusetts," Delano said.

If Garstka had to vote Democrat, he would support Paul Tsongas because the ex-senator is a fiscal conservative.

"Last weekend, in New Hampshire, Tsongas attacked Harkin for taking money from special interest groups — that's great," he said.

"What the Democrats need to learn is that a liberal won't take the White House. It's a lesson they haven't learned from Walter Mondale or from Dukakis: there is no way a liberal can win."

"There is only one way out for the poletariat: the revolutionary overthrow of the rule of the bourgeoise. . .Never before has there been such a glut of commodities alongside the misery and starvation of the working class masses. Never before has it been so clear that the capitalist system of society must be overthrown, if mankind is to live as men!"

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Greater authority will soon be yours. Secrecy preserves a friendship and protects someone special. New associates play a large role in the decisions you make now.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): obtain more information before plunging into a new family or investment program. It is time to make some far-reaching decisions about a child or older relative. Consult experts.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Do not be misled by the honey-coated words of an experienced confidence trickster. Your brothers, sisters or neighbors are standing by, ready to help you out. Postpone a romantic rendezvous.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Be more realistic where romance is concerned. Someone may be telling you what you want to hear. Deal with regrets over past mistakes by making new rules. Uphold your high ideals.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Careful now, you do not want to step on an important person's toes while pursuing your goals. You have to give a little in order to get a little help today. Be flexible.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You continue to influence others. The people you attract to a pet cause are there for good reason. Work the phone and mail. Happiness can be gained by seeing beyond an apparent contradiction.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have a knack for befriending people. Open to door to influential associates, old pals and newcomers. Do not forget your overseas contacts -everyone counts now.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Family harmony and favorite pastimes keep you invigorated. Do not gamble with your savings. Underhanded moves could send you back to square one. Big meetings are best postponed.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An alliance changes for the better. You can chart future moves with greater wisdom. Far-off contacts add a new dimension to a business venture. Be careful not to offend someone whose support you need.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Mutual gains are the big topic of discussion today. Put your ideas on the drawing board and seek feedback from smart allies. You could have your financial future in your capable hands.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): People who need people really are the luckiest people in the world. Respond to someone's offer of friendship. Keep in touch with former associates.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): You reach your stride in both employment matters and personal relationships today. Use all available means of communication and transportation. By nightfall, you will be ready for some solitude.

■ McGonnigal

It was McGonnigal's first turn at the podium when he presented views which contradict his platform in the current election.

"Legislation passed to insure certain rights to one sexuality or another is wrong," McGonnigal said at last sememster's rally.

Yesterday McGonnigal denied believing this.

"I do believe that gays and lesbians need legislative protection," he said, but added he is "not fond of the Massachusetts gay rights law."

McGonnigal, who said he is a University of Massachusetts student and has been a resident of Amherst for nine months, said the law fails "in that [it is] very broad." He claimed "there have been no convictions" under the law and said it was due to its "over-breadth." He said another problem with the gay rights law is that it is not obvious who is gay, comparing it to civil rights laws concerning gender and race.

McGonnigal was not pleased with the atmosphere at the straight pride rally last semester.

"I was not allowed to state my views," he said, finding it "very difficult to keep my train of thought."

Approaching the microphone for the second time at the rally last semester, McGonnigal told the crowd about a sexual experience with a member of the LBGA and Queer Nation which he dubbed "sleeping with the enemy."

McGonnigal said that he and she had "bridged an understanding intimately."

"She is a representative of the LBGA to the Board of Governors. We can get along. Just ask [her]. We did get along well." He then addressed her personally, asking her to "tell [the crowd] how well we can get along."

Some members of the LBGA were not supportive of his candidacy.

"I personally don't like it at all," said Shawn Cotter, member of the LBGA steering comittee. "I personally think the voters should really look into his political career at UMass which is not all that impressive."

"I think he will do nothing but harm," Cotter added, describing McGonnigal as "totally unqualified."

State Senator Stanley Rosenberg said someone who is anti-gay rights might not fare well in Amherst.

"Clearly this area by far, by overwhelming majority, supports gay rights and protects civil rights and liberties," Rosenberg said.

Charles Delano, editor of The Minuteman said McGonnigal's statements "might hurt him." Delano was confident that McGonnigal would win the Republican primary election, but the general election would be tougher in this "generally democratic" area.

Jeffrey Bergman, financial manager for the LBGA, said he has no opinion about McGonnigal's qualifications, but thought his University of Massachusetts origins left him "little chance of winning."

Student reports homophobic threat incident

Compiled by JASON GEORGE

A man in Kennedy Residence Hall reported Tuesday afternoon that he was the victim of homophobic threats by persons unknown to him. The incident is currently under investigation by police.

LARCENY:

• A man in Kennedy reported leaving his room with the door locked and returning to find his telephone, walkman and compact discs stolen late Tuesday afternoon. Police investigation revealed that the door locking mechanism had been taped, rendering the lock ineffective. Estimated value was $385.

• A student reporting leaving his backpack in a classroom in Marston Hall for a brief period Tuesday afternoon and returning to find it stolen. The pack contained his wallet and other personal property. The value was estimated at $40.

Of course not. The Big East again, I know. You've got everything to lose and nothing to gain by getting your tails handed to you from a squad from a "lesser conference."

I guess it's an admission of defeat, then. No guts. No interest in what New England hoop fans really want to see.

Keene State and New Hampshire are nice, but where's the fun in that? UMass hoop fans know their team is among the best in New England, but unless the so-called best teams play us, they can't prove it without a shadow of doubt.

Where's your confidence, your pride? Anything can happen in a college basketball game, you know. UMass proved that against Siena last year. By some fluke, you could actually beat us. . .that is, if you would only play us. (Insert chicken noises here.)

What a shame. Cheated out of great basketball games because the rest of New England hasn't got the pride or the intestinal fortitude to face us.

Dingle, UMass hoop recruit verbally commits

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team has its hands on yet another top high school recruit. Dana Dingle, a 6-foot-6 power forward, who averaged 10.4 points and seven rebounds in his junior year at St. Raymond's High School in the Bronx, NY, has officially verbally committed to attend UMass next fall.

Dingle said yesterday, "I'm definitely coming (to UMass). I'm going to sign early and get it over with."

"He's big-time," Clark Francis, editor of Hoop Scoop said. "He could play in the Big East. He's super quick and is still growing."

Dingle can't sign a National Letter of Intent, stating he will attend UMass, until Nov. 13, the NCAA-mandated early signing date.

Rich Watter, a columnist for Basketball Weekly, described Dingle as a "smooth, yet powerful player."

St. Raymond's, pre-season picked No. 16 in the nation by Street and Smith's, is the New York City Catholic High School defending champion.

"He's more of a swing man," Dingle's high school coach, Gary DeCesare said. "He has great perimeter skills and can really handle the ball. He's also a very good rebounder with a great nose for the ball."

The UMass coaching staff couldn't comment about him because of NCAA regulations.

Dingle said, "Offensive boards is one of my strong points and driving to the basket. I also play good defense."

Michael Dobie, a basketball writer for New York Newsday, said, "He really hits the boards hard."

Dingle was also recruited by and visited Texas A&M and Western Kentucky and cancelled his scheduled visit with UMass Atlantic 10 rival Rutgers.

"I feel comfortable with Coach Calipari," he said. "I like their style of play and their players."

DeCesare said, "UMass has three great, young coaches, which is like an extension of our program. He also likes the opportunity to play in an up-and-coming program."

Dingle has already taken the SAT and scored above the needed 700 points required by the NCAA to participate in college sports.

Dobie believes Dingle should really come in to his own this year as St. Raymond's has lost several top seniors from last year's squad.

Dingle played with a starting five last year which featured 1990-91 New York City Catholic League Player-of-the-Year, Terrence Rencher, who is now a freshman at Texas and Orlando Antigua, a freshman at the University of Pittsburgh.

Field hockey ends regular season with 3-0 victory

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team took its first step towards regrouping, as they rolled past Dartmouth in their regular season finale, 3-0. The win builds some momentum for the UMass team, as they look to win an Atlantic-10 title this weekend.

Jenn Salisbury led the way for the Minutewomen, notching two goals, and Joy Blenis knocked in a penalty corner for UMass.

"This is the start of a new season, so we're 1-0," said coach Pam Hixon. "And we're just going to attack our next opponent."

The Minutewomen regrouped enough to put the Dartmouth (4-11) team away, as UMass played a spirited and aggressive game.

Salisbury, a sophomore from Newville, PA, notched her 15th and 16th goals of the year, which places her atop the team in scoring. Her goals capped an excellent season for her, as she more than doubled her output of a year ago.

Blenis, a hard hitting midfielder, knocked in a penalty corner which broke Dartmouth's back. Her goal invigorated the lackluster UMass penalty corner attack, which may carry over to this weekend's Atlantic-10 Championship games in Philadelphia, PA.

The win wraps up the wild regular season for UMass, but the team may be in for some post-season action, depending on this weekend's outcome. UMass plays Rhode Island Saturday afternoon at 12 noon in game one of the A-10 Championships, and the winner awaits the outcome of the Temple-Rutgers game at 2 p.m.

As for the regular season, UMass finishes with a 13-5-1 record, including an 8-1 record at home. The team's lone loss at home was to Old Dominion, the number one team in the country.

Again, the young UMass team struggled on the road, especially on turf, which is where the team must win if they want to continue in their hunt for the national championship. UMass is not playing nearly on that level as of late, but they have shown in the early stages of the season that they can keep up with the best.

Crunch time has begun, and any UMass loss could be their last.

New England's finest refuse to face UMass

Dear UConn, Providence and Boston College,

A quick look at my wallet-sized University of Massachusetts basketball schedule shows the Minutemen have one of the toughest schedules in the Atlantic 10 Conference. Xavier at home. Oklahoma at the Springfield Civic Center. The Great Alaskan Shootout and Kentucky consecutively on the road.

Why won't you, the supposed powers of New England college basketball, play us?

Hey UConn, we've met 98 times in men's basketball. We were doormats for a lot of those meetings, but now we're good. Suddenly years of tradition and 98 prior games mean nothing to you.

Greg Sukiennik

UConn and UMass are traditional rivals with oodles of history behind them as the two best public universities in the area. Whenever the two schools meet in an athletic event, emotions run high and fans turn out in droves.

You're a Top-20 program now, UConn. Has the penthouse changed you? Too good for the neighbors? Don't you realize that a UMass-UConn hoop game would fill any arena in the area? Wouldn't you like all the media attention that comes from such a great rivalry? Don't things like tradition mean more than TV revenue?

I guess not. You're afraid. Scared. Chicken. You Huskies are the runts of the litter.

It's funny. You played Central Connecticut last year, but left UMass out. You were supposed to play us at your place, but even that wasn't safe enough. Pathetic.

Yo, Boston College. You're a Big East program, too. Years ago we wouldn't dream of playing you, never mind beating you.

Now UMass is getting the Top-20 votes you used to take for granted. Yes, your conference is stronger than the A-10, but take a quick look at the won-lost records, BC. UMass won 20 games last year. You would've died for 20 wins. Wouldn't beating UMass prove something to your fans, to your omnipotent Boston press, that you're bent on returning to your past form?

No, of course not. UMass beat you last year. Once was enough, apparently. You can hide behind a full Big East schedule and all the glamour it brings, but all of Massachusetts knows who the best team in the state is. That's a debatable point, but we'll never know for sure now, will we?

Excuse me, Providence? It's been awhile, but a lot of people are wondering, "Wouldn't it have been great if UMass and PC met in the NIT? What a regional

No stopping Holly Hellmuth

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

In collegiate women's soccer today, high scoring forwards around the country know one thing: when they face the University of Massachusetts, they are going to be seeing a lot of Holly Hellmuth. And most likely they aren't going to like what they see.

Hellmuth over the past three years at UMass has developed the reputation of being the premier defenseman in the nation.

"Holly Hellmuth may be the best defenseman in the country," University of Wisconsin coach Greg Ryan said.

"Holly Hellmuth is the toughest defenseman in the nation," Notre Dame coach Chris Petrocelli said. "She can dominate a game by simply shutting an offense down. She's simply the best."

UMass coach Jim Rudy said, "She's a defender's defender, but Holly can score also. Basically she's shutdown the best scorer on the other team in every game for the past three years."

Hellmuth, a junior from Fairfax Station, Virginia, is presently a finalist for the Hermann Trophy, which is awarded to the top collegiate women's soccer player in the nation. Hellmuth was also a finalist last season, when she watched teammate April Kater take the prize.

"It's nice, but awards don't mean a lot to me," Hellmuth said. "The team winning is the most important thing."

By now, Hellmuth should be used to receiving awards for her soccer talents. At Robert E. Lee High School, in Springfield, Virginia, she was named All-State and All-American in both her junior and senior years. With that kind of talent, the Political Science major made an immediate impact at UMass. She has started every game in her three years here.

"She was quite good when she arrived here and she has only gotten better," Rudy said. "Mentally she is very tough, she has great skills and physically she is willing to sacrifice her body to stop players. Holly plays a real tough, physical style, uncompromising. She intimidates the players she covers."

Hellmuth said, "A lot of being a good defender is liking it. It's all desire, if I want to beat my player then I play well. Most of the time I do that."

Defense isn't the only thing Hellmuth brings to the Minutewomen, she also leads the team in goals with eight, seven of those on corner kicks. It has been commonplace this season to see Hellmuth either out-leap or plow through a group of defenders to head a serve into the net.

Massachusetts' Holly Hellmuth battles with a Yale player for a loose ball. Not only a feared defender, Hellmuth also leads the team in scoring.

"She has incredible focus during corners," Rudy said. "She sees the ball the whole way and that's difficult since she attracts a considerable crowd on those plays. When she goes for the ball she'll go through a defender to get it."

Hellmuth said, "I don't have a good vertical leap, for me it's all positioning. When the ball is served I don't see anything but the ball. It's kind of cool, I think I'm standing by myself even though I'm in a crowd. I usually just bang into the crowd to get the ball. I kill myself half the time but I won't be stopped."

Indeed she probably won't be stopped unless there's another Holly Hellmuth in this world and she's playing defense for the opposition.

Gruber Blanks Providence, 1-0

By TED KOTTLER

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team wrapped up the regular season on Tuesday with a 1-0 defeat of the Providence Friars.

The Minutemen finished the year at 11-4-4, with the 11 wins being the third highest total in the program's 60-plus year history.

Todd Kylish scored the game's only goal with 17 minutes remaining in the contest. Brett Anthony drew the assist on a corner kick.

"He [Anthony] hit it with his left foot and just lobbed it up," Kylish said. "I just beat the [nearest Rutgers defender] to the ball and headed it into the corner over [Providence goalie Jamie Smith's] head."

The match was primarily a defensive battle, with UMass compiling just 10 shots, and the Friars only eight. UMass goalie Jonathan Gruber made four saves while recording his UMass-record ninth shutout, as Smith made six saves.

It was fitting that the two players to earn points in the match are tied for the team lead in scoring. Kylish's goal was his sixth of the season, to go with three assists for 15 points. Anthony's assist was his fifth, and coupled with his five goals, he also had a total of 15 points. (Kylish ranked 6th in inter-Atlantic 10 conference scoring with three goals and two assists for eight points).

Gruber had a season that should long be remembered as one of the finest ever had by any UMass player. Gruber

Graduates send a message to Whitmore

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Chanting slogans of solidarity and singing songs, over 200 graduate students and undergraduate supporters rallied in front of the Student Union and then marched to the Whitmore Administration building to support the demands of the Graduate Employee Organization.

"You ain't seen nothing yet," the supporters yelled.

The Graduate Employee Organization asks for campus support and administrative recognition yesterday outside the Student Union.

In a press conference after a GEO membership meeting last night, a top GEO official said members overwhelmingly voted to reject the administration's latest proposal on the three remaining demands and to hold a strike next Thursday.

"We have made our decision," co-speaker Emily Isaacs said at the rally. "It looks like the administration is taking us very seriously."

Members of the organization climbed a tree to hang a large white sign which read: "Strike before strangulation." GEO still is fighting to get these three demands on their contract: a health fee waiver, a nominal fee for non-members and cuts to teaching assistants in proportion to declines in undergraduate enrollment.

The organization represents all graduate students including 2,200 teaching and research assistants, interns and fellows.

Undergraduate supporter Ted Chambers said the University needs to return to the height of activism exemplified by the 1989 march on the State House in Boston.

"We need to talk about not just the strike but how budget cuts affect us," Chambers said. "This is a turning point. The fight against budget cuts starts right here on campus."

He said undergraduates appear supportive of GEO's struggle but added, "I think if we are going to be successful in mobilizing graduates and undergraduates . . . we need to smash the big lie of apathy," Chambers said.

Economics professor Richard Wolff said the faculty is proud of the organization's fight for a fair contract and sensed a new revitalized movement for affordable education.

"I sense the beginning of a feeling — a movement to resist what has been going on for 15 years in this country," Wolff said. He thanked GEO for "having the courage, being strong and taking the initial risks."

The rally culminated in a march to Whitmore as students chanted "Contract now!"

Chanting and singing, protesters marched up the three flights of stairs to the office of Chancellor Richard O'Brien. According to a secretary, he was out of the office.

GEO co-speaker Peter Underdown said, "I think if [the administration] doesn't realize now that we're very serious, they never will."

GEO member Jim Delle said this rally should send a strong message to the administration. "We hope they think this is a serious movement and that we are not playing games," Delle said.

Junior STPEC major Jim Hyde said, "[O'Brien] would be wise to react now before they strike."

Negotiating sessions between both sides will continue today and Tuesday.

Magic Johnson to retire

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Magic Johnson, who led the Los Angeles Lakers to five NBA championships and the league to unprecedented heights, announced he has tested positive for the AIDS virus and is retiring from the game.

Johnson, 32, made the announcement yesterday afternoon at a news conference at the Forum, where he has dazzled fans for 12 seasons.

On October 29, when they announced he would miss the opener, Lakers spokesman John Black said Johnson was suffering from "dehydration and fatigue caused by an influenza virus."

Two days ago, Johnson said he has recently felt weak.

Students express anger over cultural centers

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

Representatives of the Asian Students' Committee, the Latin American Cultural Center and the New World Theater expressed their disappointment with the lack of support from Chancellor Richard O'Brien and the University administration at a press conference in Skinner Hall yesterday.

Before an audience of approximately 30 people, the representatives presented a list of 17 demands to the chancellor and administration concerning each group's needs.

Asian Students' Committee member Alexander Nguyen compared UMass' public relations material to advertisements by the Bennetton company. Holding up university brochures with photographs including people of color among White people, he then held up a Bennetton advertisements that also included various peoples of color. He asked if there was a difference between them.

Commenting on the chancellor's efforts to meet with the Asian Students' committee, Nguyen said that these meetings will not occur because the representatives have already expressed their needs publicly. To illustrate this point further, Nguyen referred to numerous reports and recommendations dating back to 1974 which related to minority concerns.

Quynh Dang, representative of the Asian Students' Committee, said that she was disappointed with the chancellor and the administration's lack of leadership and commitment to minorities. She also expressed dissatisfaction with O'Brien's "lack of seriousness" towards the Asian students' concerns.

Dang condemned O'Brien's proposal to have Asian students seek the involvement

Alleged rapists named on bathroom walls

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

The second floor Herter Hall bathroom has become a forum this semester for women to list the names of alleged rapists, similar to events that occurred last fall at Brown University.

The inside walls of the two bathroom stalls have for some time been strewn with graffiti, but this semester the graffiti went one step further. The names of several men, not necessarily students attending UMass at this time, have been written randomly on the inner stall walls with the tag ". . . is a rapist."

The sensitive nature of this sort of public naming has lead to controversy, such as that experienced at Brown. Lists of alleged rapists' names appeared in several women's bathrooms on the Rhode Island campus, and first came to public attention through student talk.

The topic then broke into the media via the editorial page of the Brown Daily Herald, and the campus went into an uproar.

The men whose names were written in the Brown bathrooms were sent letters from the Dean of Students alerting them of the appearance of their names, and gave them the option of filing a complaint.

Ho Lin, a senior English major at Brown University and senior editor of the Daily Herald, remembers last year's controversy as being a "pretty hot issue."

"The administration held a forum about the sexual offense code for the university on November 15th," recalls Lin. "A huge amount of people showed up, and there was a lot of anger about how the whole issue of rape is handled on our campus."

Brown's Dean of Students David Inman came under particular fire at the forum for his alleged statements to sexual assault victims, and some students called for his resignation.

At the height of media interest about the controversy, four Brown students appeared on the Donahue show, and about forty more were bused in by the show to participate in the studio audience. The student panelists sat before a backdrop of simulated bathroom walls covered with graffiti, and one student accused Phil Donahue of sensationalism.

The controversy has since died down on the Brown campus, and now this similar occurrence has happened here at UMass.

At some during the investigation of this story, the names on the bathroom wall were covered with black spray paint.

Veronica Frankel, coordinator of the Education Advocate program at the Everywoman's Center, says the graffiti may be an indication of how women feel about how the system responds to their needs.

"It may be a reflection of women's desire to hold their perpetrators accountable when the system won't," she said. "The forum probably also provides the possibility of support from other women.

"There is probably also the feeling that if the alleged offenders are exposed in a place visible only to women, then it may protect other women from future attacks," she added.

There are an average of five reported rapes per year on this UMass campus, according to a report published by the Division of Public Safety. Director Arthur Hilson believes the reported rapes are but a small portion of actual rapes and rape attempts.

"Nine out of ten rapes are acquaintance rapes," he said. "When the attacker is known to the victim, there is a reluctance to press charges."

Hilson said that last year the number of reported rapes went up to ten, and that this may indicate increased awareness of the significance of reporting date rape.

"I've sat and talked to women who just don't want to press charges," he said. "It's frustrating to hear them say they don't want to go through all the legal mess, that they just want to forget about it. But they don't forget it, and they carry it with them."

Crayons move into new era

COLUMBIA, Md. (AP) — "Multicultural crayons," with colors to match people's skin tones, will soon be available in small packages for students who want more realism in their coloring books.

"In the words of one teacher, they were so tired of seeing Martin Luther King done in pure black with glowing red lips," said Bob Chaisson Jr., Vice President of marketing for Chaselle, Inc.

His school supply company suggested the idea of a small skin-tones package to Binney & Smith, which makes Crayola crayons, and the Maryland-based company quickly agreed.

Binney-Smith was to introduce the new package yesterday at a Denver meeting of the National Association for the Education of Young Children.

The flesh-tone colors are already available in Crayola's box of 64 colors, but most schools don't buy the larger box, so Chaselle asked that they be included in the eight-crayon boxes.

The new "Skin Tones of the World" box includes the mahogany, peach, raw sienna, burnt sienna and apricot, as well as black and white crayons for shading.

The traditional eight colors were orange, green, red, yellow, black, brown, blue and purple.

"Multicultural is probably the hottest buzzword in education," said Margaret Blumenauer, educational products manager at Chaselle. "Multiculturalism is very important in education; it makes children appreciate differences."

Pee-Wee pleads no-contest

By JAMES MARTINEZ
Associated Press

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Pee-Wee Herman actor Paul Reubens pleaded no-contest yesterday to indecent exposure charges in a plea bargain that requires him to make an anti-drug public service commercial.

Reubens, in a dark suit, clean-shaven with is hair cropped short, had nothing to say as he entered and left the Sarasota County Courthouse for the brief hearing before Judge Judy Goldman.

He nodded and told the judge he understood terms of the agreement with prosecutors that will leave him with no criminal record if he successfully meets the conditions.

"Mr. Reubens continues to insist upon his innocence — it was a plea of convenience," said the actor's lead attorney Richard Gerstein.

"It was a fair resolution for everyone concerned."

The judge, noting Reubens' "creative genius and ability," told the actor: "It is my hope that by giving something back to the community that some restoration of a positive manner will occur."

The 39-year-old star of television's "Pee-Wee's Playhouse" and such movies as "Pee-Wee's Big Adventure" was arrested at an adult theater July 26 after detectives claimed they saw him masturbate twice.

He was charged with exposure of sexual organs, a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of 60 days in jail and a $500 fine.

Under the plea, Reubens must pay only the $50 fine plus $85 court costs. And producing and paying for the nationally distributed anti-drug spot would fulfill a 75-hour community service requirement.

Reubens will co-write and co-produce the commercial-length spot but won't star in it, said defense lawyer Ronald Dresnick. "There may be a character or two from 'Pee-wee's Playhouse' in it," Dresnick said.

As part of the agreement, the court retains supervision for six months, but that can end if Reubens finishes the video and pays the fees earlier.

of Asian faculty in addressing their concerns as "racist."

D. Vanessa Kam, a representative from the Asian and Asian-American Women's Network in Amherst, said in a letter to the chancellor that the grievances regarding the Asian Learning Resource Center were "certainly valid."

Beth Mattison, representing New WORLD Theatre, a multicultural program which has been promoting culturally diverse productions for the past 12 years, said, "We now refuse to be used for multicultural advertisement until the chancellor and administration give adequate line-funding."

Elliot Monteverde Torres, a representative of the Latin American Cultural Center, said that funding from their center would be better used to serve the needs of the Bilingual Collegiate Program.

Torres also complained about the historical marginalization of the BCP, drawing attention to the dilapidated facilities and cuts in professional staff. He emphasized that BCP he improved for the sake of future generations of Latin American students.

At the Faculty Senate meeting yesterday, O'Brien announced that the Rules Committee would take up the curriculum concerns of the Asian student community at their next meeting.

University spokesperson Karin Sherbin, who was contacted by phone, said that as far as the administration was concerned, the Latin American cultural center was not closed.

Collegian staff member Amy Prendergast also contributed to this report.

Call for around-the-clock negotiations

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

Members of the Graduate Employee Organization sat in on the Faculty Senate meeting yesterday holding signs reading "One More Week," hinting at their threat of striking next Thursday.

Computer Science Graduate Student Manmatha said, "We came here today to show the administration we are serious about striking if they do not move on negotiations but we would rather not strike."

Chancellor Richard O'Brien said the administration and GEO plan to negotiate the three remaining issues which divide them: health benefits, job security and agency fees.

The two sides will sit down at two three-hour sessions before next Thursday, he said.

Graduate Student Senate President Marc Kenen asked the Faculty Senate if around-the-clock negotiations could take place rather than the two three-hour sessions.

"The meeting which voted to strike last night was the largest and angriest meeting GEO has had since recognition decisions. The administration is being insincere in its proposals," Kenen said.

O'Brien said a $185 health fee waiver and 21 percent cost coverage of a $1,247 family plan for graduate students has been agreed upon for the spring semester.

This concession will cost the campus $500,000 and will require a reduction in all budgets across campus, O'Brien said.

"Graduate students only have 20 percent health care coverage while everyone else has 90 percent, which is insulting," Kenen said. "We are only asking for what everyone else has."

In other Senate matters, Acting Provost Glen Gordon announced the implementation of a new touch-tone telephone pre-registration system for undergraduate and graduate students beginning on November 14 and ending November 20.

All students will receive a "PIN" — a personal identification number — and use this in combination with their social security number to access the system, Gordon said.

Gordon said the next phase in the touch-tone telephone registration project will be a pilot project starting in January for add/drop.

"There will be full implementation of the add/drop project by August of 1992," he said.

Gordon said seniors will continue to have first preference when signing up for classes as in the past. Registration will remain similar to the old "bubble sheet" method of pre-registration, he said.

The system went through testing last spring with engineering students and some other majors using it to pre-register.

Panelist address plight of Black men in America

By VICTORIA BELL
Collegian Correspondent

A panel discussing current issues facing Black men in American society was held in the Campus Center Wednesday night.

The panel, titled "Rescue 911, Part II," included Amherst College students Peter Holmes, Calvin Baker and Ari Rosner and Martin Jones of the University of Massachusetts. The panel was sponsored by Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc.

The panel provided a sequel to a similar panel discussion held last semester dealing with the critical issues facing Black men in our society.

Panelists discussed the high unemployment rate facing Black men, the disproportionate numbers of Black men in prison, and the lack of Black men with the education and skills required to function in our society.

Historical references were made as to where the root causes of this crisis lay. The panelists, as well as members of the predominately Black audience, all agreed that the problems of the Black community stem from the exploitative conditions of slavery that brought Blacks to this country.

Holmes said the oppression of Black people began when they first arrived in this country as human property.

Jones noted of how slavery had historically broken down the Black family by allowing entire families to be separated and sold to different parts of the country. The present breakdown of the Black family was cited by Jones as a major cause of the crisis facing Blacks today and expressed the "absolute necessity of a strong family structure for any real progress to take place."

The panelists discussed strategies to contend with the present state of affairs. Economic independence was cited as the key to total freedom. Holmes talked of Blacks' lack of control over the resources necessary for such economic freedom to take place. Members of the audience raised the issue of how the corporations are sending more and more jobs overseas, and leaving behind an increasingly competitive service-oriented industry that is making significant cuts in its workforce.

Jones conceded that "although we should train ourselves through education to compete within the service market for today, we must also create more jobs for tomorrow by building up our industry at home."

Anniversary marks start of Jewish Holocaust

By JOSEPH REINERT
Collegian Staff

November 9 and 10 will mark the 53rd anniversary of Kristallnacht, two days in 1938 when Nazi SS troops organized the destruction of most synagogues and Jewish businesses in Austria and Germany.

Soon after, over 30,000 Jews were arrested and placed in concentration camps. The term Kristallnacht, meaning "night of the broken glass" in German, refers to the broken glass of the synagogues and store fronts.

According to James Young, UMass professor of English and Judiac Studies, Kristallnacht was thinly veiled as a response to the assassination of a German diplomat by a Jew.

"On November 6th, Herschel Grynszpan, a Jewish refugee, assassinated the head of the German embassy in Paris," Young said. "Kristallnacht was meant to be seen as a response to this, but it clearly was organized well in advance, and carried out, by the SS."

Young pointed out that November 9 has always been a special date in Nazi and German history.

"Kaiser Wilhelm abdicated his position as head of Germany on Nov. 9, 1918," he said. "And Hitler lauched his 'putsch' to take over the German government on that day in 1923."

Young has devoted a section of his upcoming book about Holocaust memorials, titled "Texture of Memory," to Kristallnacht because he believes it to be an event that has been largely ignored.

"November 9th of 1989 was chosen as the night for the destruction of the Berlin Wall," he said. "We must remember what else happened on that date."

Yehudite Heller, Hillel House program director, agrees that Kristallnacht has been ignored, and stresses the importance of commemorating it.

"When I say the word 'Kristallnacht,' I get blank expressions," she said. "People do not understand the processes of the Holocaust. Kristallnacht was a milestone in legalizing and allowing a process in an official way."

Learning about such processes, Heller said, makes it possible to "stop the same things from happening again."

Heller was also disturbed by the November 9 destruction of the Berlin Wall.

"I see people smiling and happy on this day, looking forward to a new era of unity in Germany," she said. "To me, the day is a symbol of the beginning of a snowball, a big storm that was the Holocaust."

Heller said that Hillel House will be holding a special commemoration of Kristallnacht within tonight's regular Friday night services.

Voice mail becomes a conduit for "sex" message

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

A chain "phone sex" message that first appeared Monday night has been passed along to an unknown numbers of students via the housing voice mail answering service available in all University of Massachusetts campus residence halls.

The message is of a woman describing herself performing an oral sex act and lasts about two minutes in addition to another three to four minutes of introductions added by students who have sent the message along to other voice mail boxes.

Installed last year and made available to the entire campus this semester, the voice mail system allows students to "copy" messages they have received to other students' voice mail boxes with their own introductions tacked on at the beginning.

Students have apparently used this feature on the voice mail system to pass along the 900-number "phone sex" message to voice mail boxes across the campus. As of yesterday, there were about 30 to 40 introductions made by both male and female students leading up to the pornographic message. It is possible that more than 40 students have received the message as each person may have sent more than one copy.

"I've gotten four of them," said sophomore Japanese major Abby Miller, who got one of first messages distributed on Monday night. "People keep sending them to me and I keep erasing them or sending them back to be just as annoying."

Miller said that while the message itself was disgusting, she thought "the way everybody kept sending them was kind of funny."

"I'm sure we can look forward to more of them," Miller predicted. "This will start some kind of trend or something."

Director of Telecommunications Randy Sailer said he received a report Monday that there was "very heavy usage" on the voice mail system that afternoon. Sailer stressed that he has heard about the pornographic message but has not listened to it himself.

"We don't listen at all to the messages," he said. "The system is for student use, what the students do with it is their business."

Sailer added that the heavy usage may have kept students from accessing the system right away, instead getting a busy signal, but that the system itself can handle the increased use.

Jeffries center of controversy

NEW YORK (AP) — City College Professor Leonard Jeffries, at the center of a controversy over his anti-Semitic and anti-white remarks, says Whites introduced homosexuality to Blacks, according to the Harvard Crimson.

Crimson newspaper editor Eliot Morgan said he asked Jeffries during an October interview how as an avowed "Afrocentrist" he could reject black homosexuals, and Jeffries responded:

"Whites introduced homosexuality to us (Blacks). When I was in Europe they offered their wives to me" if he would perform a sexual act. "That's nasty. I've never seen anything like that," Jeffries said.

The comments were part of the interview in which Morgan said Jeffries branded the head of the Afro-American department at Harvard, Henry Louis Gates Jr., a "faggot and a punk."

The story made headlines in advance of Wednesday publication when Morgan reported that Jeffries confiscated his tapes of the interview as a Jeffries cohort threatened: "You wouldn't want me to dispatch anyone up there to Boston to snuff you out."

Morgan said he recreated the quotes through notes and his memory.

Morgan said Jeffries also balked at comparisons between Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas and retired justice Thurgood Marshall because:

"Clarence Thomas married a White woman. Thurgood Marshall married a Filipino. These people are Black. Look at their lips, look at their noses."

The Crimson editor also sat in on one of Jeffries' lectures before the interview where Jeffries discusssed the Thomas sexual harassment hearings saying "(President) Bush put that brother up to cause division among Blacks and destroy the legacy of Thurgood Marshall."

Jeffries denied the existence of any tapes. He could not immediately be reached for comment on the Crimson story because he was in a meeting, his office at the Harlem campus said.

City University of New York trustees voted recently to allow Jeffries, 54, to continue in his $71,000-a-year post as chairman of City College's Black studies department for the rest of the academic year, instead of the full three-year term.

Controversy has dogged Jeffries since a July conference in Albany where he accused European Jews with helping to finance the slave trade and blamed Jews in Hollywood for making disparaging films about Blacks.

Panelists teach about alcohol

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Correspondent

Several panelists discussed the potential dangers of excessive drinking at a workshop held Wednesday night at the University of Massachusetts.

The panel, sponsored by the Greek Area, included Ann Hynes, a teaching assistant for the Peer Alcohol Program at University Health Services.

Hynes noted the importance of drinking responsibly and with trusted companions to avoid the danger of alcohol poisoning. She suggests using the buddy system to help prevent such potential problems as alcohol poisoning and other complications.

"When your buddy drinks a lot, you're not capable of making those decisions," said Hynes.

Hynes said alcohol poisoning occurs when a large amount of alcohol is consumed in a short period of time. Loss of consciousness is the main concern with alcohol poisoning, she added.

The human body metabolizes one ounce of alcohol per hour, which is equivalent to two or three drinks per hour. I, Hynes said.

"A major misconception is that bread will soak up the alcohol," Hynes said. Milk or protein will coat the stomach, and slo w the absorption rate of alcohol, according to Hynes.

"Your best bet is a full stomach," Hynes said.

Hynes noted three things the consumption of alcohol will cause. First, people lose their judgment.

"This is why people think they drive better, dance better or are funnier," said Hynes. It is a false perception of oneself, and is particularly apparent when one first starts drinking.

The loss of fine motor skills is the next stage. The third ability the drinker loses is rotary skills.

"[Loss of motor skills] causes difficulty in lighting a cigarette," Hynes said. "At these times, people make poor decisions.

"If a person is unconscious, and lying there, don't automatically think they are fine or sleeping," said Hynes.

Hynes stressed the importance of doing a pinch test. If the person does not move after you pinch them, call Health Services immediately. In the meantime, put the person on their side by propping them up with pillows, so that if they begin to vomit, they will not choke, according to Hynes.

If Health Services is not contacted, there is a chance that the person's body will shut down. A shut down is the slowdown of brain activity, blood pressure, vital functions and a lack of oxygen could cause brain damage.

There are many alcohol programs available on campus. These include the Peer Alcohol Education Program at Health Services, a Residential Alcohol Education Program at John Quincy Adams, Alcohol and Athletics, Alcoholics Anonymous meetings and adult children meetings.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Only political pressure will change attitude of State House

In 1988, it was Cutback City. In 1989, it was 15,000 students on the State House steps and a student strike. In 1990, it was a GEO work stoppage. In Spring 1991, it was two days of "No Business as Usual."

Now it's GEO's turn. They'll soon be on strike to pressure Whitmore into granting the salaries and benefits they deserve. Unless, of course, the administration gives in before then.

Will the powers that be on Beacon Hill finally wake up to the fact that public higher education should be a priority? Will this be the strike which changes the attitude of the Commonwealth? Will the wisdom of funding a world-class university with enough cash to pay teachers and graduate assistants what they deserve suddenly dawn on our enlightened state government?

What do you think?

When I was a freshman, I went to Boston for the higher education rally on the State House steps. The sight of 15,000 students in front of the State House, as far as the eye could see in all directions, all believing in the same thing, gave me chills I can still feel.

We were unified, we were strong and most importantly we were right. Why else do you think the legislature wouldn't talk to us?

Well, you know what happened? The state ignored us. The media blackballed us. Do you know what the Boston media cared most about? Four student arrests out of 15,000 students and some crushed flowers.

Had I known the rally would get such bad press, I would have suggested setting the State House on fire instead. If you're going to make a bad impression, you might as well go all the way.

Greg Sukiennik

Now look where we are two years later. Student government is still shaking off the bad publicity of last year's rancor. GEO and the administration are playing chicken with undergraduate education. Rival student organizations tear into each other instead of uniting against the state, or against Whitmore.

United we stand, divided we're screwed.

Folks, it's high time we went back to Boston — as a group, not a loose confederation of individuals — and demanded the funding a university deserves, and not one penny less. Otherwise, we're just beating each other senseless while the real culprit — state government — balances the budget on our backs.

Let's put it this way. Do you think Bill Weld gives two hoots about what some clown with a megaphone has to say on the Student Union steps? It doesn't mean jack to him.

But what if we screamed it in his face? He couldn't ignore it then, could he? Neither could our fickle "friends" in the legislature and state senate.

Strikes and job actions and rallies are valuable ways of showing unhappiness with the status quo, but do they work? The evidence says "no." I don't know about your bill, but mine's gone up the past two years. I see administrators jumping ship. I see Richard Edwards, the head of one of the best economics departments around, explaining in The New York Times why he left Massachusetts for the University of Kentucky. I see maintainers being laid off.

"Hey-hey, ho-ho" is not going to solve our problems. Picket signs and bright orange stickers will not bring our faculty and staff back. The only viable alternative is prolonged, intense and direct political pressure.

For now, strikes and chants and other reindeer games will suit our purposes nicely. GEO has a legitimate complaint and deserves undergraduate support.

But we're still fighting over the wishbone when the state has the whole turkey. It's time we invited ourselves to dinner and helped ourselves to what we deserve.

Pass the cranberry sauce.

The things I hate most

Since I've been in such a bad mood lately about every facet of my life, I felt that it might be a good idea to get rid of some negative energy by writing about some of the things that I really hate. Hopefully, some of you will relate to some of these things that make me want to open my veins in frustration.

Where shall I start? Oh, here's one. I hate it when I'm walking across campus and come to a crosswalk. Nobody stops! I usually just walk out in front of cars now and hope that the drivers-by are merciful. Then again, when I'm driving through campus, I hate when people walk right in front of me, assuming that I'll stop. Hypocrisy in action, the American way.

Todd Kane

I hate it when I know that I don't have any food in the fridge, yet I still keep going back and opening the door, hoping that something yummy has appeared since the last time I checked.

While on the topic of food, I also hate when I'm in a restaurant anxiously awaiting my dinner and my waitress walks by with a full tray of food that I think is mine. I sit up and get all prepared to dig in and my waitress passes by and gives the tray to the next table. I have dubbed this mistaken notion that the food your waitress is approaching you with is yours as "Psychoservia."

I hate it when I go out on a first date at a pizza place. Boy, there's no better way to make an impression on a date than by biting into a piece of pizza and having the whole topping drop down across your chin. The topping is usually hot so not only is your face covered with cheese, you are also gyrating about, writhing in pain, trying to look hip.

I hate it when I'm driving down the highway and all the people in the far left lane are going 40 miles per hour, keeping pace with those in the far right lane. If that isn't aggravating enough, I pass these sloths and they usually have their pointer finger up their nose, digging for gold.

I hate it when I plan a route on a road trip which is designed to avoid traffic and find out that everyone and their sister decided to take the same route. These are the people who drive the speed limit and stomp on their brakes on the slightest downgrade.

I hate it when I get pulled over for speeding and try to use the tried-and-true excuse my friends use to get out of their tickets. It seems the cops always tell me that "they've heard that one a million times." If any of you readers have a better excuse than a spastic colon, give me a call.

I hate it when I'm on the phone with somebody and we end up saying goodbye for an hour. "Yep, yep, okay, okay, okay, bye, yep, okay, you too, yep, okay, bye." I also hate hearing this in other people's conversations because I know what they're going through and I sympathize.

I hate it when I've paid all my bills for the month and just when I had forgotten that they existed, it's bill time again. You'd think that the credit card companies could give us at least a month's worth of worry-free living, yeah right.

I hate it when people come up to me and ask me for a cigarette when I know I only have five or six for the rest of the day. This forces me to decide how many smokes I need to get me through the day if I decide to be charitable, and I hate decisions. I hate the guilt which I am faced with when I say "No, sorry, I only have five left." I then hate when these people play on my guilt by saying, "No big deal."

I hate it when I have to run across campus to a class when I'm late. I get off the bus, fresh and clean and wind up in Bartlett, sweaty, with my socks down around my ankles and my underwear halfway up my butt. I hate that it's not socially acceptable to pick wedgies — they happen to the best of us.

To think that I decided to write this article to relieve negative energy! I can't believe how mad I am right now! I hate it when I dwell on negative things and end up feeling like "Grumpy Smurf." I hate Smurfs!

Canadians want their own identity

I have followed Ric Oliveira's coverage of the Oka land dispute and the problem of Quebec's sovereignty for over a year and I believe he has reported these issues quite accurately. I objected, however, to the headline of his last article discussing the future of Quebec. The title alludes to the possibility of Quebec becoming the 51st state. As a Canadian, I take offense to the prevalent attitude here that if a Canadian province separates from the rest of the country, well of course, it wants to become an American state. I would like to clarify how Canadians feel about this.

When I was in Quebec three weeks ago people were not talking about joining the states, but the fact that Quebec wants to protect its French language and culture, which Quebeckers feel is being swallowed up by English-speaking Canada. Quebeckers would not join the U.S. to solve this problem — they would become even more of a minority. Most Americans do not realize that Canadians across the country perceive the United States as "Big Brother" and thus, we all feel the need to establish our own culture and identity, unique from that of our Southern neighbor.

Kristallnacht remembered

This Saturday, November 9, marks the fifty-third anniversary of Kristallnacht, the Night of Broken Glass. For it was on that day in 1938 that the Jews in Germany and all German-occupied territories suffered one of the worst pogroms of all time. On November 9, 1938, my grandfather was dragged from his home in Vienna and subsequently beaten and arrested. The charges against him — he was Jewish.

Debra Kriegsman

After a few days, my grandfather was released. At this point, he made arrangements for my grandmother and their two children to get out of Austria. They got to Belgium and eventually to America. They settled in Brooklyn and began a new life as Americans.

My grandparents were among the few who got out. Some say they were lucky to have escaped the concentration camps and the gas chambers, that getting out spared them from the horrors and evils of the Nazis. If this is true, then my grandparents did have good fortune.

But my grandparents had to live with the horrible memories of what they did witness and what did happen to them. They lived knowing that their relatives and friends did die in the camps and in the ghettos. They also lived knowing that their children would grow up in a world that allowed for the systematic extermination of a people, in a world where anti-Semitism was widespread and in a world that would discriminate against them because of their religion.

My grandparents have both passed on, but their memory is still strong within my family. The lessons they taught their children have been passed on to me, my sisters, my cousins. Growing up, we were taught about our family's history, how my grandparents were forced to start over in a country which was foreign to them. Most important in our lessons was the idea we are never to forget the Holocaust, what it did to my family and to the millions of Jews who suffered and passed on.

On Saturday, I will spend time thinking about my grandparents and the love I have for them. Kristallnacht is a day that commemorates the Jews who suffered the pogrom and the Jews who faced the horrors of Nazi Germany. In the future, I will share this day with my children and grandchildren. I will teach them about their great-grandparents, their struggles, and their love. But most important, I will teach them never to forget.

With a GEO strike a possibility this Thursday, we'd like to know what you think. Send a short letter explaining your views, and why, to the Collegian, 113 Campus Center. Profs. examine Europe

Warn of emerging internal strife

By ELIZABETH CHRISTOPHER
Collegian Correspondent

The end of the Cold War and the reunification of Germany have given rise to internal strife, diminishing the East-West conflict in Europe, according to members of a panel who spoke about changing European identity Wednesday night at Amherst College.

The panel consisted of Hampshire College law professor Lester Mazor, Amherst College political science professor Pavel Machala and Karl Ryavec, a professor of political science at the University of Massachusetts.

Mazor, speaking on the issues facing Germany today, said Germany tends to dominate the eastern parts of Europe, but that the country's history causes it to lack a direct vision.

German citizens have a deep feeling of shame about Germany's role in World War II, Mazor said, but have never articulated a desire to be a multicultural country.

Mazor, who spent nearly six months living and teaching in Germany this year, described an "I want my wall back sentiment" in Berlin as citizens pressure the government to control immigration because of rising unemployment now at eleven percent.

The public is also concerned with the increasing violence against foreigners in Germany by organized groups such as the neo-Nazis, said Mazor. Members of such groups are "alienated young people who have no future," explained Mazor.

The U.S., which had control of Germany after World War II, must accept some responsibility for the state of Germany, said Mazor.

"Nationalism is a disease haunting other European societies," said Pavel Machala.

Machala addressed the possible division of Czechoslovakia and proposed that the Soviet Union has already dissolved.

Machala, originally from Prague, discussed the desire of Czech and Slovak youths to rediscover their separate histories, following the lead of the USSR and Yugoslavia; two countries that are currently experiencing conflicts with regions wishing to separate and join the European community.

"Europe has lost its geography," said Machala, who asked if the borders of Europe would end as far as the Soviet Union or Asia.

Ryavec examined the internal conflict of Yugoslavia. The citizens looked to blame ethnic groups for Yugoslavia's economic stall, said Ryavec.

Ryavec called for the intervention of the U.S. or other European countries, "but no one wants to intervene," said Ryavec.

The discussion was sponsored by PAWSS, the Five College Program on Peace and World Security Studies.

Little Man Tate honest, simple and good

By JON LUPO
Collegian Correspondent

Little Man Tate is a small film, but that does not dampen the honest charm and bittersweet message it radiates. It is a movie full of small moments and a particular affection for its characters.

In her directorial debut, Jodie Foster plays Dee Dee Tate, a young working mother struggling to raise her eight-year-old child genius, Fred Tate (Adam Hamm-Byrd). The director of a school for advanced children, Jane Greer (Dianne Weist), wants to enroll Fred. Dee Dee refutes Jane's advice at first, but then hesitantly allows Jane to take Fred on a three-week trip to a "mind olympics." There, Fred meets other child geniuses and finds he has no more success with kids of his own IQ level than at his regular school.

He later moves in with Jane for the summer to attend a college class while his mother reluctantly goes to Florida for a temporary job. The whole time there is a struggle between Dee Dee, who just wants Fred to be a happy, normal kid and Jane, who wants Fred to achieve his highest potential.

The film is much more episodic than I anticipated. Characters are introduced with great promise and then never heard from again. The two main examples of this are found in the bratty math wizard who Fred sees as an equal (at least mentally) and a college student (Harry Connick, Jr.) who takes Fred on an afternoon of childhood fun. These two people, who seem to make a difference in Fred's life, are in and out of the picture before you know it.

Jodie Foster and Dianne Weist are fine, but they seem to be playing slight variations on characters they've played before. The real star of the film, Adam Hamm-Byrd is excellent as Fred, displaying fear and innocence behind his genius.

There is great comedic warmth in Little Man Tate. It carefully surfaces the humor within its dramatic heart. It's a genuinely sweet, unassuming pleasure. There's no phony sentiment or melodramatics to bog down what is the simple character study of Dee Dee, Jane, and Little Man Tate.

ANOTHER NEW RELEASE:

Necessary Roughness — Basically, Necessary Roughness is a football retread of Major League, although instead of Charlie Sheen and Tom Berenger, we've got Scott Bakula, Sinbad and cover model Kathy Ireland. It involves a failing Texas college football team and their efforts to win that one big season. Bakula ("Quantum Leap") is asked to return to college in order to play for the team, as well as Sinbad ("A Different World"), a professor, and beautiful co-ed Ireland.

Watch the team fumble! Watch Bakula fall in love! Watch them come from behind and win the big game! Necessary Roughness is full of wacky hijinks and misadventures and that's precisely the problem. It's just not funny — not even stupidly funny like the Naked Gun movies. Bakula has done such fine work on "Quantum Leap" and he deserves much better than this.

The Morgan Mystique: Morgan Holliday's Essential Guide to Living, Loving and Lip Gloss
Morgan Holliday with Peter Hawkins
Holliday Productions

"I am not interested in the scrutiny of psychologists. It does not embarrass me that Drag is a strong form of my personal self-expression. I am pleased when people see me in Drag, in my female persona. Drag is my art."

The Morgan Mystique is an instructive, as well as autobiographical, book concerning drag queens, and the making of one. Taking us on a tour of drag life, we learn of Morgan Holliday's beginnings in a contest at the Baccarat/Jaguar Club, to the basics of becoming a drag queen through chapters like "Making Breasts and Lips Right in Your Own Kitchen."

Including the when, what, where and hows of drag life, Ms. Holliday also includes many of the whys through explanations of her own personal experiences.

Refuting apparent allegations of sexism, she claims "My reasons for doing drag come from the personal satisfaction of mastering the illusion . . . My performance in drag is a tribute to women . . . I have no intention of entering a political discussion of feminism. I am all for equal power, but I am also for laughter and beauty."

We learn that for many drag artists, the art of female impersonation goes beyond even having anything to do with women; that some women "wouldn't be caught dead in some of the stuff drag queens wear."

Want to know what make-up to wear with what color wig? Need to know how to make a "tit" in a minute? Feel intimidated buying women's clothing? All the information and advice you need is provided.

This book is anything but a dry procedural manual however. Humorous stories stories abound such as the time, the only time she points out, that she took home a man that she thought was a real woman; or the ordeal of a swimwear contest at a drag show at a Masonic temple. Funny tales of the trials and exploits of life as a female impersonator fill this personal yet instructional work.

A milestone for the Nineties, The Morgan Mystique demonstrates and instructs things concerning a way of life for which there is little literature. The first comprehensive book on men and the art of female impersonation, it is superbly written and enormously helpful for all those interested in this art, as well as for those just curious about how and why.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will need all of your powers of persuasion to avert a family upheaval. Discuss things calmly. An emotional problem must be dealt with promptly. Seek the assistance of a caring person.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A spending spree could put you behind the eightball financially. You do deserve more fun in your life but at a price you can afford! Show any bad habits the door.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not discard an idea just because it will not work right now. Save it for another day. The winds of romance blow both hot and cold this weekend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The future looks brighter after you and your partner level with each other. Bold ideas strike like lightning! Move swiftly. A phone call proves very illuminating. Be discreet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Examine a relationship very carefully before making a final decision. Mutual respect is essential if an alliance is to last. Be ready to do whatever you can to help a loved one.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A spontaneous get-together produces some happy surprises. A new romance is fast becoming an important relationship. Your intellectual interests are stimulated by the arrival of a friend. Learn more about a fascinating field.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You find the way or means to carry out a highly desirable household or creative project. Be enthusiastic without being impractical. Share specialized knowledge with an inexperienced person.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be frugal. Buy only what you really need and not what appeals at the moment. It would be smart to draw up a list of must-haves and stick to it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are able to apply the final touch to stabilize your domestic or monetary arrangements today. Examine a romantic relationship with greater objectivity before making any decisions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Changing circumstances provide an opening for you to improve your financial standing. Forcing an issue will only lead to unwanted results. Be patient.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It pays to be alert. Try to foresee possible threats to your status or property and take protective measures. Keep a low profile. Being indiscreet could hurt your reputation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make it your main purpose to keep everyone calm and serene this morning. Good investments should not be replaced with others that are more risky.

year."

Neither coach sees this game being played much differently from the last. Both teams will stick to their game plans that have gotten them this far, according to the coaches.

"We won't make many adjustments," Rudy said. "We don't have that type of versatility. We will have to come up from the back more and we've changed our attack points but besides that it will be the same. [Paula] Wilkins is healthy for this game so we can put [Michele] Woodside on the attack, so that will help."

Tsantiarias said, "We both have the same players, so it should be about the same game. It is a different situation though. It should be a tough, tough game. We know each other but our team focuses on playing its game and not worrying about the opposition. Confidence isn't a problem for us, we just go out and play."

The winner of this game will face the University of Virginia in the quarterfinals next weekend, at an undetermined sight.

To beat Rutgers, UMass must play what Ted Priestly feels is "a perfect game."

Freshman Joel Pittman said, "We have to play perfect defense, and solid offense."

When playing a team so strong in all areas of the game, a "perfect" game is essentially what's needed for an opponent to beat that team.

It would seem that UMass will probably focus more on boosting its defense, as the Minutemen allowed a season-high six goals to the Scarlet Knights. UMass will rely heavily on its crucial defensive standouts, namely midfielder and co-captain Dan Lawrence, and backfielder Darren Stone.

But as UMass head coach Sam Koch believes, "Everyone's got to play his best game of the season."

Though the Rutgers defense is not too kind to its opponents, UMass fared far better than average against it. UMass managed to put two goals past Andracki, both scored by senior midfielder Brett Anthony. Rutgers allowed two goals to only two other teams during the season, Virginia and Princeton, both of which beat Rutgers 2-1.

Two things seem apparent from these facts: Anthony will likely be the go-to man for UMass, and if the Minutemen can hold Rutgers to its average of goals scored, they'll stand a chance of pulling off what would be one of the greatest upsets in NCAA soccer this season.

Soccer notes: Brett Anthony, Jonathan Gruber, Todd Kylish, and Dan Lawrence were named to the All-Atlantic 10 second team.

that go," he said. "So the good conditioning I had is now lost."

Johnson had been working with a physical therapist and ran two treadmill miles Tuesday. He had weighed 220 pounds but said he had lost weight recently.

"I haven't weighed myself," he said. "I'm scared."

Johnson, a winner of three NBA Most Valuable Player awards, would probably be playing again within a week, the speculation went, but then came word that he had tested positive.

At 6-foot-9, Johnson revolutionized the point-guard position after leading Michigan State to an NCAA championship as a sophomore in 1979.

He compiled a league-record 9,921 assists, having broken Oscar Robertson's career standard last season.

With center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar unable to play because of injury in the sixth game of the NBA Finals against Philadelphia, Johnson came through with a storybook performance.

Playing all five positions, he had 42 points, 15 rebounds and seven assists in a 123-107 Lakers victory at the Spectrum to clinch the title.

He was selected as the MVP of the Finals, the first rookie to receive such an honor.

The Lakers reached the NBA Finals nine times in Johnson's 12 seasons, most recently last June, when they were beaten by the Chicago Bulls in five games.

Johnson earned All-NBA status for the ninth time and was second behind Chicago's Michael Jordan in the MVP voting last season.

Johnson, from Lansing, Mich., was married in his home state on September 14 to longtime girlfriend Cookie Kelly. He has a son, Andre, who lives in Lansing.

Johnson has been active civically, putting on an exhibition at the Forum each of the last six summers. The game has raised over $6.5 million for the United Negro College Fund.

Water polo travels to Brown for Eastern Tournament

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

It's literally and figuratively sink-or-swim time for the University of Massachusetts water polo team this weekend as they travel to Brown University for the Eastern Championships.

The team, ranked 4rth for the weekend and 16th nationally, will play a maximum of three games, and if they want to spend their Thanksgiving weekend in sunny California, they must win them all.

Long Beach is where the NCAA Water Polo Championships will be held, and the NCAA, knowing that the top 10 teams in the country are from the flaky state on the left coast, will invite only two Eastern teams. The winner of this weekend's events will receive an automatic bid, and one at-large bid will be awarded. Last year's representatives were Navy and Brown.

The seeds for the Easterns are as follows — 1. Slippery Rock (PA.); 2. Navy; 3. Brown; 4. UMass; 5. Princeton; 6. Bucknell; 7. Iona; 8. Washington & Lee.

UMass' first game will be against Princeton Saturday morning at 10:30 a.m. The Minutemen beat the Tigers 9-7 earlier this season.

If all goes according to plan, a UMass win would pit them against Slippery Rock Saturday night at 7 p.m. The teams have not met this year, but last year's two-game series saw each team win one.

"It's basically the same Slippery Rock team as last year, and our team is better this year," said junior field player Dan McOsker.

"We know that we can beat that squad [S.R.] if we progress to play them," said coach Russ Yarworth. "We pose some matchup problems because I don't think they play 2-meter defense very well. That's one of their weaknesses."

The Minutemen must be starving for a big win, as they have dropped the championship games of the last two tournaments they have played. Two weeks ago it was a 10-9 quadruple overtime loss to Brown at the New England League Tourney, and last week the Bears won the New England championship with a 7-3 win over UMass.

Last year the Minutemen played Harvard in the first round of the Easterns, and lost a heartbreaker in double overtime. A loss in the first round is usually the equivalent of being mathematically eliminated from any hope of playing for the national championship, so it's important to concentrate on the present game, not a future one.

"I have to be careful not to have the team look ahead," said Yarworth, "because if you don't win the first game, as we found out last year, you don't go anywhere."

The team remembers that loss all too well, but for the four seniors on the squad — Adam Feldman, Todd Larson, Todd Quinn, and Alex Yelensky — their water polo days at UMass have boiled down to this weekend.

"It looks, now, like we blew it last year," said Feldman. "We didn't have the concentration and intensity, and this year we'll keep that in mind. Last year we were just happy to be at the Easterns, but this year it goes further than just being there. We want to win it."

"We can beat anyone in the East on the right day," said Yarworth. "They'll be up. It's the Eastern Championships, they have to be up."

a serious contender. Dallas has the leading rusher in the NFL in Emmit Smith, the third highest rated quarterback in the NFC in Troy Aikman, and the leading recievers for tight ends and wide-outs in Jay Novacek and Michael Irvin. All four are ahead of such names as Thurman Thomas, Barry Sanders, Jerry Rice and Keith Jackson.

With all of this talent, the Cowboys hope to be able to compete on the same level as teams like Houston. They have already done well against Washington and the Giants, but both games were at home.

Houston proved to all critics last week that they are true contenders. The Oilers will not let last week's loss impede their success for the remainder of the season. What matters most now is the fight for home field advantage in the playoffs.

Dallas's pass rush is too weak to penetrate the strong offensive line of the Oilers, which will give Warren Moon plenty of time to throw the ball. All of this time to throw will make it even harder for the already overmatched secondary of Dallas.

The New England Patriots have to be one of the most feared teams in the league right now, simply because no one knows what to expect from them. They have greatly improved their defense from a unit that was blown out most of last year. The only problem is no body knows which offense will show up week-to-week.

Last week against the Bills, the Pats ran an offense that they should stick with the rest of the year. This offense included highlighting their potent running attack of Leonard Russell, one of the future stars on the team. The other star is Marv Cook, who is the focus of the short passing attack along with Irving Fryar.

As long as the Pats stick to a short passing game and go to the run often, they will be able to stick with most teams in the NFL. This game plan should be used against a weak Dolphins defense so they can keep the explosive Dan Marino off the field. Earlier this season Miami beat the Pats 20-10, as Marino took advantage of the weak Patriot secondary.

The Bills are the best bet of the week against the pathetic Packers. The Bills' only weakness is against the run, of which Green Bay has none, to say the least. The leading rusher, who doesn't even deserve to be mentioned, has a spellbinding 139 yards for the season.

Green Bay is very weak against the pass and should have a good time watching James Lofton and Andre Reed running from endzone-to-endzone. With the return of lineman Jeff Wright and a soft offensive line for the Packers, Buffalo should pressure Majkowski all day.

The Giants are another good pick this week, despite their poor performance against the Eagles, although it was a lot of fun watching LT getting burned on the touchdown by Keith Jackson. And who says he hasn't lost a step?

The Giants play very well against a Phoenix team that has had serious trouble scoring for the past few weeks. If they expect to have a prayer of making the playoffs, this is a must game. As far as the quarterback controversy that has re-arisen, it would be nice to see Phil Simms start so that everyone could see that the only problem is that the Giants are washed up.

The point spread listed for the Detroit-Tampa Bay game is not a misprint, but it is an opportunity for everyone to pay for their tuition. Favored by only 3 1/2, the Lions are a sure cover. Tampa Bay's offense is terrible and they are very run soft. Barry Sanders and the Lions should have a field day.

Best of luck to Buck, known by most as Magic. God be with him.

assists).

The probable match-up Sunday will be the Minutewomen against the Lady Owls. The game is of extreme importance this year, because the A-10 does not receive an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament. Both Temple and UMass are nearly equal, and there probably won't be enough room in the NCAAs for both of them. So, whoever wins will probably make it to the tourney, and the loser will go home.

"We are playing on their home field, which is a positive for them, and I know that they've really turned it up a notch in terms of their corner attack," Hixon explained.

Massachusetts was one of the early surprises of the field hockey season. The young players, such as Jenn Salisbury and Tara Jelley, meshed nicely with veterans like Dawn Trumbauer and Philippa Scott. An 8-0 start propelled the team to second in the country. A strong defense, led by sweeper Tracy Barclay, Joy Blenis and Colleen Duffy held opposing teams' offenses at bay.

And then . . . disaster. "Roll UMass" became "Roll over UMass," as the Minutewomen lost games to teams like Delaware and Northeastern, teams they should have beaten.

So, who is the favorite if UMass faces Temple on Sunday? It's hard to say. Temple has the home-field advantage, a hot streak, and a better national ranking.

UMass has great goaltending, better young talent and competitive fire. They match up well on defense, but goal scoring may be a problem. UMass' string of 10 consecutive NCAA post-season appearances is in jeopardy if they lose.

"I'm hoping it would be a kind of midfield type of game, that's what we'd like," Hixon said.

It's a tournament weekend for soccer

• Women in NCAAs

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Sometimes you get what you wish for.

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team learned that this week, as two of its wishes came true: an NCAA Tournament bid and a rematch with rival University of Connecticut. Both wishes come true when UMass (14-4) matches up with UConn (15-4), in the first round of National Championships, at 11 a.m. on Saturday, in Storrs, Conn.

On October 21st, in Amherst, the Huskies, then ranked No. 2 in the nation, defeated UMass 2-0. UConn's Laurie Krutchkoff broke a scoreless tie with 11:48 remaining in regulation with a nice goal into the top right corner of the UMass net. Ten minutes later Karen Ferguson padded the Huskie's lead with a bad goal that UMass goalkeeper Briana Scurry should have stopped.

Although the final result was 2-0, the game was an evenly played contest, one that the Minutewomen could have won.

"I thought we crushed them last time, but we just missed on a few opportunities," UMass defender Holly Hellmuth said. "Without a doubt, I know we can beat them on Saturday."

UMass coach Jim Rudy said, "I like playing teams that we lost to. It gives us a lot of incentive to play well."

UConn coach Len Tsantiarias said, "It was a close game, we didn't play as well as we could've. We made two mistakes that Massachusetts could've scored on and we got a nice goal and another that wasn't on a strong play. It wasn't one of our better games but we got the goals."

UConn has been in a slump lately, dropping three of their last four games. However, all three losses (Colorado College, Hartford and Santa Barbara) came against tournament teams. Massachusetts has won their last five.

"We lost those three but we dominated the games," Tsantiarias said. "They were lucky, we could've beaten them, now we know that we can beat anyone in the tournament."

Rudy said, "We are playing better ball now than at any time of the season. We're playing smarter and our training has been more skillful. It's the best training we've had all

Justin Edelman and the soccer team are chasing the Atlantic 10 title this weekend at Rhode Island. UMass takes on powerhouse Rutgers today at 11a.m.

The hype will end about the Atlantic 10 Tournament match-up between the University of Massachusetts and Rutgers University at 11 a.m. today, when the two teams take the field at the University of Rhode Island.

Rutgers is a team with overwhelming offensive firepower. In 20 games this season, the Knights tallied 47 goals, for a staggering average of 2.35 per game (UMass averaged 1.53 goals per game).

Freshman first-team All-Atlantic 10 forward Rob Johnson is Rutgers' most dangerous sniper. He put 11 past helpless goaltenders this season and added nine assists to lead the team with 31 points. Johnson was not a major factor in Rutgers' 6-2 defeat of UMass earlier this season. Rutgers' offensive depth extends well beyond Johnson.

Lino DiCullo, another first-team A-10 member, is scoring runner-up to Johnson, with nine goals and seven assists, good for 25 points. Against the Minutemen, he picked apart the defense to score three goals and two assists.

Rutgers also has Jeff Zaun, yet another star scorer who could also be a problem for the Minuteman defense. Zaun scored a back-breaking goal against UMass and was third in scoring for Rutgers with eight goals and one assist for 17 points.

Johnson, DiCullo, and Zaun combined for 28 goals this season, just one short of UMass' season total. Needless to say, the Scarlet Knights have no shortage of offense.

Then there's its defense, which is about as stingy as one can be. It's led by another first-teamer, Alexi Lalas. Rutgers allowed only 101 shots on net (UMass: 165) this season and just 13 goals, which translates to a startling average of 0.67 goals per game. (UMass average was a still-impressive 0.94.)

Backing up the Rutgers defense is stellar All-Atlantic 10 first team goaltender Bill Andracki, whose numbers are comparable to UMass' Jonathan Gruber. Andracki never rested during a Rutgers contest this season, while Gruber only missed brief portions of two games. Andracki was forced to make but 88 saves (compared to Gruber's record-setting 147), and his save percentage was .880 (Gruber's was .890).

Field hockey faces URI in A-10 Tourney

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

This weekend, at Temple University in Philadelphia, PA, the enigmatic University of Massachusetts field hockey team, with its streak of 10 consecutive post-season appearances in jeopardy, attempts to win the Atlantic-10 Championship and prolong their season.

The three teams that stand in the way of UMass and an Atlantic-10 Championship are Rhode Island, Rutgers and Temple. UMass is seeded first, and they will play the number four seed Rhode Island on Saturday at 12 noon. Temple, the number two seed, will face Rutgers at 2 p.m. The winners play in the Championship game Sunday at 1 p.m.

UMass (13-5-1) is ranked ninth in the country, which is a drop from their initial ranking of number two. Temple, on the other hand, has gained momentum in the polls, and is now No. 7 in the NCAA polls. While Rhode Island (7-11) and Rutgers (9-10) are the weak sisters of the league, they both have some upset capability.

In recent years, UMass has struggled in the A-10 Tournament. Last year, UMass lost to Temple 2-0, and the year before, the Minutewomen were defeated 1-0 by Penn State. Needless to say, the team is hungry for a division title.

Rhode Island, the team UMass is paired up with in the first round, is the weakest of the four teams in the A-10s. Their strength is the play of forward Andrea Gomez. Gomez has 19 points this year, on 16 goals, which puts her near the top of the A-10 in scoring.

UMass would be smart to keep the ball away from Gomez, which is exactly what coach Pam Hixon plans to do.

"Andrea Gomez is their best player, and she is very, very good. We'll have to keep her from getting the ball," she said. "If you can shut her down, you have a pretty good chance to close them off."

Rhode Island has not beaten a team in the top 20, and they have never beaten UMass under Hixon's tenure. In fact, UMass has shut out URI in six of their last seven games. This is the Wram's first appearance in the Atlantic-10 Tournament.

Add it all up and yup, you guessed it, Hixon is still wary of an upset.

"I think we'll be a better turf team. They have some quickness, their skills are a little weak.

"They're scary, because they have nothing to lose. They could come out crazy. We want something beyond, so that could be a catch-22."

Rutgers has had a mediocre season, considering some of the talent the team has. Goaltender Jodi Deem is one of the best in the league. Deem has been an A-10 player of the week twice this year. She has recorded six shutouts and has a 0.86 goals against average in the A-10.

Rutgers is not a high scoring team, and they start slowly. An upset against Temple will only be accomplished by getting on the board early, and hoping Deem's goaltending will pull them through.

Don't count on it, though. Rutgers lost 7-1 to Temple this year, which may make them a little gun shy.

Temple is a very strong team, riding a hot streak. They have won their last four games, including a season-ending 2-1 victory over Northeastern.

Their offense is primarily led by Toni Byard (20 goals) and Lori Warneka (19

Roy's picks for week 10

The Battle of the Lone Star State begins this Sunday as the Dallas Cowboys go into the House of Pain to face the Houston Oilers. Dallas hopes to take advantage of Houston's devastating loss to the Redskins. This matchup will be a true test for both teams.

Roy Alexander

After last week's loss that left Ian Howfield crying like a baby and out of a job, Houston needs to prove to themselves that they are still a contender. The Oilers should use last week as motivation rather than as criticism.

The Redskins are one of the toughest teams in the league to beat, and at RFK Stadium, it may be impossible. Yet the Oilers went into Washington and held one of the most explosive teams to only 16 points. Had it not been for Howfield's shank of a chip shot (33-yard field goal) with no time left, they would have accomplished this impossible task.

The Cowboys stand to gain more than they stand to lose. Many fans question how close they are to being

Minutemen battle Richmond

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Time to win at home is running out on the University of Massachusetts football team. With two home dates left and one against New Hampshire (7-1), it appears as if the Minutemen's best chance to win at Alumni Stadium is this weekend against the University of Richmond (12:30 p.m.)

Richmond is 2-6, 2-4 in the Yankee Conference. Their record may be deceiving, as they have scored almost as many points in their last three games (108) as the Minutemen have scored all season (111).

The Minutemen (3-5, 2-3 in the Yankee Conference) played their best game of the season last week against Northeastern, a 27-12 win.

UMass running back Jerome Bledsoe surpassed the 1,000 yard mark in rushing last week with a 195-yard performance. He is second in Division I-AA in all-purpose yardage and third in Division I-AA in rushing.

Coach Jim Marshall's team has been the victim of some close games this season. In the past two weeks, the Spiders have lost to James Madison, a team that beat UMass 24-7, 47-42 and the University of Connecticut 35-34.

The Richmond offense is paced by quarterback Greg Lilly and running back Uly Scott. Scott has rushed for over 100 yards in the past two games — he had 143 yards last week in the loss to UConn and 113 yards against James Madison.

"Richmond has improved since the first couple of weeks," UMass coach Jim Reid said. "Lilly has excellent skills, he's an excellent player."

The Spiders finished 1-10 last season, but they have won twice this year, and they will be returning most of their players for the next two years.

"They're gonna be good, watch out Yankee Conference," Reid said.

Defensive back Scott Burton of Richmond was the Defensive Player of the Week in the Yankee Conference last week, when he recorded 11 tackles including eight unassisted.

Last season, the Minutemen improved their record to 7-0-1 with a 26-9 win over Richmond in Virginia. Dave McGovern, this week's starting quarterback threw a 58-yard touchdown pass to Ron Villone to lead the Minutemen to victory. McGovern replaced Tom Fasano, who broke his ankle in the first half.

Eric Thimas, this season's invisible receiver (7 receptions for 92 yards and one touchdown), ran for 135 yards and two touchdowns last season.

"I hope we win a game," Reid said. "Boys have worked really hard in practice, we're hoping to win at home," Reid said.

Game Notes: The game will be broadcast on WTTT (1430 AM), WGAM (1520 AM), WSRO (1470 AM) and WGAW (1340 AM).

Profs may receive spring furlough pay

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Society of Professors won a small battle last week in its attempt to regain salary held back during the state-mandated furloughs last spring.

Arbitrators released Friday a decision in support of the Massachusetts Society of Professors — the union which represents campus professors and librarians — saying their union contract was violated by the mandatory furloughs. This statement will be brought for further review at Suffolk Superior Court.

Massachusetts Society of Professors President David Lenson said the best argument against the state is last year's budget surplus of $200,000. He said the state's main reason for the furloughs was a lack of funds to pay workers, which does not hold true in light of the state's money "in the black."

Lenson said the decision may not benefit librarians, members of the 1,200-member union, since they were not deemed "critical staff" by the state.

While librarians could choose not to work on furlough days or take extra vacation time, professors were required to work the usual number of days. Lenson said other unions on campus have filed similar suits on their own.

The furloughs were enacted during a 10-week period last spring. Each week an average of one day's pay was withheld from the paycheck of all state workers. The money is to be returned to each person upon resigning or retiring.

The state withheld a portion of the salary according to a formula where the more an employee was paid the more days without pay were assessed. Most UMass professors lost 10 days worth of salary.

Any money returned to professors may not be seen for a while, said Lenson. "[The state] will tie it up as long as they can," he said.

He expects the state to appeal a court decision, which he said will be "probably based on the arbitration."

Lenson called the decision "one of those rare things — a piece of good news." He was confident that a repeal of the professors' furloughs "might deter Weld from doing it again."

Acting Provost Glen Gordon said the University might have a problem paying back salary if the court decides in favor of the professors, calling it "an interesting fix."

Gordon said the state has failed to assist in paying those who have left the University and claimed their furlough pay.

"If they say we have to pay them back now and we do not have the money, what are we going to do?" Gordon said. "There is no shortage of problems [at the University.]"

Gordon, who had 15 days of pay withheld from his own salary, said the amount taken

Student dies; apparently commits suicide

A 20-year-old University of Massachusetts student was found dead in his Leach Residence Hall room early Monday morning, an apparent suicide, officials said.

Spokesperson Kay Scanlon said the student was identified as Anthony V. Inzirillo of Waltham.

Scanlon said he apparently died of a self-inflicted gunshot wound.

She said he had been dead about 24 hours when he was discovered by his roommate about 3 a.m.

An autopsy was conducted in Springfield yesterday and an investigation was continuing, she said. The results of the autopsy could not be obtained at press time.

The shotgun used had been recently purchased by Inzirillo, Scanlon said.

University officials said he was a freshman but were unable to determine his major.

Minutemen pound Richmond

Bledsoe's four touchdowns key team's fourth win

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

With two games left, the University of Massachusetts is playing its best football of the season. Just ask the University of Richmond.

The Minutemen spanked the Spiders (2-7, 2-4 in the Yankee Conference) 42-14 in front of 4,427 fans at McGuirk Alumni Stadium Saturday and improved their record to 4-5 and 3-3 in the YanCon.

The Minutemen dominated the game from start, when quarterback Dave McGovern completed a 64-yard touchdown pass to Eric Thimas on UMass' first play of the game, to finish when UMass linebacker Phil Lartigue recovered a Richmond fumble with 1:14 to play in the game.

"If a neutral spectator sat in those [expletive] stands, he would have appreciated the offensive output of the University of Massachusetts," UMass coach Jim Reid said. "He would have appreciated Jerome Bledsoe's outstanding performance, he would have appreciated the great defensive line play of the University of Massachusetts and he would have appreciated Richmond's excellent short-passing game which kept them in the game, [us] totally on our heels and allowed them to get 14 points."

UMass running back Jerome Bledsoe continues to make a strong case for being named the Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the Year. Bledsoe rushed for a career high 226 yards on 26 carries, including four touchdowns and was awarded Co-Offensive Player of the Week in the Yankee Conference.

"Jerome did a great job, he's a phenom," Reid said.

Bledsoe scored his first touchdown early in the second quarter from 2 yards out, to put UMass ahead 14-0. His second touchdown came with :17 left in the first half, when he ducked into the end zone from 1 yard out to give the Minutemen a 21-0 advantage at the half. He had runs of 35 and 10 during the seven-play, 58-yard drive in which his number was called six times.

By halftime, Bledsoe had 145 yards, the eighth straight week he has gone over 100 yards. He needs only 375 yards rushing to break Garry Pearson's UMass single season rushing record of 1,631, set in 1982.

"I can't think about the record yet," Bledsoe said. "We

Prison education enriches inmates

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts graduate student in political science taught journalism classes this summer — the students were inmates and the classroom was a prison. Through a novel program called the Prison Education Project run by the University's Division of Continuing Education, Eric Goldscheider, 34, taught journalism at two state prisons.

He taught two small introductory journalism classes at North Central Correctional Institute at Gardner, a medium security prison, and the Mass. Correctional Institute at Shirley, a minimum security prison. The students are all University students working toward a bachelor's degree.

"It's a different environment to speak your mind in and write what you want to write," Goldscheider said. An obvious major obstacle in teaching journalism to inmates was their confinement, he said, but added there was still much to write about.

He discussed journalism issues with his students, coordinated guest speakers and assigned them to pick a topic to research and write.

"I found that some of the students had a higher developed sense about what the First Amendment was about and had very negative attitudes toward the press," said Goldscheider, a strong advocate of prison education.

"These people have a different perspective on the world," he said. "There is value in giving them the tools with which to articulate it. It benefits us all to hear their voices."

Goldscheider said studies prove prison education reduces recidivism, the tendency to relapse into criminal behavior. Research tracking 300 ex-offenders in Ohio discovered 30 percent of the parolees were back in prison within a year of their release.

The study found, in contrast, an 11 percent return rate for parolees with a two-year college degree earned in prison.

A 1987 Department of Justice study of young ex-offenders found six years after release over half were back in prison while the percentage for those with a college degree was less than a third, Goldscheider said.

"Breaking out of destructive patterns such as drug abuse and violence requires intellectual tools," Goldscheider wrote in a recent article.

Still, he feels the government is threatening prison higher education programs, including the Prison Education Project. Gov. William Weld has decried educating criminals and North Carolina Sen. Jesse Helms, Goldscheider said, is trying to cancel federal tuition assistance programs [Pell Grants] which keep such programs afloat.

Goldscheider, a former reporter for the Springfield Union-News, said this nation is not supporting prison education as a viable means of integrating ex-offenders back into society.

"Using the perpetuation of ignorance as a means of punishment only creates meaner and angrier people who will do graver damage to the social fabric upon release," he wrote.

Starting next week, the Collegian will begin publishing articles written by Goldscheider's students.

was considerable. "You really noticed it in your paychecks," he said.

Administrators and deans will not have their money returned for many years, Gordon said. Since they are not unionized, administrators have less access to the channel other workers on campus are using. They will more than likely not recieve back-pay until they leave their positions, Gordon said.

Fires set in Boston's Symphony Hall

BOSTON (AP) — A firefighter captured a naked man suspected of setting a series of small fires that damaged Boston's historic Symphony Hall early Monday.

Firefighters were called to the hall by an automated alarm about 1:30 a.m. Deputy Fire Capt. Kevin MacCurtain said four small fires had been lit behind the stage of the auditorium and in the rest rooms.

A firefighter caught Francis DiPesa, in the building and held him until police arrived moments later, said District 5 Fire Chief Edmund Maiorana.

DiPesa was taken to Boston City Hospital for psychiatric evaluation. Police said he was a resident of a mental health center in Boston.

All the flames were out by about 3 a.m., authorities said.

Maiorana said the historic building suffered about $100,000 damage from fire, smoke and water.

Certificate in Film Studies now available

By DOUGLAS BANKS
Collegian Correspondent

The house lights dim, the curtains open and you sit back to watch a film you've waited weeks to see. However, you're not in a movie theater and you didn't pay $6.50 for your seat. You're in one of several film studies classes offered on campus, with a chance to earn the newly-approved Interdepartmental Certificate in Film Studies.

The 18-credit certificate, open to undergraduates of any academic major, draws together faculty from several academic departments and will be equivalent to a minor in many areas of study. Prior to the institution of the certificate, students interested in film studies were forced to search throughout departments all over the University and the Five-College area.

UMass student Scott Hyman, former president of the UMass Film Society, says the "certificate gives students the edge they're looking for.

"Film knowledge is hard to come by because most classes are spread all over campus," Hyman said. "This program will give students the opportunity for a diverse education in many departments without running around."

Several departments, including Communications, English, Comparative Literature, Art, Anthropology, Slavics, German, French, Italian and Education, have joined the interdepartmental certificate program.

The certificate, approved by the Faculty Senate in early October, will offer academic guidance to students interested in cinema studies, as well as an organized program for students to follow.

"Many students have been taking film courses from many different departments on their own," Program Director Catherine Portuges said. "The Film Studies Certificate is a way to have a coherent and coordinated curriculum with a granted certificate at the end of four years."

The program may even save the University money. Eva Rueschmann, research and teaching assistant for the program, said the program "pools the University's resources and operates on very low budget.

"By using equipment already in existence within each department, we function more efficiently," Rueschmann said. "We have brought together departments that hadn't worked closely together before."

In addition to the new interdepartmental Certificate, the Film Studies Program will continue to sponsor film screenings, lectures and discussions on film-related topics. Recently, the program sponsored by the Third Annual Society for Animation Studies Conference, as well as a visit by German filmmaker Harun Farocki and an informational session by Price Hicks of the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

Voter registration drive to be held

SGA hopes to increase participation in town politics

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association has scheduled a voter registration drive for Dec. 3, 4 and 5 to increase student participation and "voice" in Town of Amherst politics.

"Our main concern is getting students to register and vote in Amherst — out of a possible 17,000 voters only 1,500 are registered to vote in Amherst," said Matthew Pavesi of SGA.

Robb Witherall, budget chairman for SGA, said "As much as UMass is a separate city there is a town surrounding us and the decisions they vote into law affect us all."

"If we as students could come out and become a huge voter block, we can have more influence in the town and with the administration," said Pavesi. "When we vote things happen. If students vote then the town will be forced to listen to student concerns."

On Nov. 18, the SGA will petition the town registrars office to deputize students for on campus registration, according to the Mayart Nartowicz, the assistant town clerk.

"I cannot predict what is going to happen in regards to deputizing students with the Board of Registrars," she said. "The town has 30 or 40 deputized registrars and in the past there has not been enough student demand to keep the registrars busy all day."

But Nartowicz said "We would call them in if necessary."

Last month 80 students marched upon the town committee meeting calling for student demands to be heard in protest of the town's plan to institute a keg licensing law.

The poor student turnout said Witherall is partly due to the students being "protested out."

"The keg issue is dead. It was a centerpiece to motivate students against the Town and Housing. Because housing policies implemented within the last few years have forced students off campus to drink therefore creating more problems for the town," he said.

Pavesi said "The message we got from the town was that they want to work with us."

The SGA has voiced concerns this semester over the loss of two bus stops on the PVTA line forcing students to hazard the streets after 11 at night.

"It is an unsafe environment for the students who are forced to travel the extra distances from Fearing Street to campus," said Witherall "We offered to pay for it out of our funds for the continuation of the stops but we were refused."

With the town elections, local and national primaries set to begin in Jan., the SGA hopes its residence hall, dining commons and Campus Center voter drive to bring out the voters.

"Our only strength is our voices," said Witherall.

Financial help available

UM offers emergency, short-term loans

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

What do you do when you can't buy that last book for Class From Hell, can't pay for that $50 prescription at Health Services and you just can't find the money to deal with any of these situations that life throws at you?

UMass says, in its own quiet way, "don't hold up a candy store, come to us for help."

Yes, that's right. Even in these days of fiscal shortfalls the Dean of Students office has emergency, short-term loans available with no interest rates for students in dire need.

Associate Dean of Students Gladys Rodriguez said any enrolled student in an unexpected emergency can come in and apply.

"Our loans are instant, they apply, we sit down and discuss it in our office," she said. "If the Dean of Students approves it, the student receives it and within two weeks they are expected to pay it back."

Rodriguez said the loans are based only upon emergency situations. "If you have a child and that child gets sick, that qualifies. Lets say if you wear glasses or contacts and you lose one, that qualifies. You need medication or are in an accident, that also qualifies," she said.

Situations which do not qualify are "paying tuition bills, food bills, rent, American Express cards or telephone bills," she said. "If you have a car and you live on campus don't expect us to pay for it."

Students who fail to repay the loan can be administratively withdrawn from the University but Rodriguez said students have been nearly always repaid the loans promptly.

The Dean of Students office lent out over 162 loans last year at an average of $117 per loan.

The short term loan fund was originally created for women after Margaret Hamlin, a former alumni, willed a large amount of money over to the University for usage by women students only.

Ten years ago, William Fields, then Dean of Students, raised money for men creating the William Field Award Fund. Since then the University has been able to to offer awards for students with equal shares for both men and women.

Students must upon application for the short term loan present proof of ability to repay any loan, such as financial aid, job or Social Security payment, Rodriguez said.

Loans are limited from $50 for three weeks, with one loan per semester except under special circumstances, she said.

Unique dictionary keeps regional languages alive

By MICHAEL MEEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

Didley squat: A largely Southern expression for something lacking in value.

This is only one of the thousands of entries in the second volume of the Dictionary of American Regional English a University of Massachusetts professor is crafting for the multi-volume reference work.

Audrey Duckert, a lexicographer and English professor, is adjunct editor of the dictionary. As part of her work for the dictionary, known as DARE by Duckert and her colleagues, Duckert has spent the last 26 years researching distinctive regional languages.

This second volume — covering the letters "D" through "H" — was published in September 1991 by Belknap Press of Harvard University.

"A" through "C," covered in the first volume of the dictionary, was also published by Belknap Press and was released in 1985. Eventually the dictionary will contain five volumes.

Duckert was enlisted into the DARE project by University of Wisconsin at Madison lexicographer Frederic Cassidy. In 1947 Duckert and Cassidy began to formulate what resulted in a 1,874-entry questionnaire, which was published in 1953. Cassidy, editor of DARE, began the project in earnest in 1962 with a start-up grant from the U.S. Department of Education.

Duckert, Cassidy and company have interviewed nearly 3,000 people in over 1,000 communities nationwide. As adjunct editor, Duckert said she reviewed preliminary definitions for inclusion in DARE, comments on them and sends them back to Madison.

Many entries in DARE are accompanied by quotes or maps showing where the usage of the entry is most commonly found. Quotes by historical figures, such as poet Robert Frost, are also included.

One important motivation behind DARE is the desire to preserve. Duckert explains that as populations age, expressions fall out of use and sometimes disappear.

"[English] is a much more fluid language than most realize. The regional [language] is colorful and expressive and through DARE we hope to preserve it for ages to come," she said.

While most standard dictionaries are dry and strictly academic — like the Oxford English Dictionary, which Duckert has also worked for — DARE is anything but. With entries such as "eggbeater," (a head over heels fall while skiing), and "dupa," (a local word of Polish origin used to designate the derriere), DARE can be entertaining as well as enlightening.

Duckert says she has just received the first definitions for review for the third DARE volume. She hopes that all five volumes of the Dictionary of American Regional English will be available by the end of the decade.

UM, area towns lose power during storm

Monday's fierce storm caused power outages over most surrounding communities including the University of Massachusetts, which lost power for over an hour.

The entire University lost power for five minutes at 10:30 a.m. when lightning caused a static build-up at a Sunderland Road substation owned by Northeast Utilities, knocking it out of service.

Power was quickly restored but Dickinson Hall, Physical Plant, Goessmann Laboratory, Marshall Hall, Hatch Laboratory, Holdsworth Hall, Agricultural Engineering Building and Goodell Building were left without power for about an hour and a half, University of Massachusetts spokesperson Scanlon said.

Scanlon said the Town of Amherst Fire Department sent a generator to Dickinson Hall to supply police with electricity but the building received power back shortly afterwards.

Over 7,000 Northeast Utilities customers lost power, officials said. Although the University is one of the power company's largest customers, it is only considered one customer out of the 7,000, Scanlon said.

No injuries were reported, Scanlon said.

BOG hopes to simplify signs

By CATHERINE FINNERAN
Collegian Correspondent

Encouragement of student involvement was highlighted at Thursday Night's Board of Governors meeting held at the Campus Center.

Vice Chairman of the Board Benjamin Preston said the issues raised at the meeting "directly affect" students and he feels students can make an impact if they get involved.

Preston said the BOG needs to revise the sign layouts to "make the Student Union [and Campus Center] a much more simple place" to get around in. He noted that there are three signs for the Coffee Shop near the Hatch.

The Board hopes eliminate confusion caused by the existing signs and also make places such as the Coffee Shop more visible.

In other Board business, the Board will be conducting an election for the search committee for a food services coordinator.

"If you eat at the Hatch or the Blue Wall, you can make a big difference in food quality" by getting involved with the issue, Preston said.

Also covered at the meeting was the Board's upcoming involvement in the Association of College Union International meeting, which offers seminars and administrative models which Preston feels will "be a step in improving the quality of service [the Board] provides."

"The Board is conducting business that is vital to students," he said.

have got to worry about winning first. If the record comes, great."

Halftime deficits are nothing new to Richmond. The Spiders trailed James Madison by 30 before losing 47-42. Two weeks ago, the University of Connecticut had a 21-point lead at two different times in the second half, and Richmond managed to climb back into the game before ultimately losing 35-34.

But, they would mount no such comeback Saturday.

On the first possession of the second half, the Minutemen marched 70 yards and ate 5:20 off the clock before Bledsoe went in from 1 yard out to put the Minutemen ahead 28-0.

Richmond finally scored with 4:09 left in the third quarter, when quarterback Greg Lilly (22-33, 198 yards and one touchdown) found Sterling Brown cutting across the end zone.

UMass defensive back/punt returner, Don Caparotti (4 returns for 107 yards and one touchdown) took a Todd Barton kick and returned it 70 yards for UMass' fifth TD of the game.

Leading 35-14, Bledsoe scampered 18 yards for his fourth score of the afternoon, before giving way to John Johnson.

"Our offense did a great job," said UMass linebacker Matt Tulley, who had 11 tackles, including two sacks.

Caparotti said, "The defensive line played a great game. What can you say about Matt Tulley, he's incredible every game."

McGovern said, "It was fun to execute. Everyone did their job. We're ready to go, we have the two biggest games of the year coming up [against Villanova and New Hampshire]."

UMass won't win the Yankee Conference but they certainly will have a say in who does.

Bullwinkle and pals 'becoming a nuisance'

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Moose are on the loose in Massachusetts and the massive beasts are becoming a nuisance, says the Division of Fisheries and Wildlife, stung by adverse publicity after it fatally shot one of the animals in September.

Dr. Steve Williams, assistant director for wildlife, said in the division's monthly newsletter there have been more than 15 moose sightings in the state in the past few months.

Williams said the number of moose sighted has increased significantly in the past five years as moose populations in the neighboring states have increased.

Williams said there is no indication the trend will be reversed and added the situation is made worse by the fact that in Massachusetts, open areas are being split by development, providing less cover for the moose.

The division came under attack from animal lovers when, on Sept. 22, sharpshooters from the Environmental Police shot and killed a moose in downtown Natick.

Gov. William F. Weld asked after that incident that the big beasts be tranquilized and removed to safer ground whenever possible.

The Fisheries and Wildlife Division said the first sighting this year occurred in the spring when two moose were seen wandering in the Ashby and Ashburnham area.

On June 22, a moose wandered into Gardner where it was struck by a car.

Another moose showed up on railroad tracks in Gardner on Sept. 30 and was hit by an oncoming train, the division said.

The latest moose incident, Williams said, happened Oct. 21 when the division received a call about a bull moose standing at the edge of a small marsh near the Ludlow exit of the Massachusetts turnpike.

According to the division, large crowds had gathered, but local police cleared the area.

Since there was an 11-acre area, biologists thought they could effectively control the movement of the moose and prepared to tranquilize it.

The first dart of tranquilizer had little effect, Williams said.

The moose stood for a second and then trotted off through a baseball field. Biologists hit it with a second dart.

By that time, the moose had wandered into the backyard of a home later found to house three German Shepherd dogs. William said fortunately none of the dogs were released.

Eventually the moose jumped two fences and headed back toward the marsh.

A half hour after the first dart, the moose dropped to the ground.

After some logistical problems, game biologists borrowed a trailer from an onlooker and loaded the moose onto it.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Boxers sexier, more practical than briefs are

One of the sexiest images I have in my mind is waking up and finding my boyfriend in the bathroom shaving. One of the elaborate shaves with a thick lather, a real razor and a little fancy brush to wisp away the little hairs. He's standing in a heavy open bathrobe exposing colorfully stripped boxers. A guy can ask any girl and almost certainly she'll reply that she prefers boxers on a guy as opposed to "tighty whities." When asked why, she'll answer that they're simply sexier.

Seana Barnhill

Before I began this jaunt into the world of men's underwear, I asked several female friends what they thought made boxers so sexy. The most frequent response was of their tantalizing patterns. There are paisley, polka-dot (the consensus was that the white with blue polka-dots were the most charming), animals and fruit. They can be silk, cotton or flannel, in which case if there are any close female associates the flannel ones will be inevitably confiscated. It should be noted as an important fashion fact that under-roos don't come in boxers, thank God.

Other popular responses were that boxers were great to have expropriated by girlfriends, for the girl anyway. They are also an easy gift to find for a guy, always. One girl commented that they were much easier to pull off with her teeth.

Of course after asking women I had to ask guys if they preferred boxers, why? Most guys said they're more comfortable and not so gripping, more graphically explained, "They let a guy breath," and "They don't wedge them into your liver."

A lot of guys also said that the fly in boxers are much easier and quicker to use during a restroom emergency, as opposed to the jockey-fly-maze provided in briefs.

When creating an image of male-bonding, it seems like it would be much more comfortable to be in a pair of loose boxers while you're sitting around drinking beer, belching and using power tools while watching the football game, as opposed to a pair of suffocating, constricting briefs.

During this excursion around the dorm I also discovered that jockeys are unhealthy. Since they can be more confining they are more likely to raise the temperature of the male body parts which lowers the sperm count.

Although it was unanimous that guys do need briefs for sports and exorbitant activity, boxers definitely show off a guy's legs better. Besides Julia Roberts (cover of GQ last year) what girl would want to borrow a pair of briefs to sleep in over some fetching boxers. Regardless of who is wearing them, boxers are sexy and much more fun, from a female's point of view. Evidently they are more comfortable, so besides the sports excuse there isn't a sufficient reason for wearing boring jockeys in everyday use.

As an ending note, I haven't actually seen the boyfriend shaving in his boxers yet, but it surely won't be something I'll miss I'm sure.

Adulthood doesn't require losing youth

A little boy called me "ma'am" the other day. No, really. He did. At first I thought it was because his parents had raised him to follow only the strictest guidelines of politeness. Upon closer observation, after hearing him refer to a girl younger than I was as "hey, you," I came to a startling realization. He thought I was an adult. No, really. He did.

Elizabeth Stringer

Which got me thinking. In my head I conjured up a mental picture of what awaits us in adulthood. As soon as I had assembled this scenario, I quickly erased it. Why? Ahead there are three doors. The first is marked "Maturity." The second is marked "Responsibility." The third is marked "Propriety." Simple. Except in this scene I am frantically searching for the fire escape.

The transition into adulthood is not set at any age. It's not expected on a certain day. It just looms above you in the late teen years, watching, waiting to spring on its prey. It's practically painless. And one day you wake up and it has assimilated itself into your life.

This means you want to study. It means you appreciate your parents or your role models. It means you have the opportunity to be heard and make a difference, the opportunity to go out into the world and create your foothold on life.

So what, you ask? I don't want it. Not any of it. I wanna cling to "Beverly Hills: 90210." I wanna listen to radical bands and dance frivolously. I wanna eat disgusting, bad-for-me foods until I feel sick to my stomach. I wanna call my mommy and whine when I don't feel good.

Lucky for us, I have a solution. It came to me via example. I have a friend who is a couple of years my senior. The other day he did something amazing. He said, "You can tell me, I'm an adult." Then, he giggled. Fantabulous. A lesson. Adults can giggle. Adults can be frivolous. Adults can still watch Saturday morning cartoons. Adults can do lots of neat, wonderful, amazing things and still carry the rest of "adulthood" off with ease.

Some adults.

This is what is important about growing up and allowing yourself to accept the role of being an adult. Work and work hard to be what you want to be. Make a difference, get involved. Let yourself be heard and hear others. In the process, lose your marbles. Lose your temper. But for cripes' sakes, don't lose your youthful idealism.

A suggestion: keep what you have learned and enjoyed about childhood and adolescence with you. If we never expect to stop learning and growing with each day that passes then we won't. As for me, I will gladly continue to wear my rose colored glasses if it means keeping a positive outlook on life. If you find you are quoting your parents once in a while, don't be frightened. It comes with the territory. And don't feel immature if you want to frolic in the fallen leaves. There are two extremes to everything, and we all deserve to live to the fullest extent of each of these.

Responsibility, maturity, deciding on a career to help mold your future ... they're all very scary. Scarier than D.C. food. However, unlike the cuisine, we have control over the attitude we're going to take going into all of this.

Let me leave you with a favorite quote of mine, the wonderfully insightful words of French actress Brigitte Bardot: "It is sad to grow old, but nice to ripen."

I gotta run. Life's knocking. No, really. It is.

Elizabeth Stringer is a Collegian columnist

Candidate dissatisfied with use of statements

I am writing in response to two pieces which appeared in the Nov. 7 Collegian, "UM Candidate's 'Straight Pride' Views Examined" by Michael Levy and a column by Trystan Skeigh titled "Paul McGonnigal's Past Statements Come Back to Haunt."

First, as a candidate for public office it goes without saying that I must come to expect attacks on my character, my record and indeed every aspect of my life. I must further expect these attacks will usually be founded in little more than scant, out-of-context information and couched in language designed to paint the worst possible portrait of my views and beliefs. And lastly, I must be clear about this: the people issuing forth these attacks will know relatively nothing about me, the person, or the platform of my ideas. All my expectations in these regards were met by the content, style and indeed the spirit of the two aforementioned pieces.

Levy accurately reports that I did speak at the "Straight Pride " rally sponsored by the UMass Republican Club and two other politically conservative RSOs. I did not, however, express any "[A]nti-gay statements," which he claims I did. The quotation he refers to as anti-gay is, "Legislation passed to ensure certain rights to one sexuality or another is wrong." Surely, if one is to be called "anti-gay," then more evidence than what is offered by Mr. Levy is necessary.

It is clear, by the context in which this statement was spoken that the message I was conveying was Libertarian; i.e., as a society as diverse as ours, it needs to work toward an ideal marked not by the necessity for protective legislation, but by an understanding and respect for each other which would preclude the necessity for such legislation in the first place.

Mr. Levy's coverage of the context was poor at best. In the interim, between now and whenever we can say of ourselves, "We do not hate on the basis of race, gender, sexual orientation or physical abilities," statutory protection which is narrowly constructed (thus more capable of being applied) is necessary. Yes, this means I do now and always have believed in gay rights.

Ms. Skeigh and Mr. Levy both drew conclusions about several statements I made in reference to a social encounter I had with "an openly bisexual woman." The references I made about the encounter were: "sleeping with the enemy" and that we had "built bridges together." Again, out of context, these statements can be twisted in the most tasteless and irresponsible of ways, as they have been here.

Ms. Skeigh states, "If a sexual liaison did occur, McGonnigal had no business bragging about it publicly." Ms. Skeigh also accused me of publicly naming the woman in question. First, that by my statement I was alluding to a sexual encounter at all is beyond the realm of reason. Second, that I mentioned a woman's name in the context of those statements is hardly out of the ordinary. I am proud of my relationships; that because of their richness and depth, with members of the gay, lesbian and bisexual community here, does not cast a shadow of impropriety on this situation at all. The motives and the mindsets of Ms. Skeigh and Mr. Levy seem altogether clear and, in my opinion, should not be tolerated by this community.

Lastly, I would like to take this opportunity to express my outrage at Ms. Skeigh's comparison of me to David Duke. Ms. Skeigh should reflect for a moment on her own outrage at tactics employed by right-wing zealots she (and I) so thoroughly loathes. Just as homosexuality cannot be equated with mental illness, neither can I be compared to the likes of David Duke! Surely you are more capable than this of uncovering real truths, however, the question is, do you want to?

Student witnesses a racial slur

Today I experienced a real loss of innocence, or shall I say ignorance. After taking my microbiology 160 exam, I was feeling very accomplished and decided to take the long way back to my dorm. As I walked on a pretty little road between Central and Northeast, things got ugly.

I passed a group of about six White boys. (Note: I refuse to use the word "men" to label them. Men denotes a certain level of maturity these boys obviously did not possess.) Anyway, a few seconds later I heard laughter and turned to be let in on the joke.

Much to my disgust, the laughter was directed at the Black woman walking a few yards behind me. To prove he was the most ignorant of all his friends, one of the boys directed a racial slur (the repetition of which would serve no constructive purpose) at the woman. Neither myself nor the woman chose to recognize the incident. We both continued on our ways.

Being a White woman, I probably will never know how that woman felt being judged by her skin color alone. I can imagine it was a horrible feeling. I had been lucky to have never seen such a blatant display of stupidity before today.

I thought things had changed in the past few decades. I thought the mistakes of the past were being learned from. I really thought all the minorities on this campus were being accepted. I thought wrong.

Now if you would indulge me, I have a few messages to send.

To all the students on this campus, to overcome racial tension is going to take more than just not being a racist yourself. Don't overlook other people's cruelty and ignorance — make an issue of it. Teach them.

To the insensitive, rude, nasty boys who thought they were so funny (you know who you are): grow up!

Finally, to the real victim, the young woman who was harassed: I wish you didn't have to hear what was said, this time or any other time you may have been exposed to such comments. Maybe someday you'll never have to hear them again.

Increased cigarette tax proposed

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD — A coalition of health groups Monday entered the home stretch of a petition campaign to force a statewide vote on doubling the excise tax on a pack of cigarettes to fund anti-smoking programs.

They say the effort is aimed particularly at reducing smoking among teen-agers. "It is very clear that nobody is more affected by higher cigarette prices than children and teen-agers," said Joseph Tye, president of Springfield-based Stop Teenage Addiction to Tobacco.

Sponsors of the measure are trying to add 25 cents to the current state excise tax of 26 cents on a pack of 20 cigarettes, which sells for an average of $1.80 in Massachusetts. The state sales tax on a pack is seven cents, and the federal tax is 20 cents.

The measure would also raise the excise tax on chewing tobacco by 25 percent of the wholesale price.

The sponsoring groups, led by the American Cancer Society, estimate that the additional tax would generate $130 million a year. They say the money would be used to create a Health Protection Fund for school education programs, anti-smoking efforts in the workplace and community and anti-tobacco advertising.

Candace Pierce-Lavin, director of the state branch of the American Cancer Society, said supporters of the measure had gathered 75,000 signatures as they entered the final full week of the campaign. The deadline is Nov. 20 in most of the state.

Sponsors need 72,000 certified signatures to put the proposal before the state legislature.

Five poets visit the Malcolm X Cultural Center

By VALERIE GOSINE
Collegian Correspondent

On November 18, 1991 in the Malcolm X Cultural Center at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, an event will take place titled "In the tradition: Black Poetry for the 90's" featuring five poets from New York City.

The poets featured will be Kevin Powell, Ras Baraka, Lorena Craighead, Carol Bullard and Willie Perdomo.

These writers are apart of a literary movement which is becoming popular among Black, Latino and other young writers around the country.

Just as the Black Arts movement of the 60s paralleled the Black Power and civil rights movements, these writers are at the forefront of a surge in the writings being produced by oppressed people of color.

According to Kevin Powell, the cultural movement now has rap music as an art form at its center. "The art form has become politics. Arts and politics are inseparable. Art is taking the place of any significant political movement. We want our art to inspire people to become active in their communities as well as college campuses. We want our art to compel people to think."

Powell, 25, is an award-winning poet and has given readings of his work extensively throughout New York City. He is a reporter with the "New York Amsterdam News," contributing editor of "NOBO: A Journal of African-American Dialogue," and has written articles and reviews for "Rolling Stone", "YSB" and the "San Francisco Weekly." Powell will also have an article in the December issue of Essence magazine titled "The New Nationalist."

"I write basically to understand and document what's happening to Black people everywhere. Many young people are expressing themselves through poetry. Our poetry explores a wide range of topics such as racism and it's manifestations, sexism, police brutality, AIDS and drugs," said Powell.

Ras Baraka, 22, is a poet, freelance journalist, youth activist and a frequent contributor to The Source magazine. He has read poetry and spoken throughout the nation and abroad. He is currently co-editing "In The Tradition: An Anthropology of a Young Black Writer" with Powell, scheduled for release in the summer of 1992 and is compiling his first volume of poetry, "Big Cities, Hometowns and Ghettoes."

Lorena Craighead, 24, is a graduate of Spelman College and a founding member of the African sisterhood AST. She is a member of Teach for America and teaches English at a Brooklyn, New York high school.

"I write because I refuse to live in silence. Being a womanist and a nationalist initiates a daily struggle for the re-ascension and respect of sistas. We must elevate ourselves back to the goddesses that we once were. Writing and teaching are the most empowering tools in any people's elevation to liberation," said Craighead.

Carol Bullard, 25, is a student at City University/Hunter College majoring in political science and African Studies. Bullard was president of Audre Lorde Women's Poetry Center (based at Hunter College), a national women's poetry center, from 1987-1989.

"Through my poetry, I try to raise people's consciousness. I write to enlighten myself and my people," said Bullard.

She is currently teaching creative writing and poetry at various prisons and working on her first volume of poems.

Willie Perdomo, 24, is a native of Harlem, New York. He has read his work throughout the tri-state area and was featured prominently on the national PBS special "Words In Your Face," an episode of "Alive From Off Center" highlighting the renaissance in American poetry. Perdomo is currently working on his fist volume of poetry, "Where A Nickle Cost A Dime."

This event is being sponsored by the English Department, the Black Mass Communications Project and Delta Sigma Theta sorority.

Out Of Many We Are One

"Out of many we are one" is an old saying that we often used in my island home of Jamaica. I would like to see this saying adopted into the lives of the Black students here at the University of Massachusetts. The University is a school with a small, yet diverse population of Black students. In this population you can find Black people ranging in colors, from very dark to very light.

Steve Phillips

There is also much diversity in where many Black students call home. Some call America home while other see the West Indies or Africa as their home.

The diversity does not stop there however, there is also much diversity in the what we speak and our philosophies and ideologies. We have students here that are "leftist" and others who are very "right" winged in their political and economical ideologies. Thus you see Black students on this campus are a very diverse people.

The problems within our community arise not because of too much diversity, but because there is a lack of respect for the diversity in the communities.

When I say lack of respect for the diversity, I mean we often refuse to hear a different point of view, because of our arrogance.

What happens is that when someone who is Black expresses an idealogy different from ours we are quick to judge. We all too quickly want to ostracize that person from our community with remarks like "he or she is not acting or thinking Black."

I don't think there is a specific way for a Black person to carry themselves, because the way Black people act here in America, is not how they may act in Africa, or on the islands, and who's to say which one's are acting "MORE BLACK".

I think it is a very destructive thing we do when we exclude other Black students because we think they do not fit the "NORM OF BLACK BEHAVIOR".

It is a disservice to our race when we do not allow the exchange of different ideas enter our community.

All I am trying to say is that it is alright for us to be different as long as we come together when it is time for solidarity. We can come together with respect for our differences, to fight a common struggle. 'Nuff Respect to G.C.P.

Got to be a L★E★A★D★E★R!

Leadership is the ability to lead and to guide. It should be quite easy to acquiesce that on college campuses many student leaders must evolve to formulate a positive future. It can be assumed that in the future we as students will be legislators, entrepreneurs, developers, etc.

The beginnings are right here in school. Everyone should get involved in activities and programs which can assist in future endeavors. First of all it can be beneficial to one's personal growth or for the preparation for a corporate life.

Second, leadership can help liberate one's mind from following and conforming to already accepted views and theories of others.

A leader establishes his/her own trail. Lastly, leadership puts emphasis on being creative in a future trade, for relating to masses and for designing a way of life fit for a certain style. Be a leader, and be true to one's self.

Unfortunately the subject of leadership on this campus of the University of Massachusetts is bogus, there needs to be a change. As I wander through some of the facilities where students congregate, there is an utter feeling that people are happy with mediocrity. Yet, fees are going up and administration clearly dictates the rules to be abided liked a commanding Big Brother watching.

Peter Riberio

Who is the regulator for the students? Which groups keep the students coveted perspectives alive? Who shows the lost which way to go? Who informs the new comers of the rights and wrongs of the camps we share? Ultimately, who informs the blind and ignorant about the intolerable social issues of racism, sexism and discrimination that keep people apart? Has this campus grown unconscious to face reality? Communication is the key and not just rallying to save kegs.

This campus seems like a big "Happy Days " show with no Fonz to keep the people in line. At the same time there are a few Pottsies and Ralph Mouths who are just faces in the crowd. The same people who greet each other with hello, don't do the same at large parties.

Remember we as students are a targeted group. We pay more and more money to go here and receive less and less benefits. Not to mention the fact that resources on this campus and the surrounding campuses are under-used and no one will tell you because you have to apply yourselves.

Be wide awake and try not to fall into a symbolic sleep because you are in the real world and you can not be a follower. Do not simply accept everything that is told to you, investigate and inquire to higher levels. In life, everything is not fair, so take control and be leaders so society won't run you down.

Formulate an attitude which moderates a disdain for mediocrity, mediocrity is expected for the members of our generation.

Do not follow false leaders and kings who snake out the wood works and decide what will beneficial to you, take a stand.

Peter Riberio is a UMass student. The opinions in this article do not necessarily reflect those of the Collegian.

Walden contract, other records in Harvard gift

By JONATHON YENKIN
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—Harriet Beecher Stowe must have been delighted that her book, Uncle Tom's Cabin, was still a strong seller in the winter of 1877, more than 20 years after it was first printed.

Not that she was getting enormous financial satisfaction, though. The pivotal anti-slavery book that helped divide the nation and cause the Civil War earned Stowe just 18 cents a copy back then.

This tidbit of literary lore, along with many others, can be found in a set of documents donated to Harvard University that give an intriguing look at the relationship between one of the country's oldest publishing houses and some of America's best known writers.

The collection of ledger books, letters, inventory accounts and other records was compiled by Houghton Mifflin Co., which evolved through the combination of various publishers during the 19th century.

Experts say the routine transactions described in these documents provide important information for publishing historians, as well as giving more insight into society as a whole.

"It's analogous to a scholar studying a laundry list from the Middle Ages," said Guest Perry, director of the corporate library for Houghton Mifflin.

"It's not so much the laundry they're looking at but what life was like in the medieval household," she said.

The documents also show how even writers who were destined for greatness had to follow the basic rules. One handwritten contract, dated March 16, 1854, is for "a certain book entitled, Walden, or Life in the Woods."

The deal gave the author, Henry David Thoreau, a 15 percent cut on the retail price. As a bonus, the publisher was generous enough to give him 25 free copies of the first edition. If Thoreau wanted any more copies, he'd have to pay but would at least get a 25 percent discount.

"I think it was a fairly good deal," said Betty Falsey, associate curator of manuscripts at Harvard's Houghton Library for rare books and manuscripts. The library's name has no connection to Houghton Mifflin.

The collection, which spans decades, also details the activities of more modern authors.

Rachel Carson, whose 1962 book "Silent Spring" helped galvanize the environmental movement by calling attention to dangerous pesticides, had to whip off a letter to an editor deleting trade names for certain chemicals.

In another letter, the famed detective novelist Raymond Chandler, apparently unhappy with a book review he received, called the reviewer "Old Sourpuss."

Chandler then described how he had lunch once with Alfred Hitchcock, where they discussed wording on a movie that eventually became the classic Spellbound.

"He must have thought I wasn't good enough," Chandler wrote, "Because he didn't hire me."

The documents had been on loan at the Houghton Library before they were officially donated. Beginning this week, Harvard will showcase many of the 19th century items in an exhibit that traces the history of Houghton Mifflin.

AP Photo

Harvard's Houghton librarian Richard Wendorf is seen last week in Boston as he displays the 19th century records concerning the publishing company's business with some of America's greatest writers of that period.

"The materials are not going to be of interest to a narrow group," said Richard Wendorf, Harvard's rare books librarian. "They are very rich in their historical resonance."

For instance, by examining the ledgers, observers can tell what was being read in Cincinnati, Baltimore or other cities where the books were being sold.

For social historians, a payroll book from 1856 show women were working side by side with men in the printing shop.

Books also could be something to treasure. In a printed announcement from 1865, illustrated works by Nathaniel Hawthorne, James Fenimore Cooper and Willam Cullen Bryant are described as "excellent wedding presents, birthday gifts, school prizes, etc."

The Houghton Mifflin archives also contain summaries of many writings that were never printed. Budding authors sent in their proposals, but most were rejected.

"It's like an eyewitness account to works that we've never seen," Falsey said.

Field hockey sweep awards at A-10 banquet

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — The University of Massachusetts field hockey team swept the top three awards at Friday's Atlantic-10 awards banquet.

UMass midfielder Sherlan Cabralis won the A-10 Player of the Year, midfielder Colleen Duffy won Freshman of the Year and coach Pam Hixon won her third Coach of the Year award.

The awards were voted on by the coaches of the conference. All three winners were extremely surprised by being selected.

"I was so suprised," a tearful Cabralis said. "I'm in shock."

Cabralis, a junior from the island of Trinidad in the West Indies, finished fourth on the team with nine points, on two goals and seven assists. Her two-way play as a midfielder has been one of the strengths for UMass.

Duffy, a starter in her first year, was just as shocked to win the conference's Freshman of the Year award. Also a midfielder, Duffy impressed the panel with her hard work on defense. She has been a key contributor to the rock-solid defense, which allowed only 13 goals in 18 regular season games.

Humbly, she praised her own team.

"This is a team award. I could not have received this if we didn't do well as a team," she said.

Hixon won the A-10 Coach of the Year award for the second year in a row. In addition, she also won it in 1988. Her impressive 214-61-18 record has been compiled in her 14 years at UMass. She was named Collegiate Coach of the Year in 1981. Hixon is a member of the U.S. National Coaching Staff, and last year she served as an assistant with the U.S. team.

In her acceptance speech, Hixon praised the hard work and competence of the other coaches in the division.

The All-Conference team for the A-10 was also announced Friday, and five UMass players were honored, the most of any team. Midfielders Joy Blenis and Cabralis, defenseman Kathy Phelan, forward Jenn Salisbury, and goalie Philippa Scott were awarded for their outstanding play. Duffy received honorable mention to the team.

Blenis has been a strong presence in the midfield. She has taken some of the tougher assignments on defense and has one of team's hardest shots. She is the shooter on UMass' penalty corner.

Kathy Phelan is also a tough defender that Hixon can utilize in different ways. Phelan, a junior from Mountaintop, Pa, has strong passing skills and is a key cog in UMass' penalty corner.

Salisbury, a sophomore from Newville, Pa, is the closest the Minutewomen have to being a pure scorer. Her impressive 18 points on 14 goals and four assists have been a pleasant surprise.

Scott has been impressive in goal for the Minutewomen. In 1,282 minutes of play, she has 126 saves and has allowed only 13 goals. Her goals against average is 0.72, one of the best in the country.

Four Minutewomen were named to the All-Tournament team, picked by the coaches. Blenis, Cabralis, Salisbury and Scott received the honor.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Too many comforts could sap your motivation. Rethink your priorities. Plunge into new creative ventures. Hard work and a realistic savings program are the only answers to recurring financial worries.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): If you want to shine, seek new outlets for your creative talents. Those in love give serious thought to marriage. Redouble your efforts to save money.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Children will be more cooperative if you are candid with them. Exercise self-restraint. A temporary sacrifice could bring new chances for success. Follow your heart in romance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Try to visualize how a project will develop. Keep close tabs on costs if building a house. Real estate negotiations enjoy highly favorable influences. An old flame could re-enter your life.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If your workload increases, pace yourself. Delegate more responsibility to reliable people at work and home. Trust only the tried-and-true today. Keep in touch with old friends. Romance has you guessing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Financial changes are favored today. Check your insurance coverage; it may be time to shop around. Rumors could be growing about your personal life. Nip them in the bud by being very discreet.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Travel is best postponed. Transact as much business as possible by telephone. The direct approach works best if you need a favor. Small social gatherings are favored tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An upsurge in energy is indicated. Rev up your artistic motor! You may be able to obtain some assistance that will reduce your financial worries. Keep a close eye on spending.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You find it easier to communicate with your co-workers now. Good news could arrive by mail or phone. Express your feelings openly and romance will become more rewarding.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If you feel that the pace is getting to be too much for you, slow down. Do not be lured into making risky investments. You need a safe place for your savings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can make up the ground that you recently lost by getting an early start today. A promise of financial support comes from an unexpected source. Be careful not to take a mate for granted.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Postpone reaching any conclusions until all the facts are known. Do not use your resources to back risky financial schemes. Sharing secrets with your mate brings you closer together.

Hackathorn, who then was forced to try a return pass which the defender broke up.

UConn had numerous chances but their plays were continually stuffed by the UMass defense. Strong play was put in by Hellmuth, Mickelson, Michele Woodside, Carrie Koeper and Wilkins. Also playing well were Amy Tunk and freshman Heidi Kocher.

"The [UMass] backs played outstanding," Tsantarias said. "[Woodside and Wilkins] both played really well and were able to shut us down."

"Our defense played a fine game," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "It was a hard fought game to the end and I am proud of my team. It was a good season, we over-achieved, no one gave us a chance at the beginning but we made it. We were a real blue-collar team that made the most of our abilities."

Rutgers' Brian Sentowski's low corner kick 52:50 into the game found Andreas Maier in a crowd in front of the net, and his shot found its way under Gruber's outstreched arms, making it 2-1.

UMass had a good scoring chance with 35 minutes left. Bleau had an indirect kick that was blocked by Rutgers forward Peter Cullem, and the rebound kick was blocked by Andracki.

With 28:00 left DiCuollo muscled his way into the UMass end, where he was hauled down in the goal box, thus earning a penalty shot.

But, Gruber rose to the occasion. He moved a fraction of a second early, and DiCoullo didn't change his shot to match the move, and Gruber dove and punched it away. It was Gruber's third save on four penalty shots this season.

Rutgers, a big and physical team, played chippy, talking a lot and throwing some cheap shots. Their style of play was cited, because in an interview Friday night Rutgers' coach Bob Reasso said UMass played "cheap." After the game several UMass players said they heard anti-Semitic slurs aimed at UMass' Darren Stone.

With the athletic administration's reluctance to give the program $14,583 to field a team next year, the Rutgers game could be the last in the program's sixty-year history.

"It's sad for us," said senior midfielder Brett Anthony, whose 15 points on the season tied Kylish for the team lead. "They were the best team in the nation and we played them 2-1. If it comes down to them [the administration] thinking we're not competitive, we showed them. Every team we play in this league has 10 or 11 scholarships. We have one spread out between six or seven guys, and we're still beating these teams. They can't use that as leverage anymore. We showed that we can be competitive without money."

Another senior, Darren Scott, said that despite the "terminal season" tag, the team didn't dwell on it.

"It was a different attitude this year," he said. "We had more confidence in ourselves than we did in past years. It might have been our last year, so we're out there, always playing as if it's our last game. Just like today. The result wasn't what we wanted, but we went out there and gave it our all. That's all anybody could ask for."

After the game Koch was struggling to find the right words.

"The kids played well," he said. "They deserved ... I thought we ... I would have loved to have won. Just to play Sunday. You want to play on Sunday. But now the season's over. That's the sad thing."

For most of the season, the defense has said they've been playing as individuals and not as a unit. However, on Saturday, it was a different case as everyone came together.

"Everyone did the job they had to do today," Tulley said. "Everyone worried about their own assignments and as a team, we played really well."

Earlier in the season, it was evident the team was missing tackles and over-pursuing its offensive reads.

"In the beginning of the year we got a little frustrated," Tulley said. "We made some little mistakes and let some big plays go by that rattled us. Now we're just settling down and playing basic defense."

This year's defense features nine members from the previous year's which only allowed 256.7 yards per game. As the Yankee Conference defending champions, defense was the last of the team's worries coming into the season.

However, as the season progressed, no one knew what was wrong with the defense, especially after they gave up 484 total yards to Holy Cross in week two.

"Maybe lately, we've been putting in that little extra it takes," Kane said. "We've been a good defensive team all year. Earlier in the season, we just didn't get the breaks.

"We now get on the field and we really don't want the other team to get anywhere. We had that attitude last year and that's what defense really is."

Saturday's contest was the second to last home game for senior linemen Kane, Tulley and nose guard Jim Mancaruso, who assisted on six tackles.

"We really wanted to get a win in front of the home crowd," Tulley said. "You always want to win, but especially at home. We've kind of let everyone down this year at home."

BEFORE YOU GRADUATE

The Navy offers you, as a qualified college student, the chance to earn up to $30,000 during your junior and senior years. And you never have to put on a Navy uniform until after graduation. No drills, no summer obligations. In the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate Program you'll get your start in nuclear power where nuclear power started. In the Navy. After you graduate, you'll get six months of graduate level engineering education in Orlando, Florida, plus six months of hands-on engineer training at a nuclear reactor trainer...and more. Just meet these requirements:

- Have completed sophomore year, majoring in engineering, math, science or chemistry.
- Have a minimum 3.0 GPA.
- Have completed a mathematics sequence through integral calculus.
- Have completed one year of calculus-based physics.
- Be a United States citizen and no more than 26 1/2 years old at time of commissioning.
- Meet Navy's physical standards.

Men's soccer goes down fighting, 2-1

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

EXETER, R.I. — The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team played its last game ever on Friday. Ever. And what a game it was.

The much talked about "terminal season" ended with a 2-1 loss to Rutgers University, ranked fourth nationally, in the opening round of the Atlantic 10 playoffs at a frigid and wind-swept University of Rhode Island Soccer Complex. The end of season record stands at 11-5-4.

Rutgers beat URI 6-0 on Sunday to win the title.

The Minutemen gave the Scarlet Knights all they could handle, saving their biggest scare for the closing moments of the game. Needing a goal to send the game into overtime, UMass' Shawn Bleau's shot with only :25 seconds left was deflected by Rutgers' goalie Bill Andracki. UMass' Josh Pittman was charging toward the goal but his deflection went wide by less than a yard.

Pittman ended up in the goal but the ball was rolling behind it. End of game. End of season.

In the early going UMass was aggressive, but was struggling a bit to keep the ball in the Rutgers zone. One key occasion, seven minutes into the contest saw a Minutemen shot apparently hit the hand of Rutgers' defenseman Alexi Lalas, who was just inside the goalie box. If the referee had picked that out, there would have been a penalty shot for UMass. But there was no call, and no shot.

"I felt we should have won the game," said UMass defenseman Todd Kylish. "I've been playing soccer for a long, long time and I've never tried to blame it on the refs, but they were horrible today. Some of the calls they made were horrible. I think the refs were intimidated by their [Rutgers'] coach and their bench."

UMass coach Sam Koch said, "The referee doesn't win or lose games, but his presence was definitely felt."

UMass broke the scoreless tie at 20:20 of the first half, on a picture perfect goal. Bleau broke out down the right side, passed to Ray Cunha, who passed to Justin Edelman, who booted it past the diving Andracki.

The Minutemen's intensity picked up after the goal, but at 31:04 of the first half there was a questionable foul called on UMass' Stephen Scott. Rutgers' Lino DiCuollo's direct kick from 19 yards out sailed over the head of UMass goalie Jon Gruber and into the goal, tying the score at 1-1.

Field hockey gains NCAA Tourney bid

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

After weeks of waiting and anticipating, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team finally found out Monday that they will be playing in the NCAA Field Hockey Tournament, the school's 11th consecutive invitation.

The Minutewomen (14-6-1) backed into the Tournament, and will travel to Brookline to play Northeastern (11-8-1) at 2 p.m. on Thursday.

UMass lost to the Huskies in the regular season, 1-0. The winner of the game travels to Norfolk, Virginia Sunday to face the number one team in the country, Old Dominion University (23-0).

The other pairings were as follows: Iowa (16-1-1) hosts Stanford (10-3), with the winner traveling to Maryland (15-4-1); Temple (14-5-2) hosts Northwestern (12-6-1), with the winner hosting North Carolina (13-5-1); and Boston University (13-6-1) hosts Harvard (13-2-2), with the winner traveling to Penn State (17-1-1).

The news is both good and bad for the Minutewomen. While they are happy at just getting into the tournament, earlier in the year they had a chance to host one if not two games. And while Northeastern is a relatively close road game, they must face the defending national champions, Old Dominion, if they escape.

Coach Pam Hixon was happy to hear her team received the NCAA bid and affirmed the regular season is wiped away.

"It's a new season," Hixon said. "Once the post-season begins nothing else matters."

On October 2, an 8-0, second-in-the-country UMass team travelled to Northeastern as a tune-up to their weekend game against Old Dominion. The Minutewomen were flat and the Huskies upset them, 1-0.

"The first Northeastern game was really our first turf game," Hixon said. "We definitely overlooked them for Old Dominion, and we struggled."

Now, the Minutewomen look to exact revenge on the Huskies. Asked if there was a big revenge factor, UMass forward Dawn Trumbauer said, "Of course. Number one, because we lost against them, and I don't think we should have. And number two, they're a big rival, and I feel that we have the ability to beat them."

Field hockey loses to Temple, 1-0

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — As the cold November rain poured down on Geasey Field Sunday, Temple University rained on the University of Massachusetts field hockey team's parade, winning the Atlantic 10 Championship 1-0.

Temple utilized one of its few scoring opportunities with 6:05 left in the first half, when freshman Crystal Carr scored only her second goal of the year on a rebound in one of the game's most exciting plays. The goal was the only offense either team could muster in the cold, wet conditions.

The Minutewomen had their last and best scoring opportunity when they were awarded a penalty corner with two minutes left in the game. Midfielder Joy Blenis took a pass from Dawn Trumbauer, but her shot was blocked by the Lady Owls defense.

"I think we played one of our better games," Trumbauer said. "I felt that we had a lot more chances than they did ... we just couldn't finish the ball off."

With time winding down in the first half, Temple punched the ball into UMass' zone. They shot the ball at goalie Philippa Scott and on the rebound, chaos erupted.

"I went out to play it, and my right foot slipped," Scott said. "I hit the ball and it went straight into the [player's] stick. She got it across. There was a scramble behind me, and they put it in the goal."

Both teams were on top of their game and the play was relatively even in the first half. In the second half, UMass controlled the play early but Temple iced the ball with less than 10 minutes remaining.

UMass was able to stop the deadly Temple penalty corner primarily by not allowing them many. As has been the case all year, the Minutewomen failed to convert their own penalty corners.

"I think we played our best game against what I consider a very strong and very fast Temple team," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "We had opportunities, it's just that we could not capitalize."

The Minutewomen blew the University of Rhode Island away, 2-0 on Saturday to advance to the A-10 Championship game.

UMass thoroughly dominated Rhode Island, controlling the ball the entire game and only allowed URI to get the ball over midfield a handful of times. Blenis and Kathy Phelan scored for the Minutewomen.

The offense controlled the pace of the game, amassing 19 penalty corners. UMass used the fast turf surface to perfect its penalty corner and wasted little time in getting shots.

The Rams benefitted from the goaltending of Tressa Fiore, defensive saves by Katie Costello and a few lucky breaks. Two of Blenis' penalty corner shots deflected off of the goal posts.

Blenis scored to put UMass ahead 1-0, as time was winding down in the first half. With 33 seconds remaining, she blasted the ball into the right half of the goal where the defenseman Costello was, where it deflected into the net.

"I knew there wasn't much time left, so I just wanted to concentrate ... and get it on net," Blenis said.

Meanwhile, UMass frustrated the Rams offense by intercepting passes. They allowed Rhode Island only one penalty corner the entire game.

Kathy Phelan was awarded a penalty stroke at 12:36 in the second half. She shot the ball, which was only 10 yards in front of the net, into the left side past a sprawling Fiore. The goal gave UMass a comfortable 2-0 lead.

Temple defeated Rutgers 5-0 in their first game, to set up Sunday's matchup.

UMass earned an invitation to play in the NCAA Tournament. They travel to Northeastern on Thursday where they meet the Huskies at 2 p.m.

Freak goal finishes women's soccer season

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

STORRS, Conn. — Tough Luck.

That is what finally ended the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team's season. Saturday, the Minutewomen lost to the University of Connecticut 1-0 on a freak goal.

With only 2:55 remaining in regulation, UConn's Cathy Cambria collected the ball to the right of the UMass goal. Cambria was able to turn on UMass' Barbara Verdoliva and with her left foot cross the ball towards the center.

In flight, the ball knuckled due to a stiff wind and eluded UMass' Lisa Mickelson's head. Standing a few yards behind Mickelson in the goal mouth was an unsuspecting Christy Rowe, of UConn. The ball struck off her back and redirected into the net past a helpless Briana Scurry.

"I didn't see it coming at all," Rowe said. "I didn't realize it went in until everyone began to cheer. It wasn't planned. I expected the ball [after hitting her] to bounce out in front but it went the opposite way and went in. I've been out the entire season with a broken shoulder and the ball went in off that shoulder so that was kind of cool."

Cambria said, "I just hoped to get it across, I wasn't looking for anyone in particular. We just got lucky."

Scurry said, "It was a simple cross and it just hit off her [Rowe's] hip. She didn't see it at all. She wasn't looking. She just happened to be in the right place at the right time."

Apparently the only person in the stadium who did not feel the goal was a freaky one was UConn's coach Len Tsantarias.

"It wasn't a lucky play at all, it was a skill goal," he said. "If by lucky you mean it can't be duplicated often then yes but that goal was a result of our strong play. It was a timing play and Rowe made her designed run at the perfect time. It was a designed play."

Rowe said, "It was definitely a lucky goal."

Lucky or not this was a game that the Huskies deserved to win. Despite the severe cold and brisk winds, UConn controlled the play most of the way. The UMass defense played a superb game, continually stopping UConns' attacks in the mid-field area. The Minutewomen were plagued by a problem they have had all season — no offense. UMass managed only 3 shots on UConn's Wendy Logan and they did little attacking in the second half.

"They had more playoff experience then we did and I felt that made a difference," UMass' Holly Hellmuth said. "Everyone was a little nervous and we had a tough time getting the play up. I spent too much time playing defense because I didn't want to get beat. They had a lot more confidence getting it up for an attack."

UMass did have a few scoring opportunities. The best came in the 28th minute, when Paula Wilkins and Polly Hackathorn started up a two-on-one about 40 yards out. Wilkins tried to lead a pass to Hackathorn past the defender which would have put her in alone. The pass was a little behind

Defense gets tough against Richmond

Intense, overwhelming. Now that's University of Massachusetts defense.

In Saturday's 42-14 win over Richmond, UMass' defensive line played like Minuteman fans are accustomed to watching. Defense which ranked them second in the nation last year. Defense, which until the last few weeks, has been inconsistent all season.

Against Richmond, five UMass players combined for 11 tackles which backed Richmond up 48 yards. The Minutemen held the Spiders to only 73 yards on the ground, which includes a 26-yard run by quarterback Greg Lilly, and they shut down Richmond's top running back, Uly Scott, who followed up a 148-yard performance from the previous week with a meager 18 yards on 20 attempts.

"We played them tough," UMass outside linebacker Matt Tulley, who had four tackles for losses and two quarterback sacks, said. "I think it was a very good showing."

UMass defensive tackle Rich Kane, who had 1.5 sacks and two tackles for losses, said, "We've found it now. We're playing with intensity and we're hungry."

Administration, GEO disagree on demands

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts administration officials and representatives from the Graduate Employee Organization engaged in last-minute talks yesterday but couldn't agree on the GEO's three remaining demands. According to GEO officials, a strike of indefinite length appears imminent.

Three key issues remain in the way of averting an imminent strike by graduate employees. The GEO, which represents all graduate students and over 2,000 graduate employees, has been demanding a fee for graduate employees unwilling to pay GEO dues — agency fees, for the University to pay a certain percentage of student health fees and for job security.

"We didn't reach agreement on the three remaining issues. Things are still up in the air," said Seymour Berger, a member of the administration's negotiating team.

In the event of a graduate employee strike, he said talks between both sides would continue.

"The administration is attempting to stall their own decision-making to a point after the strike," said GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs. "We are still not treated to anything close to respect."

Last week, Isaacs said 93 percent of graduate students rejected their current contract and voted in favor of walking out tomorrow if their demands remain unmet. Tonight, GEO members will decide their next move — to approve the administration's latest concessions or strike.

Graduate employees play a critical role in teaching at the University. According to GEO estimates, teaching assistants are employed in about 60 percent of all classes.

A major point of contention is the issue of an agency fee. The GEO has proposed that the University collect fees from graduate student employees who are unwilling to pay the weekly dues and give the money to the union or a mutually agreed upon fund.

All state union utilize this benefit. However, the state Labor Relations Commission said in 1979 that University student employees can't collect an agency fee.

"It is our legal counsel's unequivocal view that, given that ruling, we are prohibited by law from collecting an agency fee," wrote Chancellor Richard O'Brien in a statement released yesterday.

Isaacs disagreed by saying that the Commission' ruling is "not conclusive."

The administration have proposed to offer the question to the Attorney General, the highest legal authority in the state, and allow him to issue a opinion. Isaacs said this action could take a long time — from a few months to a year, she said.

"The administration's refusal to give us agency fee on legal grounds is bogus and manipulative of the legal system," Isaacs said.

The administration and GEO have been wrangling over what percentage the University will pay of graduate employee's health coverage. Both sides appear to have agreed over a proposal for the current fiscal year but remain divided on the following years.

In his statement, O'Brien said the latest offer would mean "a reduction in the budget of every department on campus."

Finally, both sides failed to compromise on job security, which GEO has labeled as "parity in cuts" to teaching assistants.

Students discuss GEO

Current struggle may revitalize activism

By JASON GEORGE

Approximately 50 students met last night to discuss the ways undergraduate and graduate students could effectively combine to assert each other's needs in the face of an impending strike by the Graduate Employee's Organization.

GEO member Renee Heberle, a graduate student in political science, noted that the undergraduate strike organized in Nov. 1989 to protest state budget cuts to higher education helped GEO to begin to grow as an organization.

"The undergraduate strike helped us over the top — undergrads were the catalyst for where we are today," Heberle said. "We hope we can be the catalyst as you were for us in 1989, that we can help you to roll back tuition and fees.

"We've found our power on this campus as workers," Heberle said. "Now you have to find your power as students."

Senior history major Ted Chambers, an undergraduate supporter of GEO, said undergraduates can use the momentum gen-

Gorbachev overlooked warnings

Soviet leader admits he ignored tip by Bush on coup

By ALAN COOPERMAN
Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev acknowledged today he had ignored a warning from President Bush that a coup was brewing in the Soviet Union, because he thought "only a maniac" would try to overthrow the government.

Speaking at a news conference unveiling his book about the abortive August coup, Gorbachev said Bush had telephoned him with the warning. He did not say when the call took place, but implied it was well before the Aug. 18-21 putsch.

Gorbachev also said he believed some of the conspirators had bugged a critical conversation he had with trusted advisers shortly before the coup. They learned from the conversation that he was planning major personnel changes, and their fear of losing their jobs prompted them to act when they did, he said.

Gorbachev did not specify who did the bugging. But the likely suspects would include former KGB Chairman Vladimir Kryuchkov and Valery Boldin, the president's former chief of staff, both of whom are facing treason charges for their role in the hard-line coup attempt.

The failed coup led to convulsive changes in the Soviet Union, ultimately dealing a death blow to the Communist Party and drastically altering the relationship between the central government and the republics. It also made Russian President Boris Yeltsin, who led opposition to the coup, the most powerful figure in the nation, ahead of Gorbachev.

The new book, "The August Coup: The Truth and the Lessons," does not mention the warning call from Bush. Gorbachev said most of the people at the news conference, including top officials and aides, were hearing about it for the first time.

Gorbachev pointed out that the coup did not take place immediately after the call. He said there had been many rumors of a coup, but he did not give them much credence, because he believed that "only a maniac" would try to overthrow the government and that any coup was doomed to fail.

He referred to a recent report in the Soviet magazine Novoye Vremya (New Times) that Secretary of State James A. Baker III had warned then-Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh during a meeting in Berlin in June that U.S. intelligence information indicated a coup was in the works.

"Novoye Vremya recently wrote that Gorbachev, the president, through Bessmertnykh, the minister of foreign affairs, were warned by Baker of the possibility of a putsch," Gorbachev said.

He added: "Yes, and there was a call from the president of the United States himself, when he said that 'information has reached us, I apologize, but I must tell you, I cannot just ignore this information.'"

Gorbachev added: "And I said that the [U.S.] president needn't worry. Everything's fine."

The Soviet president confirmed reports that he will receive at least $500,000 for his book from its English-language publisher, Harper Collins. He indicated he would give most of the proceeds to charity.

Poll: Cuomo has best chance at beating Bush

By FRANK BAKER
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — Paul Tsongas holds a slim lead over Bob Kerrey in New Hampshire's earliest-in-the-nation Democratic presidential primary race, but if New York Gov. Mario Cuomo enters the campaign, he would have a commanding advantage, according to a poll released Tuesday.

The survey also found voters believe Cuomo gives Democrats the best chance to beat President Bush next November, with 38 percent pointing to him, compared to just 6 percent for Nebraska Sen. Kerrey and 4 percent for Tsongas, a former Massachusetts senator. Forty-three percent said they weren't sure.

New York Democratic Chairman John Marino, a Cuomo supporter, was impressed by those findings.

"It's interesting and I think the most interesting number ... is the number of Democrats who say they think Mario Cuomo would be the strongest candidate against George Bush. I agree," he said.

For weeks, Cuomo has hedged about entering the race. Marino said the governor "is nearing a decision."

"It could come in the next couple days, it could come later," he said, adding that any decision depends on New York's budget situation and the results of Cuomo's negotiations with legislators over spending. He did not say what the results would have to be for Cuomo to enter the race.

The telephone poll of 469 Democratic and independent voters who said they either definitely or probably will vote in the state's Feb. 18 primary was conducted between Oct. 28 and Nov. 8. It has a margin of error or plus or minus 5 percentage points.

If Cuomo doesn't run, the poll found the number

Babysitter used electricity on boys

NORTHBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — A teen-ager pleaded innocent Tuesday on charges he used wiring and an electrical switch to shock two children he was babysitting.

David MacNeil, 17, was arrested Monday night following an investigation by police of last Thursday's incident, in which the 5- and 8-year old boys were given electrical shocks as punishment for bad behavior, police said.

The boys were allegedly forced to hold two bare wires that were attached to the switch and plugged into a wall circuit, police said.

MacNeil allegedly used a device linking exposed wires and a toggle switch, police said.

He was arraigned in Uxbridge District Court on two count of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, electricity.

The children told investigators they "had done something bad" when MacNeil applied the shock machine, the Milford Daily News reported.

The boys were allegedly forced to hold two bare wires that were attached to the switch and plugged into a wall circuit, police said.

MacNeil allegedly threw the switch, sending a current into their arms.

Police officer Willian Audette said it appeared the shock device was not designed as an instrument of torture. He said the switch was going to be part of "a toy or something" that MacNeil was in the process of building.

Nonfiction conference scheduled

By KELLY CRONIN and JENNIFER QUINLAN
Collegian Correspondents

Plans are underway for the third "Art of Nonfiction, a Writer's Conference," which brings well-known authors to the University of Massachusetts to speak on their works. The conference is sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Journalism Department and the Five-College Consortium.

"The purpose of the conference is to highlight the work and experience of literary journalists — works that have considerable literary merit," said journalism Professor Norman Sims, founder of the conference.

Sims organizes the convention, which will be on April 2 and 3, 1992, with Madeleine Blais, another journalism professor.

"We've been able to capitalize on the location of the valley. There are a great number of nonfiction writers in the area, including faculty," said Sims. "Many of the alumni attend, while it's also a good opportunity for the students."

The two previous conferences held in the spring of 1989 and 1990 featured Joe McGinniss, and Pulitzer Prize winners Taylor Branch, Richard Rhodes and Tracy Kidder.

Despite the fact that the previous conferences were a success, last spring's conference was cancelled due to lack of funds.

At this time six writers have agreed to attend the spring 1992 conference. Tracy Kidder will talk about his current work concerning the elderly. Phil Caputo, author of A Rumor Of War, will focus on his recently released memoir, Means Of Escape.

Also expected is two-time Pulitzer Prize winner J. Anthony Lucas as well as Nick Lemman, author of The Promised Land. In addition, Linda Healy, editor of Harper and Row, and Dan Okrent, former editor of New England monthly, both have been confirmed.

In conjunction with the conference, Pulitzer Prize-winner Blais will offer a new course at UMass this spring, "Writers and Contemporary Issues," which will cover topics such as biographies and memoirs, as well as regional culture writing. Her students are required to attend the conference as a critical part of their curriculum.

The two-day event will be held at Memorial Hall on the UMass campus and is open to the public.

Looking at birth of Hillel House

By JOSEPH REINERT
Collegian Correspondent

Although UMass Hillel has been a student organization for almost 50 years, there has only recently been a Hillel House on campus. According to Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, director of UMass Hillel, the idea for a Hillel house originated in 1985.

"We met with [then] Chancellor Duffy for help in finding a decent facility for a Jewish Student Center," Perlmutter said. "Hillel had expanded beyond what our Campus Center office allowed."

By 1988, Duffy had found a building — a fraternity had been kicked out of UMass and their house was available. Harold Grinspoon, an outside supporter of Hillel, financed the purchase of the house. At first sight, Perlmutter said, the house was in poor condition.

"I had never seen anything like it — it reeked of beer and urine," he said.

With Grinspoon also financing the cleanup of the house, it was livable by the 89-90 school year, when students first started living in the upstairs section of the house. There is a kitchen upstairs for residents, and a lounge and library downstairs open to both residents and non-residents. Hillel now has official ownership of the house.

Last year, all 26 living spaces were filled, and this year 20 spaces are filled, Perlmutter said. Hillel House is specifically meant to create a Jewish environment.

"It is for people who want to live in a Jewish environment and do Jewish things together," he said. "But you do not have to be religiously Jewish or Jewish at all to live in Hillel House. We have one non-Jewish student who lives here now."

David Mohebin, a UMass sophomore who lives in Hillel House, characterizes the environment as "mellow."

University student wins alderman spot

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts student Ken Parker became the youngest person ever to win an at-large seat on the Newton Board of Aldermen Nov. 5.

Parker, 21, was the second leading vote-getter in a four-person runoff for the position of alderman, behind incumbent Susan Basham. Parker edged the third vote-getter by 114 votes.

Parker, a Newton resident since age seven, said his campaign for alderman focused on gaining increased public funding for Newton schools, for revisions in Newton's zoning policies and for finding better ways to utilize the city's existing resources.

"My campaign centered around providing quality educational services and programs," Parker said. "I argued vociferously that quality public education is the key to a healthy community."

The Board of Aldermen serves as the city legislature and sets all policy for the city of Newton. Newton has a population of over 80,000.

Parker said he hopes to use his education at the University to help him to become an effective alderman.

"I'm thankful to UMass — to the faculty, my colleagues and to the institution for the wonderful education I received — which will make me a better alderman," Parker said. "I hope to use my research skills and my ability to work with others to make me a more productive alderman."

Parker is a senior political science major and will officially take office Jan. 1. Parker said he will finish his remaining graduation requirements at UMass-Boston in the spring and plans to seek full-time employment after that.

Parker has been an active member of the Undergraduate Student Senate, serving as chairperson of the public policy committee. He spent a year working in Washington in the office of Congressman Barney Frank (D-Newton) as a VISTA volunteer in 1988 and 1989.

The position of alderman has a two-year term with an annual salary of $7,500.

Focus on the real world, publisher says

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

The fashion industry should be more focused on the real world — and not just hemlines, a women's fashion magazine publisher told an audience of approximately 130 men and women last night.

Grace Mirabella, former editor in chief of American Vogue and publication director of the women's style and fashion magazine of her namesake related experiences and observations in her talk on the making of a magazine ". . . the glitz, glamour, politics and perils of the fashion and magazine publication industries."

"Most literate people today have new values and demand quality as a necessary thing, not an incidental," Mirabella said. "This is not being snobbish, or pretentious — this is being a smart, savvy consumer."

Speaking at Memorial Hall, Mirabella talked of how fashion design has become less about clothes and more about showy theatrics.

"There is something pompous about this world we've been locked into of fashion and fashion theater," she said. "The fashion world has become not about what you wear, but how you present it. The runway shows are huge events, and the designer is the movie star."

Wearing a dressy plaid pant suit, Mirabella addressed the women at the lecture and the role of feminism in fashion.

"The fashion world is lagging behind you and where you're at," she said. "The most important thing in fashion is women — how they live, who they are, and how they change. Someone has got to start learning about you."

Mirabella, who graduated with an economics major from Skidmore College, recollected her termination at Vogue after being editor in chief for 17 years, and how she was given the opportunity in 1989 to produce a women's magazine that was more than just a "trendy compendium of glossy ads."

She spoke of Mirabella magazine as a "niche" publication, catering to the higher standards and demands of the intelligent reader of the 90s.

"We treat the reader as our equal," she said. "We do not talk down to them, we do not think of them as a semi-aware group that won't notice the ridiculousness of certain trends."

She spoke of the traditional role of the press in the fashion sphere as providing factual recounts, as opposed to a critical analyses.

"Fashion press does not have the sophisticated role that, say, theater critics do," she said. "Typically, they say if the skirts are long, if the skirts are short but not if the skirts are good."

But she asserted that Mirabella takes a stand on fashion trends.

"If it's not good, we're going to tell you that it's not good," she said. "We don't just automatically endorse all those funny visions coming down the runway."

The lecture was the last in a retail lecture series called "A View From the Top: Women as CEOs in Retailing and Related Industries" sponsored by the Department of Consumer Studies and Marshall's clothing store.

Gulf veterans told not to give blood due to illness

By PETE YOST
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon yesterday said the half a million Persian Gulf War veterans and other visitors to the region should refrain from giving blood because 22 servicemen were infected with a potentially fatal disease.

The disease is a parasite known as Leishmania and is spread by bites from sandflies. It is cured through intravenous drug treatment.

The nation's largest association of blood banks also called for a ban on the donations from Persian Gulf War veterans and other visitors to the region.

Fifteen of the 22 infected servicemen have skin lesions, the Pentagon said in a statement. Seven have mild illness, some with fever and diarrhea. None of the cases is life threatening, the Pentagon added.

The Pentagon wants "all people who have traveled to the Gulf area" since Aug. 1, 1990 to "temporarily refrain from donating blood," said the statement.

Dr. Joel Solomon, chief executive officer of the American Association of Blood Banks, said there have been no documented cases of transfusions transmitting the parasite, known as Leishmania tropica. But "we are instructing our blood centers to take a set of prescribed measures based on the information that we have at this time," he said.

"These are precautionary measures due to a theoretical risk to blood safety and the absence of commercially available screening test," Solomon said. "We believe that the actual risk of contamination in the civilian blood supply, however, is extremely low."

Members meeting in Baltimore for the association's 44th annual meeting decided on the ban Monday night.

erated by GEO to fight rising tuition and fees to undergraduates.

"[GEO] took advantage of our energy in 1989," Chambers said. "If we start to focus our energy on Whitmore, maybe they'll finally get off their butts and help us."

Chambers addressed what he called "three big lies" the administration has put forth about budget cuts. The "lies," according to Chambers, are that it was necessary for the administration to raise tuition and fees $5,000 over the last four years, that undergraduates are too apathetic to fight the cuts and that the fight against budget cuts "begins in Boston."

Chambers said administrators at the University must begin to exert more pressure on the Commonwealth for a rollback of tuition and fees because "while legislators don't listen to students, they do listen to administrators."

Polly Cherau, a senior plant and soil science major, said undergraduate activism is necessary to secure a positive future for higher education in Massachusetts.

"It pays to be active — I'm asking you to do what you can in support of undergraduate education and supporting GEO," Cherau said. "If we're silent, Governor Weld may be able to implement his privatization scheme for higher education."

GEO member Jim Delle, a doctoral student in the anthropology department, said undergraduates can play an important role in giving legitimacy to GEO's grievances against the administration.

"We want people to know that we're not an isolated, radical group," Delle said. "We certainly hope undergraduates won't act in the best interests of the administration."

of people unsure of which Democrat gives the party the best shot to unseat Bush jumped to 61 percent. Kerrey was picked by 10 percent, followed by Tsongas, 9 percent; Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin, 8 percent; former California Gov. Jerry Brown, 6 percent; Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, 5 percent; and Virginia Gov. Douglas Wilder, 1 percent.

When asked which declared Democrat they would vote for now, Tsongas, from nearby Lowell, Mass., was backed by 16 percent, while Kerrey received 13 percent. Harkin was third with 8 percent, followed by Brown, 7 percent; Clinton, 5 percent; and Wilder, 2 percent. Forty-nine percent were unsure.

When the primary season opened, Clinton, Harkin and Kerrey were held to be the candidates to beat.

With Cuomo in the race, the numbers change. The poll found 30 percent of those surveyed would back Cuomo, followed by 10 percent for Tsongas and 9 percent for Kerrey. Harkin was next with 6 percent, then Brown, 5 percent; Clinton, 4 percent; and Wilder, 2 percent. Thirty-four percent were undecided.

The results were similar to a poll done last month by a Massachusetts firm. That survey, which didn't ask about Cuomo, gave Tsongas a 24 percent to 19 percent edge over Kerrey. Harkin came in third with 12 percent, and other candidates were in single digits. That poll also had a margin of error of 5 percentage points.

Analysts said Tsongas' strong showing was due to his strategy of entering the race first, making many trips to New Hampshire and focusing on rank-and-file Democrats rather than party leaders.

The latest poll was commissioned by WMUR-TV in Manchester and was conducted by the University of New Hampshire. The telephone numbers selected for the survey came from a complete list of published numbers in New Hampshire.

Hillel

"It's like any other dorm, only it has a smaller community, which I like," he said. "There is a nice mix of religious and non-religious here."

If there are any conflicts or issues of any nature, Perlmutter said, they can be brought up in community meetings or to the House Committee, which is made up of students, staff, and laypeople.

In 1990-91, Hillel moved its office into the first floor, and started running its programs through the house. This gave Hillel House the additional function of serving the UMass community in general. According to Perlmutter, it is a considerable function.

"Our average weekly attendance to programs and services is several hundred per week, although that number is a little high due to people repeating," he said. "We function in a number of ways: socially, culturally, educationally, politically, and religiously. I would say we do much more social, political, educational and cultural things than we do religious."

Perlmutter stressed that Hillel does not have a specific agenda and is open to a variety of ideas.

"We have a very diverse community," he said. "What we do depends on the students who want to be involved."

As for students who are interested in living in Hillel House next semester, Perlmutter said that now is the time to make the arrangements.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

When statistics become reality: dealing with a divorce

As you pass the tower library and feel the cold wind pierce the skin on your face, as the first snow falls making huge unavoidable puddles, the familiar feeling of everyone's favorite time of the year begins to drift throughout the air.

The holidays — a time for families to come together to give thanks for what they have and to make lists of what they still want. There are some people fortunate enough to celebrate two Thanksgivings and two Christmas'. They do this not because they enjoy the holidays so much but because they have become a victim to a statistic. You know the one that states that over half the marriages today end in divorce. The one that says in the last 20 years the rate of divorce has almost tripled. I'm sure neither of these statistics are unfamiliar to anyone, especially to the families they represent.

Although so many people I know have parents who are divorced, it always seemed so distant from me. Like a fatal disease I would never contract or a winning Megabucks ticket I would never possess, divorce was something I would hear, read, and see, but never experience.

This year like every year my family will gather together for Thanksgiving and Christmas. We will laugh as we talk about old times, when we all used to dance in the family room to the Jesus Christ Superstar soundtrack. We will talk about each other and what we want to buy and what we don't want to do. We will talk about almost everything. Everything except the bright new shiny sign displaying the two words For Sale, which by the start of the new year will be mounted on the front lawn. We won't talk about the papers my parents will sign due to the loss of the crucial element within their marriage. No, we won't talk about the love between my mother and father that, after 26 years, has died, making my family and my parents, a victim to the statistics.

Manejah Morad

How, after 26 years, could it just be over? How could my parents not even try to work it out? I know many people whose parents are divorced, but never after being together this long. I was angry because I could not understand how my parents could be so childish and want to just throw away a good thing. But although in my mind my parents' marriage might still have been a good thing, to my parents it was no longer good. In fact, it was miserable.

After finally realizing this I began to put my own selfishness aside by ending the hopes I had for maintaining the existence of my perfect family. I understood that although my parents' marriage would make me happy, it would make my parents just the opposite.

I think it is terrible that so many people stay with a marriage just because it's convenient and cheaper, since the price for a divorce settlement is a small $5,000 dollars. Marriage should not be a convenience, love should not be a convenience. If neither partner is happy it is better to end it then to drag each other and the ones who care down further. It's more important now for each to get on with their lives and to try to find happiness elsewhere.

Marriage seems like such a difficult thing. To live day in and day out with the same person, with the same qualities, attitudes, and behaviors, seems very trying for anyone. With all these things it seems hard to always remember to keep the love alive, so hard it seems almost a challenge.

Divorce is a part of life more and more people have to face. I feel it is an act of courage to end something you have worked at for over half a lifetime. Although divorce is a sad thing one can't look at it as an end but rather a beginning. A beginning of not a better but a new life, for although the past relationship has turned cold, devouring the love, nothing can devour or replace the memories this couple has built around them.

Harassment violates women

A recent article in The New York Times described some of the reactions experienced by women who have been victims of sexual harassment. These reactions can include depression, anger, anxiety, feelings of helplessness, feelings of guilt and responsibility for the harassment, crying spells, eating disorders, insomnia and gastrointestinal problems. Sound familiar? They are very similar to the syndrome experienced by victims of rape and other forms of sexual assault.

Lisa Lipshires

This tells me that sexual harassment is a very damaging kind of behavior and, when we talk about it, we should treat it with the seriousness the topic deserves. It also tells me that sexual harassment is the same type of behavior as rape and, even when the harassment may not involve any physical touching at all, the victim experiences this behavior as a sexual violation.

I have personally experienced a lot of this non-touch kind of violation. I was raised in a household where other people's leering remarks, sexual innuendos and inappropriate conduct were an ongoing part of my daily life. Both of my parents participated in this type of behavior and, after their divorce when I was ten, a number of my mother's friends treated me in the same inappropriate way. Some of these so-called friends of the family sexually abused me in more direct physical ways as well.

I'm 35 now, but when I was in my late teens and early twenties, I could no more have defended myself from sexual harassment than sprouted wings to fly. This doesn't mean people in their late teens or early twenties are incapable of defending themselves nor does it mean that being a certain age makes you invulnerable to sexual harassment or assault. What it does mean is that, for many women, especially the one in three, or one in two, of us who have experienced some form of sexual abuse before the age of eighteen, we are already so conditioned by the experience of the violation that our abilities to see, recognize and speak up against sexual harassment have been severely compromised.

When I was 23, an assistant minister at a church I was attending made inappropriate remarks to me when we were alone, telling me I was "physically as well spiritually beautiful," and that one time when he and his wife went on a day trip they "ended up screwing in the front seat" of their car. I was angered and repulsed by his behavior, but my anger and repulsion felt split off from me and far away. To survive the daily experience of a sexually unsafe household, I had learned to distance myself from my feelings. I had also learned the unfortunate lesson that no one I turned to would help me, and that no one would ever validate my perception that something was terribly wrong. Small wonder, then, that as a young adult I was incapable of defending myself.

Nowadays, asserting myself is still a struggle but I have learned to recognize inappropriate behavior and to seek help when I need it. I know there are people who can and will help me when I need validation and support. There are my friends, there are people with whom I've shared a therapy group, and there are also the Counselor Advocates at the Everywoman's Center hotline. If you have ever experienced sexual harassment or any other type of sexual violence, I strongly urge you to seek help and support. None of us should have to go through the aftermath of violation alone.

Student extends condolences

Upon entering my dorm after the Veteran's Day weekend I was shocked to read a posted sign regarding a student death. Although I did not know the student personally, I was saddened to learn of his suicide.

It is natural to assume that suicidal acts can be prevented. However, this is not always the case. Often, people contemplating suicide conceal their emotions to prevent any discovery of their intentions. They may appear "down," but not unusually depressed. In some instances there may be no warning signs whatsoever.

As we mourn our classmate's death we should focus our attention on the ones he left behind. Suicide leaves family, friends and other close ones feeling guilty, ashamed and grief-stricken. It is important to realize that no human is omniscient or omnipotent. Ultimately this man's death may not have been preventable.

I wish to express my sympathy and support to his family, roommate, friends and resident staff. The University's Mental Health Services and Residential Staff are valuable resources for coping with this tragedy.

Voting more powerful than rallies

In last Friday's Collegian, our esteemed pontificator Greg Sukiennik asked the question, "Why do you think the legislature wouldn't talk to us [about funding higher education]?" The answer is, Mr. Sukiennik, that they don't have to deal with our grievances when they can afford to ignore the problem. What is needed to solve the crisis is not the idealized demagoguery of the sixties radical. We see no viable solution arising from the whining and senseless chanting of aspirant activists. Contrary to popular belief in the Happy Valley, a single "day of action" will not change the world.

Do you routinely see thousands of elderly marching on the Massachusetts State House for senior citizens' benefits? Does the legislature ignore them? Of course not. Their chants take the form of a march to the ballot box. How many of those students knew who their state rep was? How many are even registered voters? The Grey Panthers are listened to because they vote, and UMass students are shunned because they don't. The question is not whether Beacon Hill should listen to us, it is whether or not we wish to be heard.

Politicians are rational maximizers, so students have to be as well. No one else will look out for our interests so we must learn to do it for ourselves. One politician that will support us for four years is worth more than a thousand students chanting for a day.

The continued survival of higher education is a complex issue. Whether the solution is more state funding or closer ties with the private sector, an obvious starting point may very well be the ballot box.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Attention, to all those crazy enough to read the Campus Center basement notes usually written by Marc Elliott (who last week finally admitted to the redundancy of his name) — this week's installment will be written by Debra (no redundancy) Kriegsman, a lovely woman who has so kindly agreed to do Marc's job.

Hello all and welcome to my version of the Campus Center notes. I'd like to say that I am thrilled to be doing this (not really) and hope that anyone who enjoys this version of Notes will write to the Collegian and tell them that you prefer me, Debra Kriegsman, over Marc Elliott for this column.

I'd like to begin by telling everyone about my trip home to New Jersey. I went back home to Paradise last week for a number of reasons. First, the bris of my baby cousin Brett Jonathon. He's a beautiful boy who handled it well, only crying and screaming as he went through the traditional Jewish ceremony that occurs eight days after birth. Let's just say that Brett is a real man now.

On a lighter note, there was the wedding of Kristin and John. I attended the ceremony on Saturday at the local church. It was the first time I had been in a church since nursery school (I along with four other Jewish kids went to the nursery school in the church in the next town over) and I must say that I didn't realize just how different the Roman Catholic ceremony was from the Jewish one. Here's to broken glass!

But now I am back from home, only to be welcomed by a slush storm which had only one good reason for falling, and that is the thanks from postpeople in the area who were thankful that it fell on a national holiday.

Debra Kriegsman

Oh then there's the GEO strike, I don't know enough about that so read everyone else's columns.

There will be no Graffiti of the Week this week, but I will share a nice thought with you all — I am graduating in December. Gifts can be forwarded to the Collegian. I'd like all articles sent to be green (my favorite color) and of course checks in the denomination of $18 or more will gladly be accepted.

I love the music of Barry Manilow and so does associate news editor Jason George. I ask that all fans of Barry announce their love of the songwriter. Sing it. Scream it. It's cathartic.

There's an Israel fair today in the Campus Center. Go, run, dance your way down there.

For those of you who are into tacky X-mas decorations they are now officially being hung in all malls, stores and Collegian offices. Don't forget your cameras.

For all Mets fans — they rule!

Marc, here's a mid-article message. My name is spelled K-R-I-E-G-S-M-A-N. That's I before E except after C. And I want to get credit for my contributions to last week's Notes.

Hi Felice!

For those who have noticed, my favorite punctuation mark is the exclamation point(!)!

Hannukah is coming up. Don't forget to light your manorahs and send me some gelt.

Before I finish this article I'd like to say thanx to a few people who have supported me through this. Greg — you've given me a voice and a column. You are awesome. Marc — you are lazy, but kind for giving me this opportunity to make a difference. Let's have a drink sometime. [editor's note from Marc: I wish I could but the fascists are going to make me wait until April.]

This is it, so enjoy, because there's no refund with this column.

Roomful is tasty but a tad stale

By KLAUS GAUGER

Roomful of Blues
Pearl Street Night Club
Friday, Nov. 8

The downstairs of Pearl Street night club was more crowded than usual last Saturday night, with a markedly older crowd awaiting the appearance of Roomful of Blues, the widely acclaimed rhythm and blues band with over twenty years of professional experience.

From the very first moment, Roomful of Blues proved that their reputation was well earned. Their music was swinging, pulsating, and emanated from the members of a living and powerful rhythm and blues organism. The main eye-catcher, as well as audio attraction, was the frontline horn section, which gave full blasting melodic riffs and rhythmical support. Listening to them, one must have caught a glimpse of what the trumpets of Jericho must have been like. Each of the players was a fully perceptible, mature musical personality, and a good soloist as well.

First tenor saxophonist Greg Piccolo has to be mentioned; his long, pushing and frantic solos, which were full of honking, grunting and hollering sounds were reminiscent of King Curtis. A fine performance was also given by baritone player Doug James, whose sound was extremely rich and virile. Bob Enos gave some freakish high note solos, demonstrating his command of the upper register. No less impressive was Carl Querfurth on trombone, with his huge, rasping tone, and Rich Lataille's sweet, swinging alto.

The rhythm group was more understated, with drummer John Rossi providing the band with a propelling beat, and Larry Pedruzzi's steady and sturdy bass play. Junior Brantley's boogie-woogie style piano was not always clearly audible, perhaps due to sound problems. Guitarist Chris Vachan was excellent, his highlight being a long, evolving solo in a B.B. King style.

Lead singer Sugar Ray complimented the character of the band. His full-toned voice, and extroverted growling tone helped to assert himself against the pushing horn section, which lent an attentive ear, providing musical passages full of vibrant moments of tension.

The technical and emotional abilities of the band are excellent, but the problem lies in the bands self-concept. There are no new and fresh elements, no contemporary hard rock or rap influences, not even an ironic or sarcastic arrangement. The performance consisted of the typical rhythm and blues set, rock and blues based tunes without any differing musical concepts.

In some ways, these musicians were reviving their own, now old-fashioned music, for a partly older crowd, without assimilating new musical experiences and directions, and without daring to do something which the audience could have disliked.

Artist library offers services

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Tucked away on the sixth floor of Goodell is an obscure but valuable resource available to people interested in information on anything and everything arts related. It's the Arts Extension Service's Artist Business Library.

With a direct grant from the UMass Arts Council the AES Library recently updated many of its materials. It publishes small booklets entitled "Keys to the Arts." The booklets are arranged into sections titled General, Dance, Literature, Media Arts, Music, Theatre, and Visual Arts.

These "keys" are a starting place which list major arts organizations or publications "arts people" need to know about.

AES also publishes eight of its own titles to support its workshops. The Artist in Business: Basic Business Practice is a straightforward, easy to read book that even those with the greatest fear of budgeting could comprehend.

The AES is an especially good place to look for career information in the visual and performing arts and arts management fields. It has over 600 reference books, many periodicals and directories. AES houses three national periodicals listing job opportunities for graduating students. One specializes primarily in teaching positions available throughout the nation.

The library has its own card catalog, AES Resource Files which have samples and basic information on such topics as contracts, rental agreements, internships, taxes, etc, and information files that include a wide variety of articles, worksheets and resources collected by the AES staff for use in their workshops.

According to systems coordinator, Brenda Coda, most of the materials are for arts students "ready to embark on their careers. We also have resource materials. It's never too soon to think of what direction you want to go in after graduation."

"We do our best to ensure we do not have materials that could be found in other departments. Budgets are tight so we are trying not to duplicate," said Ms. Coda. Some of these materials are either self published or produced by small publishers and thus are difficult to come by.

"AES is a national arts service organization facilitating the continuing education of artists, arts organizations, and community leaders. AES works for better access to the arts and integration of the arts in communities," states their press release.

The AES Library is located in 604 Goodell at the University of Massachusetts. It's open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and it's FREE!! If you're overwhelmed by the bookcase of information, there is a friendly staff available to help you if you have any questions.

De La Soul just fizzled

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

De La Soul* with *The Coalition
Pearl Street Nightclub
Sunday, Nov 10

Live, De La Soul are light years away from what they put on their records. That sounds good on paper — I thought they'd spruce up their material to make it more interesting. But I don't know if that was good, it back fired in fact. Somehow it got lost in their dick-grabbin' egos and their foul mouths (something that is virtually absent on their albums). The acoustics in Pearl Street didn't give their mixers much to work with which meant that unless you listened carefully, you couldn't decipher between one song from the next.

The Coalition saved the evening. These guys from Hampshire College stormed the stage lookin' to get busy. Sadly, few payed attention to them, let alone particularly cared for them because a) they were unknowns, b) they weren't as full of it as was their host band, and c) they seemed to display some sense of original talent. I liked them for their def beats, and I would most certainly award them the recognition they deserve. In my opinion they've transcended having mere potential.

But back to De La Soul, the main thing that was wrong with them was their lack of commitment to the image they supposedly represent. Furthermore, on vinyl they have a basic respect for women. It seemed as if they struggled to break away from the male sexist rap stereotype. That was soothing for my ears because sisters are always getting dissed, and finally someone came along who didn't play that.

On stage they did just the opposite. Getting everyone in the audience to say "Fuck You!" to each other, and making fun of gays by playing out the "sissy thang" was the procession of the evening. The audience ate it up. But there were some of us who weren't buying it, we may have been dancing to it, but we tried as hard as we could to ignore the context of their altered lyrics and 2 Live Crew-like heinous attitude. We left asking ourselves what the hell was that?

There's nothing wrong with having fun on stage (especially if you're touring and constantly repeating the same set over and over), and by no means am I implying they should be serious. Although they strayed so far away from their albums, and in such an irritating and negative way, that I have to admit: De La Soul isn't dead, De La Soul just kinda' sucked.

New Pixies — a UMass Gen Ed

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

"In the sleepy west of the wooded east/ Is a valley full of Pioneer/ We are not just kids to say the least/ We got ideas to us that's dear.

Like capitalist, like communist, like lots of things you hear about/ them redneckers they get us pissed, the stupid stuff it makes us shout/ The University of Massachusetts please!!! It's educational!!"

No, not a new recruiting slogan to bring fresh virgin minds to the intellectual womb of Amherst. But a raunchy, guitar screaming orgy of sound which marks Tromp Le Monde as their heaviest since Surfa Rosa.

Trompe Le Monde, the fifth of the Pixies' albums starts off with the first few notes reminiscent of Led Zeppelin's Physical Graffiti and then without warning, feedback and guitars scream like dinosaurs in orgasm. With thunderous drums and entwined bass the band sleeks behind the thrashing guitar chords of Joey Santiago. Santiago and Francis blend the past expose of the Velvet Underground with a heavy Latin rhythm which has traditionally lifted the Pixies from their punk peers. The band has enjoyed tremendous success in Europe and even in Canada where they enjoy mainstream radio play.

For Pixies fans this could truly be the pinnacle of the band's album career. On no other album do the Pixies combine their style of cutting edge energy with the soft supple sounds of liquid music which drowns the senses in euphoria. One such is the last track on the disk the Navajo Know.

"The Navajo know upon construction there is the Mohawk/ his way of walking/ quit high above the ground/ fearless of looking down/ Some people say that/ The Navajo know/ a way of walking/ quit high above the ground/ fearless of looking down/ oh know"

And for all of the armageddon lovers there is the electric crunch of the Sad Punk "I smell smoke that comes from a gun/ named extinction"

Or if that is too upbeat quite possibly the mad ramblings of Subacultu or Distance Equals Rate times Time, "I had a vision / there wasn't any television/ I got to think quick says blind saint Nick/ We got to get some beer/ we got no atmosphere"

The Pixies have been billed as a Boston band. Black Francis the songwriter behind the Pixies rage grew up in Westport, Ma. and then geeked it and failed out of UMass.

Since those early days of the mid-80s, the Pixies songs, sound, and lyrics have drawn from the well of knowledge UMass attempted to offer. From the visual mountains which Francis softly sings of to the sarcasm and crunch a la Happy Valley sound — they grind. They may not be ready for the sensitive ears of the mainstream culture, and the world may not be ready for them, but somehow it just doesn't seem to matter.

Multicultural Affairs

Students, cultural centers rap Whitmore

During the past three weeks the University of Massachusetts has, again, become the just and proper target of numerous allegations by the Latino and Asian communities as well as the New World Theater.

These are based solely on the intransigence, irresponsibility and the abuse that the present administration here at UMass represents. Together and united, students of color are exposing the Umass' " Multicultural Facade." We are making a statement that we shall no longer accept or tolerate the University's racist behavior and shall unveil its hypocritical claim of multiculturalism!

Elliot Monteverde Torres

Throughout the years this University has failed to adhere to a concrete process of action — which gives emphasis and points to a genuine commitment to the solution of the numerous aggravating issues plaguing the entire minority community upon this campus.

To this date, the people of color in this movement have had to resort to, once again, drastic measures with the HOPE that the administration begins to diligently address our issues promptly and properly. Hence, both of our centers, the Latino and the Asian Cultural Centers are to remain permanently CLOSED until TRUE solutions to these issues are found and applied!

The Cultural Centers were and remain to be subordinate to the actual and realistic needs of our communities here at UMass. There is but one unmistakable fallacy behind this institution's web of intrigue, one intentionally structured to confuse not just the people of color here at UMass, but the entire student community, as well. Such fallacies are called Cultural Centers. The concept of a cultural center resulted from a cosmetic attempt by the RACIST administration of this institution to not only manipulate the general public but to appease the "insolent students of color" who in 1987 dared to advocate for OUR rights eventually, deciding to take over a building.

The administration's attempts almost succeeded. It is important to bring to your attention that the University did not follow any of the significant recommendations that would have considerably ameliorated the social and educational situation here at UMass. In consequence, not only does racism remain inherent in the American society today but an academic, social and administrative trait here at the University of Massachusetts!

The University must come to terms with this issue of racism and prejudice is more than BLACK. Let's not allow anyone to close their minds to the reality that this problem of absolute negligence on the part of the administration involves many groups — Native Americans, Asians, Latinos, Africans, etc. which reflect upon the overall socio-economic conditions in the United States — moreover the University of Massachusetts can not be divorced from the realities of the Puerto Ricans or any of the under-represented ethnic groups.

The overall objective of this movement is not at all unreasonable. We truly want to help this institution become a GENUINE multicultural bastion!

In a letter which Chancellor Richard O'Brien sent to the faculty and staff of this university on Oct. 21, 1991, he reiterated that the administration's objective "is not to return to some hypothetical golden age of the past. We need to have a university community that is properly paid, MULTICULTURAL, and decently housed. Then we can play our role as flagship of the new University of Massachusetts and can provide top quality teaching, research, and service to the Commonwealth and the nation." Keep in mind that Latinos are the largest growing group in the United States of America.

Under ideal circumstances, minority students need and want both a cultural center and an academic support center. However, under the current situation in which the University has given minority students token support, we are sacrificing our cultural centers in order to solidify the resource base of the United Asia Learning Resource Center and the BCP as well as the entire minority community here at UMass.

United Asian and Latino students state demands, deadline for O'Brien

Latino & Asian Cultural Centers and New World Theatre Demands from Chancellor Richard O'Brien and the University Administration

Immediate Demands:

I. That the funding for the United Asia Cultural Center henceforth shall be allocated instead to the United Asia Resource Center, including any future across-the-board increase in funding of University cultural centers.

II. That the funding for the Latin American Cultural Center henceforth shall be allocated instead to the Bilingual Collegiate Program in a special account, including any future across-the-board increase in funding of University cultural centers.

III. That the Learning Resource Center shall be funded to the minimum requirements necessary: specially, funding for one full time secretary, one full time assistant director and three full time counselors.

IV. That funding also be made available for four computers, a laser printer and a photocopier for the UALRC.

V. That immediate repairs be conducted in the existing dilapidated BCP facilities in Wilder Hall.

VI. That BCP's past crucial positions which had been obliterated in spite of their essentiality to the success of the entire Latino/a community (i.e. academic counselors).

VII. That BCP's Outreach Position be reactivated.

VIII. That the Chancellor's Office and the administration give adequate line funding to the New World Theater.

IX. That New World Theater be allocated functional facilities including equipment.

Any such funding must not be diverted from existing multicultural programs of any kind and that there be separate independent budgets for Asians and Latina/os. The Chancellor and the administration shall respond to these demands with a set of practical proposals by no later than December 7, 1991.

Long-Range Demands:

I. Allocation of Skinner Hall as the future Latina/o Asian Resource Building to accommodate the invaluable work of the BCP, related Latina/o programs, the UALRC, and related Asian programs.

II. A study be conducted of Salary Equity at the University.

III. Restructuring of the core curriculum to emphasize genuine issues of multicultural concern.

IV. Re-evaluate existing "cultural diversity" programs to incorporate and critically examine traditional European American culture and to eliminate those courses which denigrate and objectify non-European peoples.

V. Development of a racial harassment policy with legal implications for students, staff, faculty, administration and especially, the UMass police department.

VI. Aggressive recruitment in the following order of priority: Asian and Latino/a faculty, administrators and students. That special attention be given to recruitment of these students from Massachusetts inner cities such as Holyoke, Springfield, Lowell, Worcester, Brockton, Lawrence, Cambridge and Boston.

VII. Introduction of an academic program in Asian and Asian American Studies.

VIII. Introduction of an academic program in Latin American and Puerto Rican Studies.

The Chancellor and the administration shall respond to these demands with a set of practical proposals by no later than February 15, 1992.

Festival features films by renowned Indian artist

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

"Someday I'll make a great film!" remarked an Indian film director to a friend in 1948. Less than a decade later, his first film bagged the San Francisco Film Festival Best Director and Best Film awards, and his second film swept the Golden Lion of St. Mark's award at the Venice Film festival.

The director is Satyajit Ray, and seven of his films are being screened as part of a film festival in his honor, "The Satyajit Ray Film Retrospective," at Hampshire College. Sponsored by the International Student Organization at Hampshire College, the films are free and open to the public.

Fittingly enough, the festival began this past Monday with his first film, Pather Panchali (Song of the Little Road), made in 1955. It is a poignant human document about a struggling family in rural Bengal, with a memorable soundtrack by Ravi Shankar.

The movie was preceded by a brief tribute to Ray's genius and his contribution to the world of cinema, by Anita Desai, professor of English at Mount Holyoke College. The second film in the festival, Simabaddha (Company Limited), made in 1971, was screened yesterday at Hampshire College.

Ray has made a total of 21 films in his career, all of which have won him international acclaim. Each of these are incisive ethnographies and scathing critiques of the society he lives in.

One of the organizers of the festival, Sandeep Ray, a film and anthropology senior at Hampshire College, said that Satyajit Ray's candid yet brilliant depiction of life in various parts of India has come under a lot of criticism by members of the Indian community who accuse him of "washing dirty linen in public."

"But Ray's movies make you visually confront the most basic yet universal aspects of human nature," Sandeep said. "His films are also in stark contrast to the vulgarity characterizing the majority of the Indian film industry's products, especially the Hindi movies made in Bombay."

"I invite everyone in the Five College Area to witness the works of this genius," said Sandeep.

The schedule for the rest of the festival is as follows:

Wed., Nov. 13, 8pm: Mahanagar (The Big City) 1963. A scathing critique of social conventions in Bengali society. Hampshire College Franklin Patterson Main Lecture Hall. Free.

Thu., Nov. 14, 8pm: Devi (The Goddess) 1960. Nikky Singh, professor of religion at Colby College, will address issues raised by the film. Hampshire Franklin Patterson. Free.

Sat., Nov. 16, 8pm: Apur Sansar (The World of Apu) 1959. The third film of the famous Apu trilogy, dealing with issues of urbanization, marriage, and death. Hampshire Franklin Patterson. Free.

Sun., Nov. 17, 8pm: Ghare Baire (The Home and the World) 1984. Based on the novel by Nobel Laureate Rabindranath Thakur. Hampshire Adele Simmons Hall. Free.

Mon., Nov. 18, 8pm: Pratiwandi (The Adversary) 1970. Filmed during the politically turbulent Naxalite revolutionary era. Hampshire Adele Simmons Hall. Free.

New releases will supress your cable skepticism

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Attention all students who think that no new releases are being shown on HSCN this semester: Thou art wrong. This week, many recent movies that are still hot from the box office, such as "Godfather III," "The Five Heartbeats," "Fabulous Baker Boys," and "Sibling Rivalry" are gracing your screens. Keep an eye out for these hits beginning Wednesday, Nov. 13.

Boyz N The Hood — Ice Cube, Cuba Gooding, Jr., Morris Chestnut, Larry Fishburne. A touching, down to earth film about a father-son relationship as it endures time as well as negative and positive outside influences. It addresses tastefully the issues of AIDS, drugs, and street violence. A top choice movie.*

Chinatown — Jack Nicholson, Faye Dunaway, John Huston. Nicholson is a private eye who is led into a complex case by Dunaway. A mixed-up and bizarre mystery, not up to Nicholson's usual genius but a good film nonetheless. **

The Chosen — Maximillian Schell, Rod Steiger, Robby Benson. Based on the novel by Chaim Potok, the movie eloquently and truthfully describes life in the Hasidic neighborhood. Benson, although I do usually despise his character personalities, is excellent in the role of a young Hasid who is yearning to break tradition so that he can be a lawyer. First rate. ****

Die Hard II — Bruce Willis, Bonnie Bedelia, William Atherton. Willis is back again, but this time the scene is set in Washington's Dulles Airport. Willis is thrown into a terrorist-type plot that is just as sticky as the first film. Tons O' Action! ***

Freaky Friday — Barbara Harris, Jodie Foster, John Astin. This delightful Disney farce stars young Foster as a tomboy who accidentally switches bodies with her ultra-conservative suburban mother. This movie set the scene for many unsuccessful copies, such as re-make Vice Versa and Like Father, Like Son. ***

Godfather III — Al Pacino, Andy Garcia, Talia Shire. Not up to par, even remotely, of the first two films. You can tell that it was rushed to make sure that it made the deadline to be considered for an Oscar. Still, it's somewhat enjoyable, if not confusing. Worth watching, but I wouldn't tape it. **

The Graduate — Anne Bancroft, Dustin Hoffman, Katherine Ross. This is Hoffman's first main role—he is a young, naive college grad who is seduced by the wily charms of an older woman, but he ends up falling in love with her daughter. Won Best Director, and the score by Simon and Garfunkel is fantastic. ****

Prom Night — Leslie Nielsen, Jamie Lee Curtis, Casey Stevens. Ahh, another lovely slice-and-dice! A killer who is responsible for murdering a young girl six years earlier is now terrorizing a bunch of teens. Ho hum, sound terribly typical? It is, but a couple of scenes will make you jump. *1/2

Streets of Gold — Klaus Maria Brandauer, Adrian Pasdar, Wesley Snipes. Along the lines of Rocky, a former Russian boxing champ who is now a dishwasher in Brooklyn trains a couple of street punks for the U.S. Boxing Team with the hopes that he will defeat his former coach. Not enough oomph—I still like Rocky better. **

A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon — River Phoenix, Ann Magnuson, Meredith Salenger. Phoenix is a high school know-it-all who is preparing for a big social crash as all of his friends are leaving for college. The film has some moments, but overall, it just doesn't click. Phoenix and Salenger are an annoying couple. *

Wall Street — Michael Douglas, Charlie Sheen, Daryl Hannah. As usual, director Oliver Stone is the first to offer a great film on corruption and deceit on Wall Street. Sheen is insightful, and Douglas is incredible (Best Actor). 1/2

The Untouchables — Kevin Costner, Sean Connery, Charles Martin Smith. Based on the long-running TV series, Eliot Ness seeks to destroy the corrupt career of Al Capone. ****

The Princess Bride — Cary Elwes, Mandy Patinkin, Chris Sarandon. A storybook fantasy comes to life in the mind of young Fred Savage, whose grandfather (Peter Falk) reads him the story of swashbucklers, murderers, heroes, and lovers. A fantastic movie, chock-full of stars. 1/2

Steel Magnolias — Sally Field, Dolly Parton, Shirley MacLaine. Intense tearjerker mixed with comedy about a group of women who gossip weekly at a Southern beauty parlor run by Parton. ***

Movies not reviewed but are on HSCN this week are: The Five Heartbeats, Long Walk Home, Marrying Man, Sibling Rivalry, Oscar, and The Fabulous Baker Boys.

"Sure, going to classes is cool. The occasional weekend party, a really groovy concert or just hanging around the pond and feeding the ducks. All those things are great, and I'm having a great time at UMass. But the thing that really floats my boat – the absolute coolest thing I can imagine – is working for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. Honest."

Water Polo disappoints at Eastern Tourney

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — For the third time in as many years, the University of Massachusetts water polo team lost its first game of the Eastern Championships, destroying any chance of receiving an NCAA playoff berth.

After splitting the remaining two games of the weekend the team's end of season record is 16-8.

Slippery Rock beat Navy 7-5 to win the title, and both teams will go to California over Thanksgiving weekend for the NCAA Tournament.

In 1989 it was a 15-4 loss to Arkansas-Little Rock. Last year it was a 12-10 overtime loss to Harvard. This past Saturday morning it was another Ivy League school, Princeton, who sank the Minutemen, winning 8-6 in a game that wasn't as close as the score indicates.

The first half of the opening quarter led those in attendance at Brown University's Smith Swimming Center to expect a high-scoring barn-burner. Princeton's Chad Elliot scored only fifty seconds into the contest. However, UMass' Tsan Engin floated a shot over Tigers' goalie Cameron Wu only fifteen seconds later, evening the score at 1-1.

Twenty seconds after the UMass goal, Princeton's Tom Richie scored on a man-up situation. A minute later UMass' Dan McOsker surprised Wu by taking a long shot and he connected. Richie then scored on a rebound shot, and with 3:49 left in the first another floater by Engin knotted the score, 3-3.

Strangely enough, Engin's second goal was the last UMass would score until 3:50 remaining in the fourth quarter. One second shy of exactly three periods of scoreless play.

The second quarter saw Elliot and Brian Kouri score to pad the Princeton lead to 5-3 while the Minutemen's offense seemed anxious and stagnant, and the defense was lapsing. Their best scoring opportunities of the period came when Wu made a fine save on a Luke Harlan blast, and when a Pat Lau shot whistled off the top bar.

Neither team scored in the third, but the chances were there for UMass as Harlan and Scott Deluca each hit posts with shots. Goalie Todd Larson did his best to keep his team in it, coming up with two saves and an aggressive steal on a man-down situation.

For such a big game the Minutemen were noticeably flat, a problem that has plagued them all season. Only :30 into the fourth quarter Princeton's Jim Killinger's goal created a three-goal gap. UMass' Larson made a spectacular save on the next defensive session, but the offense couldn't capitalize, turning the ball over on three consecutive trips down the pool. This was due, in part, to Princeton's tough defense on the UMass hole players.

With 3:50 left, Javier Gonzalez connected on a penalty shot, to make it 6-4, and the Minutemen picked it up a bit. However, their enthusiasm was doused when Killinger scored with 2:41 left, and Elliot picked up his third goal of the game on a penalty shot at the 2:04 mark.

Still the Minutemen wouldn't quit, as McOsker's second goal of the game with 1:16 left and Harlan's goal with :40 gave the team thoughts of a miraculous comeback. A save by Wu and a Jay Peluso shot off the post ended those thoughts.

Princeton converted all five of their man-up opportunities, while UMass missed all three of theirs.

After the game the team sat on the deck with blank stares of disbelief. Larson, who had seven saves and is one of four seniors on the team, summed up the faces by saying, "I'm really hurting."

The loss was made tougher by the knowledge that UMass beat the Tigers 9-7 in the second round of the Eastern Tournament a month ago.

"It's disappointing," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth. "The team coming in [Princeton] knows that they have to win and that's the only game they focus on. Whereas we know we've beaten them, supposedly can beat them, and there's just that natural tendency [to overlook an opponent]. No matter how much we talked about it I knew they weren't focused enough. The coach can only do so much. It's got to come from the team and obviously the intention wasn't there. I think they felt the pressure too."

The Eastern Championship is a strange tournament, as it isn't a single elimination format. Teams that lose in the first round know their season is basically over, but they must play two more games. Saturday afternoon, UMass, ranked fourth in the tournament and 16th nationally, faced Washington & Lee, the tournament's eighth and lowest seed.

UMass lost in triple, sudden-death overtime, 14-13. Engin scored three times, Gonzalez twice, and Harlan added two. Larson made 13 saves. Again, one of the keys to the game was man-ups, as UMass gave the Generals eight chances, and they converted five. The Minutemen were three for three.

"I think the kids just didn't want to be there," Yarworth said. "That was basically it. I'm surprised it was as close as that. It's a phenomenon that happens every year at the Easterns. After you lose the first round game, teams say, 'What the hell are we playing this out for?' I didn't even want to coach."

Sunday morning's game was against old friend Iona, and it turned out to be another overtime affair. Engin's second goal of the game, with only :40 left in the second extra session, brought UMass a well-deserved 11-10 win. Harlan led the way with three goals, and Deluca and Gonzalez added two apiece. Larson had nine saves, splitting time with Todd Hourihan's two saves.

"They're glad they won," said Yarworth. "They actually played some great polo, then we started to choke once we realized we had a chance to win. At least you go out in your last game with a win.

You can't judge your whole season on one game [Princeton]."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will err by putting your mate on a pedestal. See loved one in a more realistic light and you will both be happier. You can still expect great things of each other!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Although morning hours may be trying, things take a turn for the better later today. You are fascinated by a good friend's actions. A personal goal moves within reach. Be persistent. Avoid staring directly into bright lights.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid distractions by isolating yourself at place of employment. Consider plans for a new project but also get caught up on your other work. Be alert to malfunctions if operating machinery.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may have to force the issue to get things moving at your place of employment. Others are apt to be wrapped up in their own thoughts. You cannot succeed without their cooperation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Financial improvements will result from your taking the initiative now. Family tensions lessen if everyone will give a little. To improve romance, examine the relationship patterns that create stress.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Tackle only simple tasks today. Your social plans could change abruptly. Trust your judgement where a financial matter is concerned. Brooding over a lost love is taboo.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Pay closer attention to detail. A farfetched idea must be reconciled with the cold facts. A sudden decision could leave you flabbergasted. A budget revision restores domestic harmony.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasize finding a private solution to a financial problem. Consider all options. Obstacles can be overcome if you remain calm. Eliminate the word "impossible" from your vocabulary.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your personal goals seem easier to attain now. Romance is a source of delight. Friends play a major role in your happiness. Tact is your strongest weapon in smoothing over any family differences.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A creative project could interfere with certain family plans. Work out a fair compromise to restore domestic tranquility. The mail brings exciting news you have been waiting to hear.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Diplomacy is essential for happy romance. Make peace with your mate before concentrating on personal pursuits. Exert yourself when it comes to improving your community.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You can now express yourself more effectively. A positive approach produces fantastic results! Some worthwhile changes enhance a domestic relationship. Move ahead with greater confidence.

Long may Magic run

This week's space was going to be a tongue and cheek commentary on Wilt Chamberlain's claim that he has slept with 20,000 women.

There were going to be cutesy remarks about Wilt's "versatility," and snide remarks about the real reason they called him "Stilt," but then came last Thursday afternoon, then came The Announcement and everything else seemed trivial.

David Scott

Walking into the newsroom at about five on Thursday, I was approached by the sports editor.

"Get this," he began solemnly. "Magic Johnson has the HIV virus and is retiring. Can you believe it?"

Like everyone, I thought it was just a sick joke at first. I checked the wire story. It was true, I sat in disbelief and the only words which came out were, "No [expletive] way."

As a society we've become accustomed to surprises. A drive-by shooting here, an abduction there, it's all part of our daily routine. Coffee in the morning, a sandwich for lunch and morbid news at night, no big deal, just life.

But this was different, this was Earvin "Magic" Johnson. This was the guy we've watched battle with Larry Bird for over a decade. This was the guy who made the passes on the fast break which no one else could make. Magic? AIDS? Come on, now.

Sports figures don't get terminal diseases. Sports figures are immune to this sort of thing, aren't they? Magic is a hero, a modern day hero, and now he's out of basketball forever.

I'll admit my reasons for sadness were selfish ones. Although I thought of Magic, his family and their future, I thought more of the basketball wizardry which we'll all be deprived of when watching the Lakers.

There'll be no more Bird vs. Magic classic battles, where Bird would come down and swish a three only to have Magic return with a baby hook off the backboard.

There'll be no more Michael vs. Magic duels, the new king meets the old king, a match-up which was NBC's wet dream during last year's NBA Finals.

Goodbye to the trademark Magic smile on the court, the smile which said, "I love this." The same smile Magic flashed even at his retirement press conference.

I watched Magic as he faced the nation to explain his situation. Then I saw the highlights of his rap session with Arsenio Hall. The guy was a rock. No tears, no pleas for sympathy, just Magic saying his life will go on.

Without a doubt, this is the biggest sports story of my lifetime and it's not just the fact we will never see one of Magic's no-look passes on the break. No, it's much more serious and it's much more immediate; it shows we're all vulnerable.

It makes no difference whether it's a college kid with a few tequila shots in him or one of the greatest basketball players ever, AIDS discriminates against no one.

Now, as a reminder and more importantly a lesson, we're going to watch the slow deterioration of this man who thrilled us for years as he and Bird put the NBA at the forefront of professional sports. Magic will have an impact in the fight against AIDS, much the way he impacted professional basketball.

The question remains, why Magic? If Magic had torn cartilage in his knee, we may have been able to accept this. If Magic had destroyed his ankle, this would have been easier to take. But AIDS? Magic? Why?

Now AIDS will be in the national spotlight for a while and Magic will end up on a political commission. There will be calls for AIDS testing in all of professional sports.

Magic doesn't want us to mourn for him, which is understandable. From the way he's talking, he'd rather have us become more educated.

If he runs an information campaign the way he ran the fast break, we'll all be better educated.

Long may you run, Magic.

Magic isn't just his nickname

MAGIC (maj'-ik) n. the feigned art of influencing the nature of future events by occult means; sorcery; charm.

No wonder they call him "Magic." He fits the description perfectly. Whether by defying gravity, up, up, soaring to the hoop or speaking to the media, his charm is light, effortless.

Felice Cohen

Fans are not just in awe of Magic because he defies gravity on the court, they are also entranced by his charm. Watching him face the media, he is as cool as a cucumber, as he proved once again at last week's press conference. There is no one smoother than Magic (and I am not talking about his treks down the court).

This past week, Magic Johnson gave up his magic and turned in his winged-sneakers, and sadly, his real magic becomes merely illusion. This week we grew up suddenly. Everything we once thought was magic has somewhere, down the line, suddenly been pulled from beneath our feet. The Tooth Fairy, Santa Claus, George Bush, and now unmagic-ed Earvin Johnson. Once larger than life, Earvin has just proven he is very much, only too much, human. Only too much like us.

We all have idols. People who sit on towering thrones, untouchable to you and me. We see them as larger-than-life-sized human beings who will continue to dazzle us forever. And we need these idols, maybe, to tell us what "perfect" should be. But something has happened just this week to alter our way of viewing super heroes. Now humanized, they are now susceptible to life.

Athletes represent the best a human body can be. Basketball players take that a step further. They fly beyond the bounds of gravity, beyond harm and the common cold. But if the best can be felled as with Magic, then we have to think, "What about the best of us?"

More importantly, we realize every human being is capable of contracting the disease AIDS. In the long run, the discovery of Magic's infection may save plenty of others from carelessly coming into contact with the HIV virus itself.

I heard this in one of my classes, from a UMass football player, which proves vulnerability: "It's getting too close to regular people." Now if that does not put things in perspective, what does?

This tragedy effects Magic, for sure, but for the millions of sports fans, to them it is a wake-up call. And what it is saying is brutally scary. Death exists. And no magic in the world can control that.

It may be hard to believe, but there may be many positive aspects stemming from Magic's disaster. Though Magic can no longer wow us, by defying nature as he leaps to the basket, his presence will continue to influence future events. Not with a basketball, but with his life.

Magic is one of the greatest hoopsters of all times. After his press conference, the media began to speak of him in the third person as if he had died.

The Magic we know and love is not dead, as he said he plans to live a long time. But just because he can no longer play in the NBA does not mean he has to stop using his magic.

The definition says that magic influences future events by way of charm. I can think of no better person to speak out for AIDS awareness then the charmster himself, Magic Johnson.

Minutemen hammer Lithuanians, 91-54

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team didn't do its share of improving positive international relations last night as it drubbed a Lithuanian club team 91-54 in an exhibition game in front of 3,215 fans at Curry Hicks Cage.

Just over two minutes into the second half, a Jim McCoy 3-pointer from the right side of the basket gave the Minutemen a 61-21 lead, the largest margin of the contest.

However, several minutes later, at 15:01, head coach John Calipari called to the bench for a "wholesale substitution" which began sloppy, free-for-all play which was characteristic for the remainder of the second half.

The five-player substitution, which featured freshmen Louis Roe, Jerome Malloy, Scott Drapeau, Mike Williams and junior Tommy Pace struggled as the Lithuanians pulled within 28 with 8:34 to play in the game.

However, UMass' experienced players soon came to the rescue, led by McCoy, Harper Williams and William Herndon, as the Minutemen eventually pulled ahead without much of a threat.

"The young kids are just not ready to play together at one time," Calipari said of the newcomers. "They were all confused. Instead of playing, they're out there thinking."

Herndon (9 points) said, "We definitely have to improve on our bench. When we [the starters] go out, they have to pick up where we left off. They have to keep up the intensity and can't have lapses like they did tonight."

Calipari said he wasn't too pleased with the level of competition, scheduled by the Atlantic 10, and would have preferred possibly another team, but he did state that the team gained something from the exhibition.

"I learned that we better have at least three, even two veterans on the floor at all times," he said. "If we have that we should be okay."

The Minutemen held the lead from the opening tip when just seconds into the game, one of two William Herndon alley-oop slam dunks on the night was fed to him by point guard Anton Brown (9 assists).

At the onset, UMass displayed a suffocating pressure defense which began the Lithuanian's demise. The Lithuanians looked both disorganized and slow.

"If I let this game continue with just seven or eight of our guys, we may have won by 80," Calipari said.

However, the starting five still need some fine-tuning, according to Calipari.

"Even though this game is a win, you still want them to continue playing with intensity," Calipari said.

Harper Williams, who had a team-leading 11 rebounds, said, "We have to come and play every minute of every game. We aren't finishing up. We're getting too relaxed."

GAME NOTES: Freshmen Louis Roe and Mike Williams played last night, even though both haven't practiced for a week due to minor injuries. Roe has an ankle injury and Williams injured his knee.

— Tomorrow is the first day of the early-signing period for high school recruits to commit to a National Letter of Intent. UMass is hopeful Donta Bright, a 6-foot-6 forward from Dunbar, MD High School and Dana Dingle will sign.

— Student tickets for the midnight men's basketball game with Siena on Nov. 14 can be picked up between 7 a.m. and 3 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 14 in the lobby of Curry Hicks Cage.

Women's hoop loses opener

Lithuanians romp in exhibition game, 85-42

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team started the pre-season on a sour note yesterday, losing to the touring Lithuanian women's team by a score of 85-42.

The Minutewomen were in the game at halftime, thanks to a buzzer-beating three-pointer by Shawna Pemberton to cut Lithuania's lead to 37-26. But, that was as close as they would get.

The potent fast-break of the Lithuanians was on fire in the second half, and UMass didn't have the equipment to extinguish it. Aneta Kausaite of Lithuania and UMass' Trish Hessel traded baskets to open the second half, but the internationals turned a 39-28 lead into a 53-28 blowout.

The back breaker for UMass occured at 16:28. Lithuania had just converted for two points when they stole the ball back from UMass, passed the ball around their back, and gained their own rebound on a missed shot.

That athletic display put the game at 46-28 in favor of Lithuania, and they would run off seven more points before UMass gave in and took time out.

UMass coach Joanie O'Brien was happy with her team's play in the first half, but. . .

"In the second half, we let them get going, we stopped pressure on the ball, and other little things that let them get going. . . they're a good basketball team," she said.

UMass had some bright spots, though. Juniors Kim Kristofik and Jenny Moran each hit double figures in points, Kristofik with 10 and Moran with 14.

In addition, Pemberton, a sophomore, scored seven points in only 12 minutes of play. She also pulled down five rebounds.

The Minutewomen could not keep up with the Lithuanians, however. Their conditioning was obviously better, as the whole Lithuanian team stayed on the court and practiced while UMass went to the locker room at halftime.

The Lithuanians were also very strong and physical. O'Brien said that they intimidated her team.

"Our kids let it get to them. They started bumping and grinding with them and we let it bother us," she said.

In the first half, UMass came out strong. They got on the board when Kristofik hit her first shot to put the Minutewomen ahead 2-0. Kristofik then traded baskets with Jovita Tutelyte to keep the Minutewomen ahead. The Minutewomen last led at 10-8.

Kalensinskaite nailed a three pointer to give Lithuania their first lead, at 13-10, and they ran from there. Their crisp passes on the break provided them easy baskets for a 33-16 lead.

But the Minutewomen fought back. They shaved the lead down to 37-23, and took possesion with time for one more play. Pemberton took the loose ball off a blocked shot, and heaved a desperation 20 footer as the horn sounded.

Women's swimming faces Boston University

By LILLIAN K. LEGGIO

When the University of Massachusetts and the Boston University women's swim teams face each other in a dual meet today at Boyden Pool at 7 p.m., they will both be seeking to rebound from tough losses last week.

UMass (1-1), captured first place in four events last Tuesday against the University of Vermont, but lost the meet by the score of 172.5-127.5.

"It was a tough loss because we swam extremely well," said UMass coach Bob Newcomb.

BU (0-1) lost a much closer meet to James Madison University 168-164 which saw two freshmen, Sheryl Cotter and Sarah Lawson, win the 1,000 and 500 freestyle events respectively. Lauren Curtis, school record holder in the individual medley, also won her IM event.

"We have some exceptional new players that should make us even better than last year," said BU coach Reigh Whetmore.

If the BU Terriers are better than last year when they posted a 6-3 record and clinched the North Atlantic Championship, UMass may be in trouble.

"We were very successful last year at 8-4 and we wanted to upgrade our scheduled by adding more challenging meets such as this one with BU," Newcomb said.

According to Newcomb, he is not sure what to expect from his young UMass team that has 20 freshman/sophomore divers and swimmers and has been plagued by injuries.

"We might be underdogs, but we still have a realistic shot at beating them," Newcomb said.

Grads vote to strike today

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Months of negotiations have failed to avert a strike by members of the Graduate Employee Organization which overwhelmingly voted last night to reject the University of Massachusetts administration's latest contract offer and begin a strike today.

Graduate employees participating in the strike will walk out of classes for an indefinite amount of time and will encourage faculty and the undergraduate community to respect picket lines, said GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs.

Almost 600 graduate employees attended the two and a half hour membership meeting. The union represents approximately 6,000 graduate students including over 2,000 teaching and research assistants, interns and fellows.

"We are on strike because we've not been able to reach our demands through the normal negotiation process," said Isaacs at the press conference in the Fine Arts Center. "The membership is convinced the administration is trying to break this union.

"I'm afraid our goal is to decimate this University as we know it. We're trying to to cut up this University so the administration is forced to recognize our value," Isaacs said. TAs at the University play a critical role in assisting professors in 60 percent of undergraduate classes, she said.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien last night expressed disappointment over the decision by GEO to strike after 10 months of negotiations.

"I think we have gone as far as we can on making an offer," O'Brien said. "I think we've made a very fair offer."

He also said the organization "promised" to not strike in January. "I'm afraid they've broken their word," O'Brien said.

Isaacs estimates that 80 percent of teaching assistants will participate in the strike. Students will picket at all major teaching sites on campus from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m daily until their demands our met, she said.

"We'll be picketing and striking until a settlement is reached," Isaacs said. Administration officials contacted last night said no new dates for further negotiations have been set.

Union members will receive a stipend of $100 a week after a striking graduate employee has not received pay for 5 days because of GEO's affiliation with the United Auto Workers.

Isaacs said both sides have agreed on GEO's demand of proportionate cuts to TAs and binding arbitration — an outside, unbiased mediator to solve future contract conflicts. No agreement has been reached on health fees or agency fee, which is a weekly fee for non-members unwilling to pay GEO membership dues.

GEO leaders Emily Isaacs and Peter Underdown at press conference last night.

Chief negotiator for the administration, Susan Pearson, said the strike will cripple the education of the undergraduate population at the University.

"I hope we can minimize the damage to undergraduate education," she said. Pearson also said the University has no plans at this time to deal with the strike.

"We are still talking about how to deal with a strike," she said.

At the press conference, Isaacs said the issue of agency fee has evolved into a legal battle with the administration, which does not officially recognize GEO/District 65/United Auto Workers as a union. Graduate students last year voted to have the union recognize them in bargaining sessions with the administration.

Undergrads seem to favor Grad strike

Undergraduates on campus appear generally supportive of a possible graduate employee strike, though unsure of its effectiveness.

"We have not had very many successful strikes [at the University]," said senior general business finance major Michele Morgano. She and many other students are not optimistic about the outcome of a teaching assistant strike.

Morgano said a strike could be successful if students asked parents "to put pressure on the University."

She also pointed to the power of teachers assistants in that "they teach so many undergraduate courses" as a way the strike could succeed.

"I think the strike will result in a lot of chaos," said

Cambodian ruler returns

Prince Sihanouk back from exile

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — One of modern history's greatest political survivors—Prince Norodom Sihanouk—returns from exile to his war-shattered homeland Thursday faced with perhaps the most difficult task of his stranger-than-fiction life.

For half a century, the prince has captured center stage in Cambodia: as king, independence hero, head of state, guerilla chief and international diplomat par excellence.

Now he returns to the fairytale Royal Palace where as a 19-year-old he was enthroned by French colonials who thought he would prove a playboy puppet whose strings they could easily pull.

From his regained seat of power, the 69-year-old prince must try to still fierce hatred among the country's four opposing factions and attract enough international good will and hard cash to rebuild a land bled dry by two decades of conflict.

Analysts say Sihanouk's role as head of an interim Supreme National Council will be pivotal in the next 18 months as U.N. peacekeepers attempt to disarm more than 150,000 soldiers and the country strives for democratic elections.

"He is probably the only Cambodian universally respected, universally recognized as the only Cambodian who can bring this nation together," Charles H. Twinning, the new U.S. envoy in Phnom Penh, said in an interview.

To Sihanouk's advantage are a charismatic personality, widespread domestic popularity and finely honed skills which awed even seasoned diplomats as they watched him cajole, badger and outmaneuver during the tortuous negotiations of recent years.

Perhaps his strongest card is solid backing from the international community, including the United States, China and Soviet Union. These and other nations brokered the peace accord signed last month that seeks to end Cambodia's 13-year civil war and allowed Sihanouk's return.

He not only wrested independence from the French in 1953 but ran Cambodia as a private fiefdom, first as king and after 1955 as the political head of a one-party state.

The anti-Sihanoukists, encouraged by the United States, staged a coup in 1970, sparking a brutal, five-year war between communist-led rebels and the U.S. -backed government of Gen. Lon Nol.

From his exile in Beijing, Sihanouk served as the nominal head of a resistance front dominated by the Khmer Rouge. Many in Cambodia sided with the Khmer Rouge because of their loyalty to Sihanouk, who in the eyes of some historians thus shares responsibility for the destruction of his country.

Maki Mandela discusses women in South Africa

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

Makaziwe (Maki) Mandela, the eldest daughter of African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, spoke in Johnson Chapel of Amherst College last night, addressing the issue of the role of the overworked South African woman versus her lack of economic prosperity.

Mandela travelled throughout depressed parts of South Africa, particularly "homelands", and other rural areas, collecting stories, and various other data, from the perspective of the role of the Modern day South African woman, her struggles, and the obstacles she faces.

A political activist and social worker herself, Mandela studied at the University of Forthare, a university exclusively for Blacks, and at the University of Natal, where she earned an honors degree in Sociology, particularly focusing on Black South African women in the labour market. She has spent the months of December through July in her native country doing research.

She began her lecture by describing attitudes of men towards women. "I know a friend who works very hard, and all of her wages go directly to her husband. And she receives an allowance. And it is he who decides what is cooked. It is he who decides who of her friends she can invite."

"Married women are identified by their way of dress." It was then suggested by Mandela that the suppression of women begins with the traditions and customs of the initial tribe. "I made the mistake of visiting a friend, [whose Aunt], asked if I was married. I told her that I was married but did not wear the traditional head dress. She replied that it was women like me who contributed the the downfall of the other women [in our culture]."

Afterwards, she explained that there is still a conformity, even though the difficulties, as a wife and a mother in South Africa, are exceptionally demanding. "For an average woman the day might start at 5 a.m., and ends at 10 p.m. Obligation to the household chores and to the children is stressed."

Women who aren't married are subject to extra harsh conditions, as well as are forced into a position where there is a competition for a male companion, or a husband, especially if there is a desire to climb up the socio-economic ladder. "If men move to a more urban area, they usually live in hostels where they rent a bed in a room full of other non-relatives and other people they don't know. When the women come to see their boyfriends, or husbands, one can see that the relationship is affected."

Fox network to air condom commercials

By DEBORAH HASTINGS
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Fox Broadcasting Co. will become the first — and so far, only — TV network in the nation to accept condom commercials.

Fox spokesman Andi Sporkin said that paid advertising will be preventing the spread of AIDS. References to contraception will not be accepted, he said.

The network did not say when the advertisements will begin.

ABC, CBS, and NBC do not accept condom advertising.

CBS spokeswoman Susan Tick said Tuesday the network is reviewing its policy. NBC executives will discuss the issue with affiliate stations during their annual board meeting in December, spokeswoman Pat Schultz said.

ABC "has no intention of changing its policy," said spokeswoman Janice Gretemeyer.

Network stations are allowed to make their own decisions about condom ads, but network spokesmen said they did not know how many actually ran such commercials.

Public service announcements that advocate safe-sex practices such as condom use are offered by the networks, but the decision of whether to air them is left up to individual stations.

The Fox announcement came less than a week after Los Angeles Lakers star Magic Johnson stunned the nation by disclosing he was infected with the AIDS virus.

"I guess I would be siding with graduate students," Rothman said.

"I might support it, but it does not mean I will be involved in it," he added.

Former Director of the University of Massachusetts Labor Relations and Research Center Harvey Friedman said a graduate employee strike could make a profound difference.

"Anything that knocks out 25 percent of TAs would be effective," he said. "It will be interesting."

Friedman cited several possible administration tactics in the event of a strike.

"I do not know if they will do it, but they could ask faculty to teach more classes," he said. Friedman also mentioned "doubling up" classes or hiring new TAs as alternatives, although he was unsure the latter could be accomplished at this late date in the semester.

"I guess [teaching assistants] have a lot of power. . . . professors rely on them," said junior HRTA major Alexia Manin. "I think they should go on strike, it means I will have a multiple guess test instead of a short answer test."

Bryon Morrison, an undeclared junior, is another undergraduate in support of the strike but had doubts as to the undergraduates' role.

"As far as undergraduates are concerned, I do not think there will be much effect," Morrison said. He said younger students would be glad to see an opportunity not to go to class while the older ones would be upset about the break in their schedules.

Still, Morrison was optimistic about the impact of a strike. "Anything that forces the issue into the public eye is a good thing," he said.

Afro-Am panel voices disgust with Thomas

By MARTIN JONES
Collegian Correspondent

A panel of nine African-American faculty members held a discussion last night voicing their position on the Clarence Thomas confirmation hearings.

All of the panelists were united in their opposition against the confirmation of Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Professor John Bracey used his presentation to define what Black conservativism is and is not.

He cited Booker T. Washington, a famous Black Activist who founded a number of Black institutions, as a "true Black conservative" who's ideologies were dedicated to "self-help of the community versus the individual."

According to Bracey, Clarence Thomas, whose conservative views have often been compared to Washington's, is not a Black conservative, but rather "an individualistic opportunist" whose goals lie in furthering his own career with little regard for the rest of the Black community.

Professor Bill Strickland described the Thomas confirmation as a political manuever by the Republican Party to further secure their right-wing influence on the nations highest court.

In addition, according to Strickland, it fit into the present strategy of the Republican Party to attain 25 percent of the Black Vote.

When asked of the implications of Thomas' confirmation being defeated, Strickland replied, "It would have increased the capacity for people to believe that they can make a difference in our society."

The discussion was held in Bartlett Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

The panelists included: Ernest Allen Jr., John Bracey Jr., William Strickland, and Esther Terry from the W.E.B DuBois department of Afro-American Studies, Joy James and Vicki Crawford from the women's studies department, John Higginson from the history department, and John Wideman from the English department.

Also present was E. Francis White from the Hampshire College history department.

Each of the faculty members gave a five to eight minute presentation on their view of the confirmation hearings.

Their presentations touched upon a variety of issues surrounding the Thomas confirmation.

Rumor of gang rape circulates

No report of Worcester DC rape received, say police

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

A rumor that a woman was gang-raped by four men behind Worcester Dining Commons Friday evening during dinner hours is circulating amongst Van Meter and Butterfield residence staff and residents, sources said.

University Police said yesterday that they have not received any report of the alleged incident. Lt. Michael Grabiec urged students with any information to contact them.

An unidentified Van Meter residence assistant sent a "broadcast" phone message to the 18 resident assistants within her cluster informing them that she had heard about the alleged gangrape, according to reports.

The source of her information — another Central RA — said she "heard [the rumor] in passing" on Monday and had not intended to spread the rumor further.

Also, a sign reporting the alleged incident was posted by an unknown party on the second floor in Van Meter some time late Wednesday or early Thursday morning. The sign did not name individuals involved or give any details other than the location and the time of the rape.

The RA living on the floor she posted a sign next to it asking residents with any information to talk to her or call the police.

Deb Levy, the program coordinator for the Counselor Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center, which operates a rape crisis hotline, could not confirm or deny the incident due to her agency's complete confidentiality policy.

Levy said people need to be aware that "sexual assault is a reality on this campus" and most sexual assaults are not reported to official sources.

A 1989 campus survey on acquaintance rape showed that 60 percent of those who are sexually assaulted only tell friends, 5 percent use the hotline, and 3 percent file a police report, she said.

Army College panel looks at military future

By JENNIFER D. HAWKINS
Collegian Correspondent

A panel of seven representives from the U.S Army War College dicussed issues ranging from the role of the military in the "War on Drugs" to global nuclear disarmament in a presentation titled "United States Defense Policy After the Cold War" last night at the University of Massachusetts.

After a brief opening talk, the audience chose the agenda with an hour and a half question and answer period. Questions covered a wide range of topics.

The Current Affairs Panel, seven military personnel, who are also students at the War College, also addressed issues involving the military such as changing economic roles, and U.S. national security.

In response to a question from the audience, the panel affirmed the continued need for a strong defense although they stressed that it would be their goal to prevent global proliferation of armaments.

They said that during the cold war, misjudgemnts were made because of the Soviet Union's isolation and secrecy.

Colonel Walsh, chairman of the Current Affairs Panel and the director of Arms Control Studies at the College, said that the panel's purpose is to engage "in a dialogue with students, faculty, and the public on issues of national security that we all share."

Walsh stressed that the panelists were expressing their personal views and in no way represented the views of the U.S. military.

The panel visits colleges and universities throughout the United States. At the close of their tour, they will have visited about 30 colleges.

While in the five-college area, members of the panel will also be guest speaking in classes using the same format as in the forum.

The U.S. Army War College annually enrolles a class of about 200 officers who do not necessarily have to be from the Army.

Holyoke teens in trouble

Speaker: highest pregnancy rate in state

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

With present and increasing drug use, the crisis for low income people in Holyoke is increasing and worsening, said the director of Public Service and Social Change Program at Hampshire College, at yesterday's Women's Studies Brown Bag Lunch.

Ada Sanchez spoke on experiences and opportunities of college students in communities of color in Holyoke and Springfield.

Sanchez encouraged students to tie creative community problem solving into academics by "helping organize projects in low-income neighborhoods."

"Women reaching out to women really helps," she said. There are many resources and groups where students might be able to apply energy and knowledge to help. There are a plethora of opportunities for all. Some kinds of problems can seem overwhelming, but it doesn't take a lot of people to have a direct impact. It takes caring, ideas, comittment, and willpower to accomplish a great deal.

Sanchez cited statistics about being a teen-ager in Holyoke:

• Over the last five years Holyoke has had the highest percentage of teen births in the state.

• Holyoke's teen pregnancy rate is ranked second in the state.

• According to latest department of Public Health figures, 21.2 percent of all Holyoke births are to teens. The state average is 9.3 percent. At that rate, a Holyoke teenager gives birth nearly every other day.

• Holyoke agencies report that 50 percent of the pregnant and parenting teens that they serve had dropped out of school before becoming pregnant.

• Holyoke has the highest percentage in the state of children under the age of five living in poverty.

• Today teens are getting pregnant at a younger age, teens aren't getting married, and teens cannot support themselves in todays economic structure.

She also recounted some myths and realities:

• Myth: The majority of teens who are pregnant or parenting are on public assistance. Fact: Only about one third of the teens who give birth each year seek public support.

• Myth: Teen pregnancy is a greater problem among minorities. Fact: The greatest number of teen births in this country are to White teens. A recent study found that the White teen birth rate in the U.S. was double that of other industrialized countries.

• Myth: Lack of knowledge about sex and birth control together with sexual promiscuity are the prime indicators for teen parenthood. Fact: The greatest indication is poor achievement of basic educational skills and educational success.

"We all have a commitment, locally or globally to our community," she said. "There is a way to deal only if we care."

Sanchez said that "the analysis of problems are for the community to define.

"Because of attacks inherent in structure, communities have not had the opportunity of offering perspective we need to proceed," she said.

Sanchez said "international bias" and the media enforces race stereotypes.

"To be effective when helping, we need to ask how? Those from predominent culture need to be listening and asking, learning the minorities analysis and roots of problems," she said. "We need to take responsibility in a positive healing way and recognize and relearn how to handle situations in different ways."

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Cure worse than disease: the dubious wisdom behind AZT

Friday afternoon I read in the papers that Magic Johnson's doctor is intending to start the famed basketball player on the first of the only two federally approved AIDS drugs: AZT. This is a decision that I, and many other AIDS researchers, feel to be a great mistake. AZT, also known as Retrovir and Zidovudine, has been the center of a long and bitter controversy within the HIV/AIDS community ever since its approval in 1987.

To explain, AZT is an antiviral drug. It terminates the DNA chain cycle which the HIV virus needs in order to replicate itself. That may look dandy on paper, however it must first be pointed out that DNA is the basis of all life. If that chain is broken, the need to generate new cells is not met, thus suppressing the immune system further.

Another problem with AZT therapy is that it cannot distinguish between an infected and an uninfected cell. Studies show this resulting in 999 healthy cells killed in order to delete ONE HIV-infected cell. In simple English, this means that as a treatment for AIDS, AZT kills you first, AIDS second.

Out of the five people I know infected with HIV, or AIDS/ARC, who have taken, or are presently taking the drug, devastating side effects have been reported. Levels of anemia (a loss of iron in the blood) have been so bad at times that those on the drug can't walk or in some cases even dress themselves. If you're wondering why Kimberly Bergalis (infected with the AIDS virus by her dentist) has a hard time speaking or even moving her arms, it's not because AIDS is eating away her life; it's due to the full dosage of AZT and DDI (its toxic cousin) therapy that has caused her to experience this depression of iron in the blood.

Other side effects cited by these AZT recipients have been loss of sleep. Those on full dosage also complain of loss of appetite, a bloated stomach and abdominal pains. AZT residue is filtered through the liver and the pancreas and due to its high toxicity have done severe damage in the process.

Saad Hopkins

I have known one AIDS death that I personally attribute not to AIDS directly, but to the toxic side effects of AZT. When this person went off AZT, he recovered: weight gain, renewed interest in food, loss of spinal pains (it attacks the bone marrow), etc. . . However, under the insistence of his doctors, he resumed AZT at half dosage which was later believed responsible for his three bouts of pneumonia, cryptosporidiosis (a dangerous form of diarrhea), and collapsed lungs. He died, in pain, five months after AZT therapy was resumed.

There are other drugs that those with a determination to live have taken that are non-toxic. In some cases they may not have helped, but they didn't hurt. Drugs such as Acyclovir, prophylaxis against pneumonia by use of an aerosol pentamidine, and Bactrim, just to name a few. These drugs have been taken and have been keeping people alive for years.

My biggest question/complaint is why aren't doctors looking into AZT before prescribing it to their patients? My theory is that since AIDS is considered to be a "lethal disease," doctors are more concerned with keeping people alive for months, as opposed to keeping them alive long enough to benefit from a cure. That's not bad luck, that's simply poor doctoring.

And while people with AIDS who are using it are dropping like flies, AZT's manufacturers, Burroughs/Welcome, are making mega bucks, and have been the recipients of the Nobel prize for medicine, even though there is virtually no proof that AZT actually works.

If Magic Johnson takes this drug, he has little chance of surviving HIV, or AIDS should it come to that. And if we love this "hero" of ours, someone should speak up and present the evidence of the effects of AZT and propose healthier alternatives.

If I were to see a friend about to drink a cup of Draino, without a second thought I would knock it out of his hands. I would consider the same action if I saw someone about to take AZT.

AZT is poison: Draino in pill form. It is killing us! And something needs to be done about it. And if action isn't taken soon to ban this drug (as it was twenty years ago, deemed unfit for human consumption!), all of those we love who are stricken with this horrid disease will drop dead without ever having had a fighting chance.

Zowee, kids! This year, you tell mom that you want "UMass" for Christmas or Chanukah! You see, UMass, my friends, is really a board game, patented after Monopoly. We have a board — the campus, we have pieces — the students, and we have a goal. In Monopoly the goal is to end up with the most money and property. In "UMass", the goal is to graduate with the most education and the most survival skills you can take out of the University and use in your everyday life.

Felice Cohen

Before I explain the rules, let's go over all the parts and how to play.

Each of the different colored pieces are either undergrads, grad students, continuing education, or professors and faculty, which I am sure you remember as the dog, the wheelbarrow, the car and the thimble.

And who do you think is the banker? You guessed it! Whitmore. Unfortunately, in this version Whitmore does not hand out money to everyone in the beginning. Instead, all the players put (pour?) money into Whitmore. And since we are on the topic of money, I will go over all the money transactions now.

Whenever you land on any space marked "Budget Cuts" (a.k.a."Chance"), you are headed in the direction of trouble and should abort A.S.A.P. But come on, you knew the chances were that this would happen before you decided to play, and since you declined transferring when you had the chance, you must continue to play by the rules. "Transferring" has to be done before you take your first turn. Once you roll your first, the banker locks the door and you have to play until you graduate or until tuition is $25,000 a year, whichever comes first.

The next money snatcher: whenever you land on a space marked "Lab Fees" (a.k.a. "Income Tax"), you must pay immediately or else the bank confiscates your grades and, if you live on campus, your bed.

Another tax you may land on is "Health Fees"(a.k.a."Luxury Tax"). It is similar to a luxury, because we value our lives as luxuries, and if you get hurt in the middle of the game the only way you will make it to the finish line is if you still have your health. Get it? Therefore pay up or get out.

The last payment (did I mention that you pay all these before you can play? Sorry.) you are subjected to is the "Room and Board Fee" (a.k.a. "Water Works" or "Electric Company"). Here, in order to live on campus (it works the same for off-campus), you must pay this fee or else you can't jump from your parents' house (i.e. "Baltic Ave.") to your own pad, a high rise in Southwest (i.e."Park Place").

Now one of the most important parts of the game, one that without which the game would be simply impossible, are the classes you must take. Listen carefully, I'm sure you are familiar in the Monopoly version where they use dice? In this version we call them classes. Don't worry, it is just as chancy to come up with the roll of your choice in the UMass version.

Now that most of the technicalities are out of the way, I'll do the fun aspects of this version. Let's look at the four colleges surrounding UMass; Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke and Hampshire (a.k.a. the Four Railroads). Speaking to people who have already played UMass, some said they took advantage of these schools and some said they regretted not taking classes off-campus. This is the same with railroads. Some people try to buy all four, while others never buy any.

Another really fun part of UMass are all the other people who are playing with you. There are so many other activities in this game that it is like a million games in one. When you land on a space marked either "party, extra-curricular activity or close friends" (a.k.a. "Community Chest"), fun and exciting events start to happen. This is the part of the game that begins to take the shape of each individual participating. There are some ups and downs in this version (or else it would be boring).

The next aspect is unique, since it is controlled by each individual player. When you land on a space marked "Academic Probation" (a.k.a."Go Directly to Jail"), you must stay on that space until you are capable of getting out. There are no rules for getting out, you just "know" it when you're ready. But you must wait until your next roll, and if you make the right moves, you'll be able to continue, if not, it's "bye, bye UMass."

But it does not mean the game is over. In the advanced version, "ProMass" ($14.95 at the Bookstore), the game never ends. No matter where you are you will run into players. And years after you have put the pieces away, the phone will ring and someone will ask you to make a donation to UMass. "Where will the money go?" you ask. Into the construction of new buildings (a.k.a."Hotels and Houses") that keeps UMass running so that it will be around a long time so others will have the chance to play.

Yes, as you can see, UMass does have a lot of the same features as Monopoly, but of course there is one feature that the board game has UMass will never have and that is . . .what else?

Free Parking.

Incident between people of color brings the reality of racism home

UMass might indeed have the largest number of international students representing a variety of cultural diversities. Almost all these different cultures have their own groups, programs and discussions. The groups are very much aware they are the minority group and that incidents of racism still happen. However they don't talk about it and until they do, incidents like this will keep happening.

Being an Indian, I am in a minority group myself. Until now I had heard people talking about racism but I never believed it. In my perspective America was a free country where racism was no more to be found. It was not until I experienced it myself that I felt people who were under the misconception, like me, should be informed.

I work as a security receptionist, and on the day after Holloween was moved from my quiet hall in Northeast to a fiery and heated tower in Southwest. There were two receptionists but still we found it hard to control the large number of swaying people. By 12 at night the volume of the crowd had greatly decreased and we were talking when a colored man walked through the door.

I dutifully asked him for his ID to see if he lived in that dorm or not, but he just kept walking on. I followed him until the elevators, still asking for it. This time, with his hand in front of my face, he warned me, "nobody asks me for my ID."

I let him go and called security. The security supervisor was there in less than a minute. The same colored man left and then came back. This time I asked him for his ID with the supervisor by my side. He again did not pay any attention so I asked him again.

I was dumbfounded at his reply. It went, "You all [expletive] Indians are racists. Can't you make out the difference between two Blacks, you Indian [expletive]?"

I distinctly remember not signing him in and I told him that all I did was ask him for his ID. At this he came near me and pushed my face with a force strong enough to take me back about two feet. The supervisor took me back and called the cops.

What amazed me the most was that we were both from a minority group and still he did that. I normally would have assumed he would know how it feels when someone discriminates against a person because of his color or nationality.

Later that night a friend of the person who abused me came and told me why all that happened. He said that they had gone to a bar and that inside another Black man was having a fight with a White man. The manager, assuming all of them were together, ordered them to leave.

I don't know if that was true or not. But if it was, then it's insulting for us that these types of things still happen. The saddest part of all this is what happened to me is not new. Everybody knows it happens. So what do we do? Let it go on?

It is we who have to take action and until we do, nothing will change.

Being legal disappoints

Every person has a dream of what turning 21 is going to be like. On Tuesday, I finally had this opportunity. To put it quite bluntly, it was nothing that I had hoped for.

First, let me tell you about my dream, then I will utterly bore you with the reality.

Todd Kane

For the past two or three years, I have been getting kicked out of bars for being under 21. When I did get into bars without any hassles, I was so stressed out about being discovered by burly bouncers that I hid in the deepest, darkest, most anti-social part of the bar in hopes that I could drink in peace.

I swore to myself that my 21st birthday was going to be different, damn it! I saw myself gliding into my dream bar with all eyes fixed on my svelte coolness. "That's Todd, he turned 21 today, buy him beer." Before long, every person in the bar would have bought me at least one drink and I would be well on my way to severe intoxication.

Instead of becoming a blithering fool as I sink into the depths of drunkenness, I would be a hero of composure. Stairs would become places on which to show off my dexterity, conversation would be intelligent, free of stuttering and belching. People would chant my name as I shot game after game of perfect electronic darts.

Package stores would greet me with open arms. I would now look forward to having to show seven forms of ID. The beer cooler doors would swing open, showering me with cool snowflakes and arctic wind. I basked in the notion that every bottle, can, keg and beer-ball brewed from Nov. 12, 1991 on could be purchased by me.

"Beep, Beep, Beep!" Oh, there goes my alarm clock. It's time for me to tell you what really happened on this fateful day. I bought a six-pack of Killian's Red at the neighboring packy and went home to type my resume. I thought that it was slightly ironic that I was drinking my first legal beers while trying to glorify my past employment with flowery language and bovine excrement.

Instead of going out to the Dream Bar, I went to the Seven O's with my roommate. No, it wasn't what I expected but I got a free drink. Everything was fine until the jukebox started blaring Barbara Mandrell and other selections from "Hee-Haw's Greatest Hits." When my ears could stand no more, I dragged my roommate to Mike's in hopes of finding an atmosphere more suited to my fantasy.

For the first time in my life, I was able to enter Mike's without feeling like a stubborn kernel in a popcorn popper. There weren't any people in the bar! I went up to the bar and ordered a drink after my roommate had told the bartender that it was my "special" day. I took the drink and went to go sit down at a table. "Hey, that's $2.50 for the drink." My dream was lost, I was just another legal face in the crowd.

I probably should put in a little disclaimer here since I will probably want to drink in these bars in the future. The people at the Seven O's were extremely polite and sincere in their birthday wishes. I just couldn't stand the music; country is not my cup of tea. As for Mike's, I understand the need to make a buck and be completely moneyhungry, no big deal.

Well, my story is coming to a close. I waited 21 years to experience legality and now I think I was happier when I wasn't legal. It's much more fun to do something when you know you really shouldn't. But, at least now, when I get depressed, I can go drown my sorrows at the nearest bar. I'm going to the Hatch now. . .

Reasons to support GEO strike

We the undergraduates should stand up and support the graduate students in their time of need. When they strike, we all lose in the end. For many of us, the graduate students teach our discussions, hold office hours, correct our papers and tests, etc. Those classes would be suspended. If the strike lasts for a couple of weeks, we lose money and possibly even credit from those classes. We need to take a stand and do something.

The administration is stalling. They are not giving the graduate students any choice but to strike. Now it is up to us to let our voices be heard. We need to make some demands on the administration. We should demand that the administration refund us for every class that we miss. If we do not receive the credit for the class, the administration should be obligated to offer the classes for free during the winter session and the dorms should be opened up to all the students for free. If every one of us stands up and demands that the University pay us back because they have forced the graduate students on strike, they may try to end the strike in a few days instead of letting it go for a few weeks or even months.

Our involvement with this struggle between the GEO and the administration are fundamental. Their strike may delay our graduation, prevent us from fulfilling a necessary requirement or just prolong our semester. And we have to think that one day, we may all be graduate students and it is the GEO members that are trying to make our graduate studies a little easier.

Job action punishing wrong people

The looming strike by the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) at first would appear to be a classic match up between a David (the GEO) and a Goliath (the UMass administration), a situation which could only be met with red-blooded American support and cheers for the little guy (the GEO). But once you examine both sides of the issue, it becomes obvious that this GEO/administration standoff isn't such a heroic fight after all.

Suppose for a minute that the administration on this campus wanted nothing more than to stroke the GEO. Would this open up a floodgate of funds? Where are these funds going to come from? The economy is in ruin in the Northeast and the state budget is strapped. The demands of the "GEO strike bunch" are unrealistic. The method the "GEO strike bunch" has chosen to solve its problems are selfish and limited in imagination. In short they are punishing the wrong people.

One of the chief sticking points between the GEO and the administration is the issue of a health fee waiver. This fee costs the graduate students just over $1,000 dollars per year, according to one estimate. Sounds worth crying over until you realize that undergraduates pay $185.25 per semester or $370.50 per year in health fees. And those undergraduates who pay the supplemental health fee, like myself, pay a total of $510.25 per semester or $1,020.50 per year.

This may come as a shock but no one owes anyone a graduate degree. In this country you have to fight to earn a high school diploma. If you are lucky you can get into an undergraduate program and complete it. And then there is the "GEO strike bunch" — to listen to this group you would have to believe that they came to this university thinking costs would never increase and they would get rich TAing Introduction to Women's Studies.

Graduate students do a lot on this campus and I'm glad they're here. But what percentage of graduate students are actually members of the GEO, not to mention what percentage supports this strike? The "GEO strike bunch" wants change now! And if wishes were horses beggars would ride. Change takes time, and in a democratic society voting is how you change things. So my advice to the "GEO strike bunch" is to pick their rattles up off the floor and take a deep breath. Then realize you can't always get what you want.

Mixed reactions about GEO strike

The Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) voted to strike. Over the past month, news of this possibility has spread slowly across campus. Maybe you heard about it from your roommate, a friend from chemistry class, a professor or most likely a TA. The subject has popped up as a topic of conversation on and off. Whether you are happy about the possibility of getting an extended weekend or worried about getting behind in a class, you probably have some reaction to this situation.

My reaction is one of mixed emotions. I support the GEO in that the TAs here work hard for us as undergraduates. They not only grade our tests and papers, but teach our classes and run discussion sections. For some of us they are the only personal contact we have at this large and often impersonal university. Others of us depend on them for help in understanding difficult material. They are one of the many helping to maintain a standard of excellence at this university. In this respect I support the GEO fully.

However, I often wonder what it means to say I support the GEO. I find myself confused, worried and frightened about this entire issue. As an undergraduate it seems as though the GEO state of affairs rests entirely on my shoulders. If I support the GEO, am I saying I support a strike which would ultimately keep me from gaining my education? If I don't support the GEO, am I saying I willingly accept the fact that the quality of my education is declining?

Either way it seems as though I am stuck with many unanswerable questions. Will my tuition go up if the GEO gets their demands? By supporting the GEO am I claiming that I will not cross the picket line or further that I will strike with the GEO? Will I be getting any more grades in my classes than I presently have? All I am asking for is some answers, and possibly a bit of reassurance that the quality of education I am receiving at this university will not go down.

THIS WEEKEND

By TODD BOURRET
Collegian Staff

Jello Biafra, singer, songwriter, lecturer, and self-proclaimed High Priest of Harmfull Matter, will speak in the Fine Arts Center this Friday. This is his first UMass appearence since the ill-fated spoken gig at the Bluewall a few years back, when disgruntled fans decided to riot because they couldn't get into the packed room. Biafra, always the scoundrel, encouraged the angry crowd to take out as many police officers as possible in the process.

Since the late 70s, when he founded the legendary San Francisco punk band Dead Kennedys, Jello Biafra has made a career out of ruffling the feathers of establishment types. Whether through bitingly funny song lyrics or political aspirations (Biafra ran for mayor of San Francisco in 1979), Jello was singlehandedly responsible for raising the consciousness of a subculture that could've cared less about the intricacies and shortcomings of the U.S. government and politics.

When Tipper Gore and her cronies tried to silence Biafra's educated rantings by deeming the Dead Kennedys' Frankenchrist album "obscene," they got much more than they bargained for. Even after losing all of his money, his band and his record label (Alternative Tentacles went bankrupt as a result of the trial), Biafra fought the system vehemently until the case was thrown out of court.

It was around this time that Jello decided his story must be heard, so he set out on the lecture circuit. Word of mouth quickly spread and Biafra's first two albums, No More Cocoons and High Priest of Harmful Matter: Tales from the Trial helped put Alternative Tentacles back on its feet. Underground icons Henry Rollins and Lydia Lunch, among others, jumped on the lecture curcuit bandwagon and a movement of sorts began.

A speech by Jello Biafra is easily as entertaining, informative, and controversial as any DK record, if not more so. Biafra's well-enunciated and slightly lisped words are musical and wonderful to listen to. The voice alone is worth the price of admission. Expect an hour and a half tirade of Jello tinted insights on government, censorship, band names, repression and growing pot. Think of it as a hardcore show without the noise and you're halfway there.

I know what you're thinking: "The only reason Jello is speaking is that he's too old to sing." Well, when not on tour, Biafra spends his time with his brilliant industrial-thrash band Lard, and does guest vocals for D.O.A., No Means NO and Sleet Pole Bathtub. After over a decade in the music business, Jello remains a fresh and innovative talent. And if you're worried about getting crushed in a rehash of the Blue Wall episode, you'll be happy to know that the Fine Arts Center will comfortably accomodate every die-hard Jello fan around. So dig up a few bucks, get comfortable, and start off you're weekend with a little Jello. You'll be glad you did.

Noises Off turns on

By DANIEL JOKELSON
Collegian Correspondent

Next week the UMass Theatre Guild presents it's production of Noises Off, written by Michael Frayn and directed by UMass senior Joe Mulligan. The play, a smash hit in New York City in the eighties, is a purely comic look at the life of people involved in the theater business, and it has fun with all of the stereotypes we associate with show biz.

The play is about a cast and crew, all of whom have farcically exaggerated personality problem, who attempt to put on a play called Nothing On. Noises Off takes us from the dress rehearsal process, into the middle of the run of the show and then to one of the last shows, in three acts. As time passes the problems with Nothing On keep getting worse because of the relationships between everyone involved. While the actors are flopping on stage and pretending to get along as characters in Nothing On, we also see everyone in Noises Off feuding with each other back stage.

Ironically, the play they are attempting to put on is a sexual farce, and the way they conduct their personal lives becomes a sexual farce as well. There are numerous love triangles (and even a love square), and everyone misinterprets everyone else's actions — the sexual innuendos are endless. "Everything about the play is sexual and hysterical" says Brandon Whitehead, an actor who plays Tim Allgood, the exaggerated version of the stereotypical stage manager who is a nervous wreck because the show's not working, and one of the only characters not involved in a love tangle. Other characters include the director Lloyd Dallas (Cutter Garcia), a veteran theater man who hates actors, is sick of the business, but tries to save the show anyway, the assistant stage manager Poppy Norton-Taylor (Linda Newton) an idealistic, naive, pampered woman who falls in love with Lloyd (who is sleeping with someone else in the show, too), and Frederick Fellowes (Micah Hollingworth), a quiet, pacifist (he gets a nosebleed everytime someone falls down) actor who only wants to play his part

Mash, mosh, and skank with Bim Skala Bim

By ERIC POULIN
Collegian Correspondent

Looking to do some serious beat-em-up, drag-em-out, without-a-net skankin' this weekend? Look no further than Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton tonight, where the pride of Somerville, Bim Skala Bim, bring their full-force ska onslaught to burn the dance floor down.

Bim is regarded as the Boston areas finest ska act (although the Mighty Mighty Bosstones, Plate O' Shrimp and the Shy Five may beg to differ), and are great favorites in the Valley where they may have their strongest following.

For those of you who have never experienced a Bim show, the key word is "energy". When Bim hits the stage, they rip like there's no tomorrow, and even the most hearty dancers will find it difficult to keep the pace with them for the whole evening.

Their lyrics definitely stress having fun as the most important factor, but there are also political undertones present as well. With a quick listen to their first album, you'll hear "Better Get Out" and "Not A Test," two songs that deal with the omnipresent threat of nuclear war. In this regard, they take a page from Britain's two-tone kings, The Specials, by providing their listeners fun with feeling.

Lead singer Shanty Dan Vitale belts out his songs with Joe Jackson-esque feeling and heart, while Jackie Starr exudes velvety-smooth vocals to provide a perfect compliment. The man who really steals the show, however, is trombonist, Vito Incognito (formerly Vito Nobile). He can blow that long horn like it's nobody's business, and is the backbone behind the band's on-stage success.

Bim is supporting their most recent effort, How's It Goin'? (Important Records), which comes on the heels of the world-wide acclaimed Tuba City (Celluloid), and their debut, Bim Skala Bim. They've also been featured on two ska compilations, Mash It Up, a Boston ska all-star lineup, and Mashin' Up the Nation, a showcasse of ska from all over the country.

Bim Skala Bim is one of those bands that we seem to take for granted because they're such regulars on the local scene. With every show that they play, however, new legions of fans are converted into Bimmers; as the band breathes new life into a musical genre that was supposedly deceased some ten years ago. If the power that they generate on stage ever fell into the wrong hands, the atomic bomb could end up looking like small potatoes. These guys rank among the state's finest, and are big, big fun. Check it out!

Bim Skala Bim will play an 18+ show tonight at 8:30 p.m. at Pearl Street Nightclub with opening band Egypt.

Crash Test Dummies

Dummies crash the world

By ERIC POULIN
Collegian Correspondent

Quick now . . . name Winnepeg's greatest musical contribution of all time. Stumped? You should be. Before now, the only noteworthy musical landmark from the capital of Manitoba was the dude who plays organ at the Jets' home games.

All that comes to a screeching, screaming halt now, however, as the debut album from the Crash Test Dummies is one of the most impressive that I've heard in a long, long time. Entitled The Ghosts That Haunt Me, it's gripped me like no new album has in a while. I can't find any tape that seems fit to play before or after it. In a year of many excellent albums (see Billy Bragg's Don't Try This at Home, Joe Jackson's Laughter and Lust, Sting's Soul Cages, Costello's Mighty like a Rose, Waterboys '81 - '90, etc., etc.), this just might be the best.

If you haven't yet tracked down the album, you could've caught the Dummies live last night at the Iron Horse. The five-piece band is in the midst of their first-ever North American tour, during which they will open for Chris Isaac, Bonnie Raitt, and Sting. The show provided an excellent mid-week study break for all (except poor slobs who were in class, like me.)

Although their name sounds like that of a Katina's Sunday night thrash band, they certainly produce sounds that are less crunching and more polished and sophisticated. Their music is a hodgepodge of rock, folk, country, and Celtic that's thrown into a blender to produce a sound comparable to no one else. Vocalist Brad Robert's haunting, croaking voice brings it all together to give the world a fantastic jive that should dominate the alternative airwaves, at least.

The album's single is the third track, a strange, mood filled melody entitled "Superman's Song", which some people think may be the sleeper smash hit of the year. It contrasts the Man Of Steel with a much less worthy hero, Tarzan, and ultimately celebrates the heroic qualities of all people. It's an excellent little song that stays with you, and may become the latest "Wicked Game", if given the proper airplay.

What's my favorite song on the album, you ask? It's hard to say — from top to bottom, the album's lineup is almost as strong as the Washington Redskin's. "Here on Earth (I'll Have my Cake)" is a pretty wild Celtic jam with a touch of rhythm and blues mixed in. The title track seems to be the one that stands out, a folk-pop triumph, to say the least.

The most unusual and humorous tune has to be their cover of the Replacements classic, "Androgynous", Paul Westerberg's playful look at gender, from the now-legendary Let It Be album. 'Mats fans will probably either love this version, or become violently ill at the mere mention of it. I give it a strong thumb's up, but, of course, the original is supreme.

No, the album isn't perfect — the closing track, "At My Funeral" is slightly subpar and lifeless, but the Ghosts That Haunt Me comes so darn close that the Crash Test Dummies have to be considered a band to watch for in the near and distant future. Trust me, they're better than the Jets' organist, any day.

Horse hosts Benny Green Trio

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Staff

Fresh from an overseas tour and a two week engagement at New York's Village Vanguard comes the Benny Green Trio, with Chris McBride on bass violin and Carl Allen on percussion. The piano trio has been a long standing component of "jazz" music, and in many respects, is its most basic and versatile unit. Lately though, much press has been granted to the charge of the "young lions", most of whom are horn players, and the piano trio has somewhat moved to the background. Along with such notables as Geri Allen, Renee Rosnes and Mulgrew Miller, Benny Green is looking to change the common emphasis on young horn players.

Jazz Scene

"It takes time to form your own voice," says Green, "a lifetime in fact. But that's the beauty of it, and I embrace that."

Benny Green has embraced more than just the challenge of finding one's own voice. He has seen valuable playing time in the company of Betty Carter and Art Blakey, and currently heads Freddie Hubbard's rhythm section.

Mr. Green notes "With Betty [Carter], I learned the importance of accompanying, and helping out a group. With [Art] Blakey, I got a sense of individuality, of who I am. They gave me my foundation, and Freddie [Hubbard] has given me a creative challenge."

Mr. Green, while born in New York, spent his childhood on the West coast gaining a desire to play "jazz" by listening to his father play the tenor saxophone. He relocated to New York in 1982. During his time in California, the lack of major innovators there taught Mr. Green what not to become. "I didn't want to be just a big fish in a small pond".

Since moving to New York, Mr. Green has found a sense of family that didn't exist out West. "There's competition in New York, sure, but there's a sense of togetherness between the musicians. We really are family."

Mr. Green's latest release, Greens (on Blue Note) with his working trio, shows the emergence of a distinctly unique flavor. Mr. Green, along with Mr. Allen and Mr. McBride have an implicit empathy, the same kind of feeling that made the Wynton Kelly/Red Garland trios so unique. "Music is the expression of an individual human being's life. We need to remember that we are human, before musician."

His just completed stint at the Vanguard featured a "live" Blue Note recording night. "It is an honor to be part of that label's great history." He continues, "When the audience knows that they're part of the performance, that's special. I feel it's part of my job to uplift the spirit of the listener."

He harkens back to the immortal words of Art Blakey — "Music is to wash away the dust of everyday life."

Mr. Green has been doing just that. His last time in the area, last Winter, was a success. "I love the crowd at the Iron Horse, they're very enthusiastic."

This current tour marks Mr. Green's first as a leader and he expresses great confidence in his side players. "It's a democratic trio, we all decide together what we want to do, and how we're going to do it."

"Chris [McBride] is a great player. I never even think about him as being young (he is only 19) his play is so mature. He always seems to know exactly where we are, or where we should be. Carl [Allen] is a great drummer. He can lay down a groove, and really compliment what I'm trying to say in my music."

As for the music today, Mr. Green has only high hopes. "Today, the media is giving the music the most attention it's gotten since the swing era and that's great. Jazz just can't be killed. It's too strong, too positive a force."

Mr. Green and his trio are certainly that.

The Benny Green Trio will be in performance at the Iron Horse in Northampton tonight, Nov. 14, at 7 p.m. Call 584-0610 for tickets and information.

well, but ends up a pawn in a jealousy duel between two female actors.

As you can probably tell from the character's names, Noises Off is originally a British play, and the characters "relate to each other in a comic, slapstick, Monty Pythonish vaudevillian sort of way," says Whitehead. This type of humor is everywhere, from the fictional program notes to a back stage scene where an actor is pulling cactus needles out of the director's butt while another actor on stage belts his line, "Don't keep waving that thing in my face!"

But along with the hilariously punctuated point that theater=chaos is the recurring theme that "the show must go on." The excitement that comes with the chaos is what makes live theater worth seeing, and you can count on seeing that in Noises Off.

Flower Thief will blossom

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

When you get out of classes tomorrow afternoon you might want to head on over the Hatch in the Student Union for some cold brews and a captivating alternative folk act called Flower-Thief. This "girl group" features tight vocal harmonies and quirky songwriting and they consist of Jenn Gallahorn on bass and vocals, Chris Geisler on acoustic guitar and vocals, and Catherine McRae on violin. They list their influences as Husker Du and the Velvet Underground and they say their songs "try to capture the youthful spirit and honesty in awkward emotions."

Flower-Thief are all students; Chris and Catherine are seniors at Smith and Jenn goes to Hampshire. Chris and Jenn are best friends who have been hanging out together since they were twelve. Catherine is a classically trained violinist who claims she is taking a break from her music studies to "play my own music instead of that of dead guys". They did a private audition of their material a couple months back for Billy Bragg and they say he was very encouraging and supportive

These women are quite busy of late. Flower-Thief have been in the recording studio all this week working on their demo and they will open for Anastasia Screamed at the Iron Horse next Wednesday. There is no cover for the Hatch show tomorrow, and the music will start after 3:30 pm on the small stage in the bar. This ought to be a fine way to kick things off before Jello Biafra.

November 13, 1991

Dear Graduate Student Employee:

In the next few days, each of you will be asked by the Graduate Employees Organization (GEO) to participate in a strike. As you make the very personal decision about whether to do so, I thought it would be helpful to report to you on the current status of negotiations.

Following an election supervised by the American Arbitration Association, the administration and GEO signed a contract, on January 25, 1991, in which the administration granted recognition to GEO as the representative of graduate student employees and agreed to engage in good faith negotiations with GEO about a variety of employment-related issues; GEO, for its part, agreed not to strike.

Since that time, a committee of administrators which includes an associate chancellor, a vice chancellor, two deans, and a member of the Provost's staff, has been negotiating with a GEO negotiating committee, and has reached agreement on most of the issues raised. Our relationship with GEO for the past several months has been virtually indistinguishable from our relationships with the various unions which represent our other employees. In the past nine months, representatives of the administration and GEO have met weekly and have reached written agreement about some twenty matters, including appointment and reappointment criteria and procedures, workload, health and safety, layoff and recall, training and orientation, time off, job descriptions, and others.

Most recently, negotiations have been focussed on a package of six items. The two sides have reached agreement about four of those six:

1) a grievance procedure which includes final and binding arbitration by an outside party;
2) stipends;
3) a no strike provision;
4) a procedure for negotiating about the effects of any disproportionate cuts to departmental TA budgets;

Two issues remain unresolved. The first is an agency fee. GEO has proposed that we withhold from the paychecks of graduate student employees who are unwilling to pay GEO dues a comparable amount of money which we would then either turn over to GEO or deposit in a mutually agreed upon fund. Under Massachusetts law, all public employee unions are entitled to such an agency fee. However, in 1979 the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission (MLRC) ruled specifically that our graduate student employees are not covered by that law.

It is our legal counsel's unequivocal view that, given that ruling, we are prohibited by law from collecting an agency fee, and that, if we did so, unhappy graduate student employees would sue us, would win, and would be awarded substantial settlements by the courts, which would include punitive damages. There have been, counsel points out, a substantial number of court rulings on this issue, including at least one Supreme Court decision, and they all indicate that an agency fee must be explicitly authorized by statute before it can be collected. The attorney for the United Auto Workers in Detroit has argued the contrary view, that we could legally collect such a fee.

We have proposed that the question be put to the impartial, highest legal authority in the Commonwealth, the Attorney General, a process which would give the lawyers for both sides the opportunity to present their arguments, after which the Attorney General would issue an opinion. We have promised that, if the Attorney General indicates that collection of an agency fee would be legal, we would collect it.

We have further proposed that while we await the Attorney General's response we provide four options from which graduate student employees could select: payment of full membership dues to GEO, payment of a service fee to GEO, payment of an amount equivalent to the service fee to a child care or scholarship fund, or no payment.

Alternatively, of course, the legal objections could be overcome if the MLRC reversed its earlier ruling. We have assured the GEO that, should GEO petition the MLRC, the campus administration would not oppose that petition, and we have recommended that the Board of Trustees, as the legal employers of us all, not oppose it either.

The second issue still unresolved is student health fees. For the current fiscal year, GEO has proposed, and we have agreed to, a waiver of the spring semester $185 basic fee and a waiver of 21% of the $1247 annual (including summer) family plan fee. This offer will cost the campus approximately $500,000 and will require a reduction in the budget of every department of campus to fund this.

For next fiscal year, GEO has proposed that we provide a waiver of 79% of the combined basic and supplemental individual fee and 79% of the family plan fee. We have offered a full waiver next year of both the fall and the spring basic fee (a total of $370 per student) and a waiver of 42% of the annual family plan fee. In addition, we have offered a waiver of 79% of the combined basic and supplemental individual fee and 79% of the family plan fee beginning in September 1993. Our offer would mean that by September 1993 graduate student employees would be paying the same amount for health insurance as those non-student state employees who choose to join an HMO such as Kaiser Permanente. This offer will cost the campus approximately $1 million in 1992-93 and $2 million in 1993-94.

We are fully prepared to resume negotiations next week, and we remain hopeful that an agreement can be reached. If you have any questions about these matters, please feel free to call Susan Pearson at 545-6222.

Sincerely,

Richard D. O'Brien
Chancellor

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Routine matters require special attention to prevent costly mistakes. A co-worker lends a helping hand. Use your charisma to obtain the important information you need.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Do not try to force the issue when discussing a financial matter. Your co-workers are preoccupied. Tend to routine tasks that you can handle on your own. Great ideas abound tonight!

GEMINI(May 21-June 21): Buying or selling could be as easy as one, two, three now. Taking a calculated risk could pay off. This evening may not be right for entertaining at home; plans go elsewhere.

CANCER(June 22-July 22): An excellent day to perfect residential and family plans. Also, you should pour your energy into projects on the launching pad. It is not a night to drift too far from your loved ones.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Family members and higher-ups could become testy today. You are better off keeping a low profile. Your thoughts are on the future tonight. Consult mate.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A financial goal can be attained today, probably through a friend's assistance. Expanding your social circle will help speed career progress. Phone faraway friends.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Cast aside any reclusive tendencies today and mingle. It is your time to hook up with wealthy and influential people. You can reel in big money if you fish the right streams!

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A festive day, particularly in terms of family activities and home entertainment. A romantic message may herald an exciting new phase. Examine your relationship in the light of a recent discovery.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): This is a "good news" day as far as your household finances go. You can talk your way into a win-win position. Plans made on a moment's notice work out just great!

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Overconfidence in a pal could set you back. Stay calm. Getting the whole story will help you rake in new profits. Stay off the beaten track if looking for fresh inspiration.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): There could be an exciting new domestic or financial chapter to your life. Dress to impress. Your creative genius is ignited by an unexpected revelation.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): The day begins with a flourish. You are in the money and may win big dividends by reaching an accord with someone influential. A purchase you make for yourself or another is very worthwhile.

coming to UMass."

Dingle averaged 10.4 points and seven rebounds last season, his junior year, for the New York City Catholic High School Champions.

"I feel comfortable with everything at UMass," Dingle said.

Gary DeCesare, Dingle's coach, said, "I'm happy he decided to go to UMass. They have three great young coaches. They get it done and do it the right way."

The UMass coaching staff couldn't comment about Dingle because they haven't yet received the actual Letter.

UMass' Atlantic 10 rival, Rutgers, had two players sign yesterday. Waliyy Dixon, a highly touted 6-foot-3 guard from Linden, NJ and Anthony Stewart, a 6-foot-8 transfer from Lon Morris Junior College in Texas signed.

■ Bruins

the Nordiques have nowhere to go but up.

Last Saturday I saw the Canadiens blow open a 1-1 see-saw battle with Chicago by scoring three goals in five or six minutes. Remember those great Canadiens squads of old? Solid defense, a money goaltender and an offense which could seemingly score at will? Hate to tell you, but they're back.

Meanwhile, the Sabres finally solved their doughnut problems by finding a center who can fill the middle — Pat LaFontaine. The price was steep. Pierre Turgeon is no ordinary player, after all. But LaFontaine is a money player who has proven his mettle in playoff situations. In short, he's just what the doctor ordered for the Sabres, who haven't been past the first round in years.

What this means for the Bruins is they can't waltz past the division anymore, like they have the past few years. Two or three great players leading the way won't win a division title.

Of course, they'll make the playoffs anyway, so who cares?

The San Jose Sharks playoff hopes revolve around "Will our cable system carry SportsChannel?" With just 3 wins and 93 goals allowed to show for 18 regular season outings, the Sharks might as well apply for spring reservations at the country club of their choice. They couldn't win in the minor leagues. Or the Canadian junior leagues. Or the Hockey East. Or the Massachusetts High School tournament, for God's sakes. I can see the score now. . ."Boston College High School 10, Sharks 0."

Christina, our resident Washington Capitals fan, was angry at me lately for not noting the Caps were in front of the Patrick Division. Point well taken, Christina. The Caps have scored a league-leading 85 goals and are unbeaten in Patrick Division contests. They beat Montreal 4-2 Monday night. Caps forward Randy Burridge (Smart trade, Harry Sinden) is eigth in scoring in the NHL. All this from a team most "experts" thought would keel over and die while the Rangers ate up the Patrick.

Who can stop these guys? Adam Oates and Brett Hull have 20 of St. Louis' 57 goals. Maybe they're worth their salaries after all. . .

Here's another surprise. The Vancouver Canucks are 12-4-2 and lead the Smythe division by six points over second-place Los Angeles and Calgary. How long will this last? Hard to say, since I've never seen the Canucks on TV.

Hmmm, if the NHL had real television coverage maybe we'd know. Incidently, if indeed you do crave proper hockey coverage, buy a satalite dish and haul in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's Hockey Night in Canada. Molson does a lot of sponsoring for the broadcasts, so there's bound to see pro-Montreal bias any time Les Habitants are on (Molson owns the Canadiens). All the same, only ESPN's NHL coverage in 1988 ever came close. Fantastic.

A-10 Tidbits: George Washington will have a new point guard in 1992. Omo Moses, who played for the University of Pittsburgh his freshman year has transferred to GW. NCAA rules mandate that he must sit out this year before playing.

George Washington coach Mike Jarvis is happy with the acquisition of Moses, a former Cambridge Rindge & Latin star, and says "We won't mind waiting a year for him."

Jarvis is recruiting a 7-foot-2 player, who in his own words, has the potential of being as good as Hakeem Olajuwon. Jarvis would not reveal the player's name.

Temple's Mark Strickland said Eric (listed as Rick) Brunson, a Salem, Mass. High School graduate, has looked impressive in practice.

"He has a lot of potential," Strickland said. "He just has to remember he's not Mark [Macon], he's Eric."

Upon learning that UMass assistant coach John Robic was in West Virginia scouting the Lithuanians, West Virginia coach Gale Catlett said, "You're dropping three sports up there, but you've got time to scout Lithuania?"

Reflecting on last season, McCoy said, "I might have made a mistake in not redshirting. I was real sick in the beginning of the year. I didn't start peaking until the end."

Field hockey battles Northeastern in NCAAs

Massachusetts Dawn Trumbauer battles for a loose ball earlier this season. Trumbauer and her teammates will travel to Boston today to face Northeastern University in the NCAA tournament.

MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team plays its most important game of the year today against Northeastern at Parsons Field at 2 p.m. in Brookline, MA.

It's as simple as that.

In the NCAA tournament, one loss eliminates a team. So every game played for the Minutewomen here on in could be their last.

In the regular season, UMass overlooked Northeastern and the Huskies handed the Minutewomen their first loss, a 1-0 decision.

In our first game against Northeastern, we played very poorly," coach Pam Hixon said. "It came at a point in the season when we were looking towards Old Dominion."

Ironically, the winner today must try to upset the 23-0, defending national champions, Old Dominion team in Virginia on Sunday.

UMass must concentrate on Northeastern, however. The Huskies (11-8-1), like UMass, lost their conference championship game, dropping a 3-0 decision to Boston University.

Northeastern has the scoring power, mainly thanks to Kelly Wilk and Debra Sweeney. Wilk led the team in goals with 14, while Sweeney assisted on 16 goals while scoring nine herself.

In goal, Brenda Mitchell carries the Huskies. Her 1.08 goals against average is impressive, and she has seven shutouts. UMass must get its offensive act going and test Mitchell early to win.

Many of the UMass players look for revenge today against a team that tore off its armor of invincibility. The Minutewomen now have a more realistic view of Northeastern and are more aware of their capabilities.

"We lost against them, and I don't think we should have," Dawn Trumbauer affirmed. "They're a big rival, and I feel that we have the ability to beat them."

Sweeper Tracy Barclay agreed with Trumbauer, adding, "We're going to kick their butt."

Philippa Scott said, "I think we know we can beat them. The way we played against Temple was so good, if we just go out and get the job done, that's all we have to do. They are beatable."

"This year, we're excited to get in, and we're just going to keep on going," freshman Catherine Jarema said.

UMass must look for their go-to players today, especially junior Sherlan Cabralis. Cabralis was named Atlantic-10 Player of the Year for her dominating play in the midfield, and if the Minutewomen expect to win, Cabralis must play well.

"Sherlan has been the backbone of our team for three years," Hixon said. "She's literally carried us, she's been our best player. We look for her as much as possible both when we're in trouble, and when things are going well."

Although they lost, the consensus from the team was that the Temple game last week was a stepping-stone for them. The team realized how well they are capable of playing, and while they lost, 1-0, Northeastern is not as talented as Temple.

"From the Temple game, We learned how to play at that level on turf, . . . and I feel that that has prepped us for Northeastern," Hixon said.

"We really have to match our performance that we had at the Atlantic-10s," she continued. "Everyone was on target, we really played incredibly. What we have to do is go out and play the same style, and play as competitive as we played against Temple.

"We're not going to look past anybody."

Women's hoop looks ahead

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

In her first game as the University of Massachusetts women's basketball coach, Joanie O'Brien's squad lost to the Lithuanian women's national team 85-42 at The Cage on Tuesday afternoon. It's an ugly score, but not indicative of they way the Minutewomen played in the first half.

The second half is another story, but, as O'Brien said, "We'll get better. We saw some good things and that's what we're going to build on. They're a good team. I'm not sure we'll play a better one than we did tonight."

In the opening drills the Minutewomen showed good hustle and enthusiasm in their drills, but the Lituanians, with their red, yellow, and green national colors on their warmups, had a decided height advantage. At 6-foot-1 Kim Kristofik is the tallest on the UMass team, while the visitors had five women at 6-feet or taller.

"When you've got kids who 6-foot-2," O'Brien said, "and can do the things they did . . . I'd like to steal one of them and see if I could lock her in the locker room."

It was the first exhibition game and a perfect opportunity for O'Brien to showcase the speed her team will rely on this season.

"We were in kind of a match-up zone," said O'Brien, "and we've got some rules that we have to follow. First half we did it. Second half we let them get going. We started double-pressure on the ball. Little things we're supposed to be doing, little things that let them open up and get loose."

Leading scorers for the team were Jen Moran with 14 points, and Kristofik with 10. UMass shot 41 percent for 26 points in the first half, but 33 percent for the game and only 16 second half points. Lithuania shot 47 percent in the first and 50 percent for the game. They had five players in double figures, and shot seven for eleven on three pointers.

"Jenny, in the first half, did a good job for us," O'Brien said. "Kim was consistent for us. We need to get Kim to shoot the ball more. I'd just as soon have her shoot it as pass it and turn the ball over. At least with the missed shot you get a chance for an offensive rebound.

"First half, we got some good open shots. We hit some of them, and missed some of them. Once we started missing we got a little panicky and tried to do some things that, physically and mentally, we're not able to do.

"Maleeka [Valentine] did a good job. We've asked her to do things that she's just now adjusting to. We're starting to put her under the basket to try to use her quickness.

Men's hoop No. 1 in A-10

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — Before even playing a regular season game, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team is No. 1.

That's what nine head coaches and 27 members of the media who follow the Atlantic-10 regularly think, as a preseason poll was released yesterday at media day.

"That shows that the media are not experts," said UMass head coach John Calipari. "They forget we lost Rafer Giles, who won three games for us at the buzzer."

Temple is picked second, followed by West Virginia, St. Joseph's, Duquesne, George Washington, Rutgers, Rhode Island and St. Bonaventure.

UMass' Jim McCoy and Tony Barbee were each first team All-A-10 selections, while Harper Williams was a second team pick.

The Minutemen reportedly received 26 of the 36 first place votes. Five other teams earned at least one

Bright stalls, Dingle signs

By TAMIR LIPTON
and BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Donta Bright, one of the most highly touted high school basketball players in the country, has yet to sign a National Letter of Intent to attend the University of Massachusetts next year, as of yesterday, the first day of the early signing period.

However, Bright, a 6-foot-6 forward from Dunbar High School in Baltimore, MD said he is still leaning toward UMass.

"Massachusetts is still my number one school," he said yesterday. "But, I'm still considering Ohio State. Coach won't let us sign early. That's his policy."

Bright averaged 18 points and 19 rebounds per game last year, his junior season. He is listed in Dick Vitale's Basketball as the eighth best senior in the nation and is the only sophomore ever to be named Baltimore's Player of the Year.

The UMass coaching staff couldn't comment about Bright because of NCAA regulations.

Nonetheless, Dana Dingle, another top recruit from St. Raymond's High School in the Bronx, NY signed the Letter yesterday and will attend UMass next fall.

Loss of Neely hurts Bruins several ways

How much does Cam Neely mean to the Boston Bruins?

Look where the Bs are without big number 8. A win-loss record (5-7-4, 14 pts) below normal Bruin standards. Problems scoring goals (54 - every division leader has over 70). Unhappy, whining players like Chris Nilan ("Let me play! Let me play! Mommy!!!") and Bob Sweeney ("But I don't wanna go to Maine!!!").

Greg Sukiennik

Neely could fix all this. But he can't. His leg still hurts, the product of a bone-like growth in his muscles, due to a brutal cheap-shot check from Pittsburgh's Ulf Samuleson in last year's Prince of Wales title series.

Neely's contributions to the Bruins are very clear right now. Now that he can't play. How do you replace someone who can score, check, intimidate and lead a team by example?

This is where the Boston philosophy — build a team with solid, overachieving players and throw in a few great ones to lead the way — goes awry. What happens when those greats are gone and the solid overachievers are left behind? An off year.

What's worse, the rest of the "Admas Family" has steadily improved. Montreal has the best record in hockey, Buffalo dealt for a bona-fide superstar, the Whalers are like a bad cold that won't go away and

O'Brien calls off negotiations

STROLLING, STRUTTING, STRIKING — Angry strikers follow close behind Chancellor O'Brien near the Robsham Memorial Visitor's Center yesterday.

Says GEO broke no-strike agreement

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Richard O'Brien announced yesterday in a press conference that the administration will not continue negotiating with the Graduate Employee Organization, maintaining that GEO has broken a no-strike agreement. He said the University may begin to withhold salaries from striking graduate employees.

As hundreds of shouting Graduate Employee Organization members pressed against the doors of the Robsham Visitor's Center, O'Brien called the strike "premature" since both sides are close to agreement but said, "The ball is in their court."

"See related story on page 3"

After O'Brien ended the press conference, he was escorted to a police car as hundreds of GEO supporters shouted, "O'Brien, you're lying, you're not really trying!" Some demonstrators banged on the unmarked police car and affixed GEO stickers on it.

Over 500 members of GEO met Wednesday night and voted to reject the administration's latest contract proposal. Members voted to strike until their proposals are met.

Hundreds of graduate employees walked out of classes and picketed around major teaching sites throughout campus yesterday. Many professors also did not hold classes.

Flanked by Provost Glen Gordon and administration chief negotiator Susan Pearson, O'Brien said since GEO has broken an agreement not to strike, negotiations will not continue.

"By going out on strike, that terminates the formal arrangement we've held," O'Brien said. "At the moment, we're waiting and seeing.

"We will do everything we can to minimize the negative effect of GEO's actions on our undergraduates," O'Brien said.

GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs later said it is "ludicrous" to follow these formalized agreements. "I'm going to the table on Monday. I hope I won't be alone," she said.

O'Brien said a strike will have a "negative impact" on undergraduate education and will lower undergraduate enrollment levels.

"Frankly, we've come a long way these nine months," O'Brien said. "I don't think we're very far apart."

The major issue which divides the two sides is whether the University is legally authorized to collect a fee from unwilling non-member graduate employees. This benefit, called an agency fee, is used by the other campus unions.

In 1979, the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission ruled that graduate student employees could not unionize. O'Brien argued that this ruling would make it illegal for the University to grant GEO this privilege.

Graduate student strike disrupts classes

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Classes were disrupted throughout campus yesterday during the first day of the Graduate Employee Organization strike, as graduate students and some professors canceled classes or held them in alternate locations.

Union leaders estimated 750 teaching assistants and a smaller number of research assistants were involved in the strike. Introductory writing, introductory math and introductory languages stand as most vulnerable, with 60 percent of the course load taught by graduates, according to University officials.

"History is very solid," said doctoral student Tim Ashwell, who said every history teaching assistant is a "signed up, registered, paying GEO member."

Ashwell said the sociology department had similar involvement. He also said faculty in the history department have been supportive. "What we have here is overwhelming support for the strike," he said.

"I would imagine [economics TA support] is 100 percent," said Kevin Crocker, a teaching assistant in the department. He said he saw factors other than graduate support as important. "It is important for faculty and department chairs to tell the dean and the chancellor that they support GEO," he said.

Communications GEO stewart Francois Huot said he saw about 70 percent of the communications TAs on picket lines. He was said he was comforted by "strong support from the chair of the department."

Economics chairperson William Shepherd was among a large number of administrators who could not calculate the number of classes disturbed. Teaching assistants are not closely monitored in this "highly decentralized" system, so it will take a few days to know for sure, he said.

English TA John Palmer said he noticed a profound change on campus.

"I walked through Bartlett at 11:30 and the only people in there were secretarial staff and a police officer," he said.

Libyan officials indicted

Charged with 1988 Pan Am bombing

By JAMES ROWLEY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Two Libyan intelligence officials have been indicted in connection with the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland which killed 270 people, U.S. and Scottish officials announced yesterday.

The White House raised the possibility of retaliatory action against Libya for "this outrage against humanity."

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said that clearly "higher ups" in the government of Libyan leader Moammer Gadhafi were involved in the support necessary for the operation.

"We are considering action and I'll leave it at that," Fitzwater said. "We don't rule out any option," Fitzwater said when asked about possible military action.

President Bush praised the "very good work" that went into obtaining the indictments. He said the indictments weren't "some quick hit, quick fix on trying to find the answer . . . This is very serious business that we're involved in . . ."

Scottish officials, who conducted their own investigation, said the two had been charged with murder and conspiracy, but are presumed to be in Libya and are unlikely to be "arrested in the normal way."

Scotland's Lord Advocate, Lord Fraser of Carmyllie, said Libyan authorities would be pressed to turn them over for trial.

Faculty panel focuses on campus harassment

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

A panel addressed steps that could be taken to deal with problems of racial and ethnic harassment on the University of Massachusetts campus last night.

The panel, titled "Racial and Ethnic Harassment on Campus," featured School of Education Dean Bailey Jackson, Education professor David Schimmel, Attorney Susan Rieger and Steve Arons of the legal studies department. Chancellor Richard O'Brien moderated the panel.

The basis of the debate was whether harassment is protected by the First Constitution as freedom of speech.

Each panelist discussed their own personal views upon the legal precedents of what constitutes harassment and where such policies inhibiting harassment can be implemented .

"The University should be more aggressive and bear much more responsibility than it has so far," Arons said. He added that the present situation, "where minorities are being silenced by the majority, is a threat to the excellence of this University."

Arons added that verbal harassment caused "severe emotional distress to the individual" who was victim.

Reiger stated that the U.S. Government could only "punish speech which was likely to incite violence." Only when there is a repeated pattern of verbal harrassment can harassment be considered beyond the limitations of freedom of speech, according to Reiger.

Jackson noted "that in the normal climate [of UMass] many [minorities] feel harassed."

Each panelist offered their opinions and views of where and how policies should be aimed. Schimmel said a person "should be able to walk in private upon the campus without having to be confronted with racial or ethnic harassment."

Truck malfunction brings on tragedy

MONTROSE, Pa. (AP)— Faulty wiring may have caused a parked pickup to start up by itself, travel across a parking lot a crash into a store, killing two young boys and injuring three other people, police say.

Two days after Saturday's accident, the truck started while a mechanic was inspecting its wiring, officer Alphonse VanNostrand said Wednesday.

The owner had left the 1979 Dodge's keys in the ignition and the manual transmission in gear.

His mother was sitting on the passenger side and tried to stop the pickup, the patrolman said.

"She insists she tried to apply the brakes and stop the vehicle," VanNostrand said. "She also tried to steer it, which was impossible because it was locked. She didn't get hurt, but she was very upset and distraught beyond belief."

Melted insulation on a wire may have been responsible, he said, adding that no charges were expected to be filed.

Fired postal worker kills three

ROYAL OAK, Mich. (AP) — A fired postal worker who colleagues said had vowed revenge on his superiors sprayed his former post office with bullets yesterday, killing three employees and wounding seven, according to authorities.

Employees said Thomas McIlvane, 31, of Oak Park, then turned his rifle on himself. He and three of his victims were hospitalized in critical condition, authorities said.

McIlvane was fired last year for timecard fraud and had appealed his dismissal, Postal Service spokesman Lou Eberhardt said in Washington. The firing was upheld Wednesday by an arbitrator.

"Everybody said if he didn't get his job back, he was going to come in and shoot," postal worker Bob Cibulka said. "Everyone was talking about it."

The gunman "was crazy. He was a waiting time bomb," said postal worker Mark Mitchell, who served with McIlvane in the Marine Corps. "He was a kickboxer. He had made previous threats."

Previous threats by McIlvane against his supervisors were forwarded to Postal Service authorities, Oakland County Prosecutor Richard Thompson said at a news conference. Thompson said the gunman used a .22-caliber carbine commonly used for hunting. He said the weapon's barrel had been sawed off, making it illegal.

Royal Oak police Office Joseph Hill said seven postal employees were being treated at hospitals, but two hospitals in the Detroit suburb listed six people with gunshot wounds and three with unspecified injuries. Police said they couldn't immediately clarify the injuries.

Hill said some postal workers were injured jumping from windows to escape the gunfire that began shortly before 9 a.m.

The gunman opened fire in at least three different areas, beginning with a loading dock where at least three people were shot, fire chief Bill Crouch said.

He then moved to an upstairs office, shooting another three people, before walking to the opposite end of the building and firing several more rounds, including one at himself.

Graduates rally in support of demands

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Over 300 graduate students called on the University of Massachusetts administration to meet the demands of the Graduate Employees Organization in a rally on the Student Union Steps yesterday.

GEO member Renee Heberle, a graduate student in political science and a former official of the union, kicked off the rally by leading chants of "GEO on strike."

"Why do many of us have United Auto Workers signs on?" asked Heberle. "Being in solidarity with UAW means we can be in solidarity with workers across the country — because GEO is a union."

Massachusetts Society of Professors President David Lenson told the crowd that the current situation of graduate students should serve to remind the University faculty of what they went through to become graduate students.

"Many members of the MSP have come to me and asked what they should do," Lenson said. "I told them to see yourselves now, and if you are true to yourself, you will know what to do.

"The issue here is not about good masters or bad masters, but about slavery," Lenson said. "To the question of is GEO a union or not a union — on this beautiful day for a strike, GEO is not only a union — it is the union."

GEO co-spokesperson Emily Isaacs, a teaching assistant in the English writing program, said that of 930 full-time teaching assistants at the University, 700 had signed up for picketing campus buildings by early yesterday morning.

"When I came here this morning, I said we're going to pull this off," Isaacs said. "Not only do we have a strong strike, but we have the possibility of settling with the administration — we want to bring the chancellor to the bargaining table."

Comparative literature graduate student James Wadsworth, a GEO member who said he picketed through most of the morning yesterday, said the rally will show the administration that graduate students have University-wide support behind their demands.

"It's obvious everyone's behind this movement — I can't see the administration not giving in," Wadsworth said. "I think the administration has been somewhat disrespectful and haven't realized the unity that exists [among students]."

William Jeffries, a fifth-year research assistant in the mechanical engineering department, noted that many graduate students in the natural sciences and engineering departments are in support of the strike. These departments have had a reputation in the past for not becoming involved in student activism, due in part to the reliance on federal research funding.

"The attitude has swung a bit — we can do a lot to help out," Jeffries said. "The curriculum fee and health fee waivers have helped out everyone."

UM community not shocked by ex-Klansman's run for governor

By MICHAEL MEEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts campus community is disappointed, but not shocked, by former Ku Klux Klan Grand Wizard David Duke's success so far in the race for Louisiana's governor's seat, which is to be decided in a runoff election on Saturday.

Duke, a Republican, claims the Klan and the days that he openly expressed Nazi views are behind him. The election between Duke and former Democratic governor Edwin Edwards is said to be close.

Many, however, don't believe Duke's assertions. Stacey Perry, senior leisure studies and resources student, doesn't think Duke has changed at all, saying, "Once you have those kind of views, you can't really leave them behind you."

Others, in light of Duke's anti-affirmative action stance and advocation of forcing welfare recipients to work, also look at Duke's past and fear that if he is elected he will use the governorship to institutionalize his own racist agenda.

"I can't believe it. I think it's ridiculous," said Perry while discussing Duke's run for governor.

On the other hand, some are not so surprised with Duke's success in Louisiana.

Professor Archie Shepp of the Afro-American studies department is not surprised at Duke's continued success after his strong showing in the Oct. 19 primary.

"It is symptomatic and consistent with the past decade," Shepp said. Shepp cited the failing economy, long believed to be a harbinger of heightened racial tensions, as one possible reason the ex-Klansman is getting so much popular support.

Shepp also cited political actions, such as the furor created by George Bush during his 1988 presidential campaign over the Willie Horton furlough, as possible explanations.

Sports studies major Erik Kjeldsen, was also not surprised at Duke's success. He believes it is "part of a backlash that is taking place."

Kjeldsen said that most of Duke's support may come from poor Whites who are frustrated with their own stagnation or angry at the advance of the Black middle class. Duke's message could appeal to those people.

Senior animal agriculture major Mary Salia-Bao said she believed the explanation is much simpler. She suggested that although race relations have been improving for the past 30 years, racism is still prevalent and Duke is simply appealing to and receiving support from the racist aspect of the population.

Both Kjeldsen and Shepp hope to see the last of ex-Klansmen or Nazi sympathizers such as Duke receiving support in the public arena, but Kjeldsen says, "It would not surprise me" if more candidates with similar views run.

Duke banking on "undecided" vote in Louisiana election

By DAN EVEN
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Three new polls show former Gov. Edwin Edwards leading the governor's race, but former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke says voters who claim to be undecided will carry him to victory Saturday.

"There's a lot of undecided voters out there. That's mine. I think almost all of it is mine," Duke said. "I think we'll win by a whisker."

A telephone poll conducted among 701 registered voters Nov. 6-10 by the University of New Orleans Research Center showed that 52 percent favored Edwards and 26 percent supported Duke. Twenty-two percent were undecided.

Edwards, a Democrat, led 46 percent to 40 percent -- with 14 percent undecided -- after the survey was adjusted for an expected "hidden vote" for Duke, pollster Susan Howell said.

The "hidden vote" includes people who won't publicly support the former KKK grand wizard and Nazi sympathizer. Duke said such voters enable him "to fly beneath radar" and will get him elected.

Howell, a political science professor, said Duke's percentage rose when he was given the votes of respondents who called him "inspiring" or said he "re-

Georgia official faces firing suit

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

Georgia Attorney General Michael Bowers' decision to fire Robin Shahar, an assistant attorney general, for what he called "an engagement in homosexual marriage," has brought sharp local and national response.

The ACLU last week filed motions against Bowers after he fired Shahar. Bowers maintains that "it is not whether I have a personal problem with it or not, it is the law of the State."

The ACLU filed suit, charged in a statement that Bowers has violated Shahar's "right to religious freedom, freedom of association and equal protection under the United States Constitution."

Shahar, a lesbian, is being represented by Fulton County attorney Deborah Schwartz and the Georgia ACLU. Shahar and her partner of five years engaged in a private marriage ceremony conducted by Rabbi Sharon Kleinbaum. Kleinbaum, a former resident of the Pioneer Valley, led the ceremony before an assembly of 100 people in a remote mountainous region of Georgia.

"It was a very traditional Jewish ceremony," said Shahar. "It was beautiful."

"I was stunned when Attorney General Bowers fired me — even before the ceremony had taken place — for my religious practices," she said. "I know enough about my religious freedom to believe that my rights have been violated."

Shahar has chosen a two-pronged legal defense, focusing on both religious and homosexual persecution.

Local reconstructionist Jewish Rabbis were outraged when they heard about Shahar's termination.

"It is none of the business of her employer," said Rabbi Sheila Weinberg of Amherst. "Sounds to me very homophobic."

Deborah Schwartz, Shahar's Attorney, stated that "There is no law against marriage of same sex individuals in Georgia; the sodomy law is the only one which is applicable to homosexuals and heterosexuals."

The Georgia sodomy law states that "a person commits the offense of sodomy when he or she performs and submits to any sexual act involving the sex organs of one person with the mouth or anus of another."

"She was expressing her religious freedom engaging in a Jewish ceremony," said Schwartz. "I do believe it is a First Amendment violation of freedom of religion," said Schwartz, "It is like outlawing bar mitzvahs."

Bowers is well known for his prosecution of Michael

Pearson said offering this provision to GEO could cause serious legal difficulties for the University because some graduate students unwilling to pay the fee could sue the University.

O'Brien revealed at the press conference that the University would not contest the GEO's attempt to become an state-certified union before the labor relations board, a major concession for the administration.

O'Brien also said paying for a percentage of graduate employee health benefits reasonable to GEO is difficult in tough economic times.

"We are parched financially. We have very little room to move," he said.

GEO supporters picketed in front of major teaching sites yesterday and encouraged undergraduates not to attend classes and to sign a letter to O'Brien telling him to offer GEO a reasonable contract.

"[O'Brien] is thinking 'how do I get my ass out of this jam,' " said Kathy Holmes, a sociology teaching assistant, who picketed in front of South College. "I really hope he does something."

Many of the picketed buildings had a large police presence, but no incidents were reported.

Michael Morgan, a communications professor, did not hold classes yesterday to support GEO's demands but said if the strike continues next week, he will hold classes.

He also said many undergraduates don't understand GEO's struggle. "There's not a lot of support among undergraduates. A lot of them are confused or mistaken about what the issues are," Morgan said.

Jim Garman, a graduate student in anthropology, picketed all day in front of various buildings. "This is going better than I ever would have imagined," he said. "We should be recognized as employees, I can't believe we're not."

Chancellor Richard O'Brien and Administrative Chief Negotiator Susan Pearson.

A picketing linguistics teaching assistant, Kaiv von Fintel, said, "All we want is a little recognition that what we're doing at this University is essential.

The GEO, which is affliated with the United Auto Workers/District 65, represents over 6,000 graduate students including 2,200 teaching and research assistants, interns and fellows. They have been trying to finalize their first union contract for ten months.

"It will last indefinitely until we get our demands," Von Fintel said.

Palmer and other TAs held classes at the Newman Center in an attempt to honor the strike and keep a commitment to students. While many classes ran smoothly at the Newman Center, three 9:30 classes were disturbed by a Newman employee, who chided two classes into leaving.

"Break it up," the man told the students. "If you want to hold classes, you have classrooms to go to." One class decided to stay, purchasing cookies to secure their right to stay at the cafeteria.

Economics Professor Stephen Resnick found the strike to be too much of a disturbance to teach through.

"I need TAs and TA sections," he said.

Resnick was also disturbed by the presence of security guards outside the Thompson lecture hall where his class was held.

"I do not like guards in the hallways," he said. "This is a university of ideas — I find this intimidating. There is no one trying to take over classrooms here."

University officials have doubled up on security in the wake of the strike.

Editorial/Opinion

Undergraduates, grads share common higher ed dilemma

Yesterday, in order to go to class, I had to cross a number of GEO picket lines. I felt guilty, because I strongly sympathize with the members of GEO and support their efforts to receive more equitable wages and health fee waivers.

Unfortunately, on the surface it appeared that GEO and many undergraduate students are at odds. A deeper analysis disproves this first impression. GEO graduate students and undergraduates are both victims of hard economic times in Massachusetts.

Because of rising costs and declining financial aid, many undergraduates cannot afford to risk missing a class or giving up a semester of credits to support the strike, because financially, the money won't be there to allow some undergraduate students to make up the missed classes or credits in the future.

The anxiety felt by many graduate students about their futures is mirrored within some of the undergraduates who feel compelled to cross the picket lines.

It is a sad irony that these two groups, who philosophically are not at odds about the idea of fair financial treatment by the University, have been forced to split because they are both financially strapped. It is an irony that has frequently occurred throughout history whenever workers strike and some folks feel compelled to cross the picket lines because hunger or personal financial need outweighs their ideology.

I believe many undergraduates felt uneasy yesterday when they crossed the picket lines on the way to class. I know some of my professors shared this dis-ease.

I also know that some undergraduates, myself included, know that their days here are numbered, in light of declining financial aid. At this point, some students are being faced with the harsh reality that they may not even be able to afford next semester. For them, the thought of risking the costly credits they've paid for this term is painful.

Trystan Skeigh

But the fact is, the circumstances of graduate assistants are unconscionable. They've gone without a pay raise for thirteen years, and most of their tiny stipends go for health insurance and the bare necessities of living. At this University a graduate assistant must be an expert on cheap living, gifted with creative ways to fix Ramen noodles and tuna casserole. Yet this University, which so poorly compensates them for their teaching, research and teacher assistance, depends on their labor to function. And many graduate students depend on their pittances and tuition waivers to be here. This relationsip is a perfect example of an unhealthy economic co-dependency that needs to be changed.

The graduate students need to be doing what they're doing — standing up for their rights and demanding some legitimate needs be met by their University employer.

Undergraduates should learn from their example. Rather than just crossing picket lines with heads down, undergrads need to start thinking about our own economic plight. Those who reside on campus need to start thinking about the spiraling costs of housing. Everyone needs to start thinking about the fact that UMass is becoming privatized, and that residents of Massachusetts from the lower middle class on down can no longer afford to attend a state university.

And then, as a collective group, undergraduates need to think about what, if anything, we should do to protect ourselves.

Undergraduates can learn from the brave example set by the graduate students. Both are victims of a financially conservative climate that is completely insensitive to college students.

Duke campaign symptom of working class plight

An open letter to Chancellor O'Brien:

Having decided as a union — i.e. a united collective body of workers — to go on strike, I want to emphasize to my fellow union sisters and brothers that not only are our demands fair, they are just!

I'm from a state in the American south, Louisiana, which has lately been in the news because of the possibility that the populace there may this Saturday elect a Klansman and a reputed neo-Nazi to the governorship of that state.

That an individual of Mr. Duke's background can be a serious contender for public office anywhere in this country, in this day and age, is indicative to me of how far we have degenerated as a society and how frustrated people are in this country with a political process which over the last decade has totally turned its back on and ignored the legitimate interests and cries of help of working people in this country.

Colin S. Cavell

Ten years ago, Ronald Wilson Reagan set the tone for the ensuing decade when he broke the air traffic controllers' strike, and this was followed by a relentless, all-out attack on other union workers from the Hormel meat packers in Minnesota, to the bus drivers at Greyhound, to the coal miners in Virginia, West Virginia, etc. Organized capital in this country raided workers' pension funds, bargained in bad faith and broke unions with the aid of scabs, all in an attempt to divide workers and undertake the greatest shift of wealth in this country's history from the middle and working classes to the very rich, who already own the means of production and virtually everything else of tangible value in this economy.

In addition, we have seen the rise of racist violence, most particularly the savage beating inflicted on Rodney King by members of the Los Angeles Police Force which was captured on videotape. Also, we have recently witnessed the terrible fire which killed more than 32 non-unionized workers at a chicken packing plant in North Carolina, most of whom were Black, because their bosses had virtually locked them in the building. And just a little over two weeks ago, we witnessed the gang-style assassination of a minority rights organizer in New York City.

This environment of racism and class warfare which gained tremendous impetus during the tenure of the Reagan Administration has been continued uninterruptedly by the succeeding Bush Administration. It is this environment I am charging which is directly responsible for making it acceptable for individuals like Mr. Duke to be considered as acceptable candidates in our electoral process, and this has got to stop.

For those of you who are not familiar with the past history of Nazism, let me tell you that attacking the rights of workers and destroying unions were some of the first orders of business directed by Hitler in the 1930s. Unions were brutally attacked and forcefully disbanded.

Let no one have any illusions about Mr. Duke in this matter. If he is elected governor of Louisiana this weekend, he will have a very powerful base from which to launch a national campaign against workers' rights, people of color and the remaining democratic rights we have in this country.

And one of the particular democratic rights I am most concerned about at present is the right of workers to organize and join into a union with their fellow workers for the purposes of attempting to better their lives.

In this regard, I find it particularly appalling that our chief official at this campus, Chancellor O'Brien, is unwittingly pursuing the work which David Duke and those like him would endorse wholeheartedly. I ask Chancellor O'Brien: "Sir, do you believe in the laws of this land which allow workers to organize into unions?" If your answer is in the affirmative, then I wish to further inquire of our Chancellor: "Sir, why do you continuously attempt to break our organization by refusing to recognize us as a duly-constituted union?"

Our demands are fair and just. Instead of stalling with our negotiation team, Chancellor O'Brien, you should be praising the efforts of graduate students on this campus for refusing to cater to the environment of greed which has now brought forth the rise of a Nazi leader who, if elected in Louisiana this weekend, will wreak untold havoc and devastation on our society.

The graduate students on this campus, dear Chancellor, are merely acting to protect some minimal degree of dignity by banding together for self-protection. Chancellor O'Brien, please don't be a pawn in the hands of such individuals as David Duke. Recognize the legitimate rights of workers to organize into unions in this country and negotiate a fair contract with us which, at a minimum, allows GEO to collect an agency fee, which is the sine qua non of any self-respecting union in this country. In so doing, sir, you will at last be according to graduate employees the simple self-respect we are asking for and we can then get back to the business of educating students.

Communications profs back GEO

As faculty members of the Department of Communication we are writing to express our strong support for the recognition of the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) as a union. The graduate employees are a vital and valuable part of the university's teaching mission and should be recognized as employees for their important contribution. We hope the administration will act in all haste to end the current impasse.

Club charges team with rudeness

On Saturday afternoon, October 26, the Pioneer Valley Combat Club, an official UMass Registered Student Organization which revolves around fighting with padded weapons, was meeting in a small corner of the Southwest playing fields near Boyden Gym. We weren't bothering anyone, just taking advantage of the pleasant weather and enjoying our freedoms at this diverse university. NOT!

As I was sitting and watching the sword practice, the lacrosse team, which was in another field, was getting out of practice and walked on past us. Because I was sitting at the bottom of the stairs that lead to Boyden Gym, I had the opportunity to overhear the many comments that the lacrosse team were making about our members. Let it suffice to say that the comments were laced with obscenities and were basically rude and degrading, making it clear that the lacrosse players consider us "freakpots" (their word, not mine).

UMass students should be able to be proud of their athletes. Instead, because of the narrowmindedness of some of the lacrosse players, I am angry and discouraged. UMass claims that the many different kinds of people at this school lead to diversity. Instead, they seem to breed prejudice and closemindedness. To the many lacrosse players who were so rude, I'd like to say: think about diversity. Think about the infinite forms of recreation. (I'll take mine, you take yours.) And next time, think before you speak. This is college, people, not junior high.

Coalition pledges grad support

The Anti-Racism (Chris Hani) Coalition would like to express solidarity with the GEO and would like to encourage undergraduates to support the strike. In times of crisis at UMass, programs and services that work for the people of color, working people and women are the first to be sacrificed. Union representation will guarantee the rights of graduate student employees to job security and health care. This is in direct opposition to the state institution's goal of getting from its employees the most work for the least pay. We feel that the existence of a graduate union strengthens every student and worker at this university. An undergraduate failure to support the strike means setting ourselves up to be exploited. District 65 UAW is a victory for all people struggling against oppression in the Bush era.

Hardwick in the 1986 (Hardwick v. Bowers) sodomy case. The ACLU filed suit and litigated the case to the Supreme Court, where the Court upheld the sodomy conviction.

"Michael Bowers has once again placed himself at the national forefront of discrimination against lesbians and gay men," said the ACLU director for the Lesbian and Gay Rights Project, William Rubenstein. "We fully intend to litigate this case as far as we have to to vindicate Robin's constitutional rights. No one is above the law."

Shahar said Bowers obtained the information on which he based her firing from her "Info data sheet" which listed her partner named "Francis" as the person to contact in case of emergency. "I take his decision as primarily anti-gay and secondly anti-religious because Bowers does not have the power to say what is legal," said Shahar.

Last week, shortly after the ACLU filed suit, Emory University School of Law prohibited Bowers from recruiting on campus, saying that the attorney general's action amounted to discrimination and thus violates school policy.

Bowers last Thursday filed a motion to dismiss the case. The suit and the motion to dismiss will be read by a judge on Dec. 6. If the case is heard, it is expected to be in court for a year.

"I feel that the existing policies are not sufficient," Arons said. "And in the coming year and approaching semesters we will float this all across campus and get everyone's reaction."

Jackson called for the administration to become more involved in solving harassment problems.

"The harassment which I feel and the harassment which I hear from students comes during the natural course of business," Jackson said. "The harassment I hear about from students, by the way, comes from faculty and not just from other students."

"It comes in the form of biased presentation of information. It comes in the form of singling out and ignoring students in the class because of their racial or ethnic group membership," Jackson said.

O'Brien ended the two-hour discussion with a pledge to tackle the harassment issue saying that he would like to "make the policy as clear as the sexual harassment policy upon campus."

The panel was sponsored by the Chancellor's Commission in Human Relations, the Graduate Student Senate and the Undergraduate Student Senate.

ally cares about people like me."

Meanwhile, a telephone poll by Mason-Dixon Opinion Research showed Edwards ahead 49 percent to 42 percent, with 9 percent undecided, after adjustment for Duke's hidden vote. The telephone poll of 816 registered voters was commissioned by WDSU-TV. It was conducted Monday and Tuesday.

A third poll showed the former three-term governor leading 48 percent to 28 percent, with 12 percent saying they would vote for neither candidate and 12 percent undecided.

The research center poll had a margin of error of plus or minus 3.6 percentage points. The Mason-Dixon and Renwick polls both had margins of error of 3.5 points.

"I feel comfortable at this point. I think the polls accurately reflect that I will win the election. . . but I'm working to get that last uncommitted vote," Edwards said Wednesday. "I think we need to send a message that David Duke doesn't represent Louisiana."

Acting Attorney General William Barr alleged in Washington that the two "planted and detonated the bomb," acting in concert with other unnamed co-conspirators.

The bomb killed all 259 people aboard the Boeing 747 jetliner and 11 on the ground in an act of international terrorism that horrified the world. Pan Am 103 originated in Frankfurt, Germany. The victims were from 21 countries, and included eight families of four and 16 infants sitting on the laps of their parents.

Paul Hudson of Albany, N.Y., whose daughter Melinda was among the victims, applauded the indictments, saying "the first step has now been taken toward justice in the worst terrorist attack against American civilians in history."

The two suspects were identified as Abdel Basset Ali Al-Megrahi and Lamen Khalifa Fhimah. Barr described them as "fugitives from justice."

Saeeb Mujbar, Libya's ambassador to France, said in a BBC radio interview shortly before the announcement: "It's very serious accusation or, if you want to say this, a very serious lie."

"But there is no proof of it whatsoever," he said. "We are victims of terrorism and not perpetrators of it."

"The People Under the Stairs" gore bores

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

With Freddy supposedly dead (and in 3D, no less), writer and director Wes Craven cooked up this sometimes scary but mostly cheesy horror flick, "The People Under the Stairs."

A young boy named Fool (Brandon Adams) and his family are being threatened with eviction by their evil slumlords. Fool, his sister's boyfriend and another friend decide to break into their landlord's house to steal a rare gold coin collection in order to pay their rent as well as pay for a much needed operation for Fool's mother. When the friend gains entry to the house and never comes out, Fool and the boyfriend go in to find out what's going on. They are then trapped inside the house, pursued by a vicious dog and an equally vicious brother and sister team (Everett McGill and Wendy Robie) who call each other Mommy and Daddy. Fool befriends their kept "daughter," Alice and encounters the people under the stairs, a group of rejected male siblings.

"The People Under the Stairs" begins as a routine cat-and-mouse thrill ride, providing enough tension and a few scares. The last half hour, however, dissolves into pure horror movie cliche, complete with many false climaxes, the hero's final revenge and the destruction of the villain's lair.

Craven was not interested in creating deep, tortured sociopaths. They're wacko Puritan psychos! They scream "You're going to hell!" every other sentence, they egg on their killer dog and they try to wash out the 'sin' in their daughter by scrubbing her in a tub of scalding water!

There is an interesting footnote in casting: the mother is played by a female impersonator (Wendy Robie), who is the epitome of bitchiness. And finally, the "people under the stairs" resemble a heavy metal band, a sort of a living dead with bad make-up. They are by no means scary, but quite a good laugh considering they are supposed to be horrific.

"The People Under the Stairs" is not a slasher movie, although it does contain a good share of gore and violence, the latter nasty one moment and cartoonish the next. This is the type of movie you can go to with a bunch of friends and be really rude in the theater. Throw popcorn! Have a Milk Dud fight! However, if you want to be scared and see Wes Craven at his finest, rent the first and best "Nightmare on Elm Street."

Catch a cool buzz from the Horse Flies

By LOU COVE
Collegian Correspondent

Looking for some "neoprimitive bug music" this weekend? I've got just what the entomologist ordered: a dose of the Horse Flies.

Phil Spectre built his immortal wall of sound way back when, and now a far-out band from the steaming miasma of the rock underworld surfaces and follows suit by fashioning their own weird, ethereal buzz. The wall and the buzz share the same uncanny ability to reach the listener not just through the ears, but through the pores and by the throat.

Hailing from Ithaca, New York, the Flies have developed their own breed of danceable art rock that maps out its aural territory with a unique mish-mash of synthesizers and accordions, guitars and processed banjo-ukes. They fuse seemingly disparate elements in an effort to create something entirely different, mixing the sounds of technology with more organic music to come up with a peerless hybrid: a distinctive, texture buzz.

And the Horse Flies' imagination is not limited to their music. Song titles like "I Need a Plastic Bag (To Keep My Brains In)," and "Who Throwed Lye On My Dog," maintain the offbeat sensibility of their sound and combine it with a poignant sense of humor.

"We'd be dead without humor," says singer/guitarist/processed banjo-uke player Jeff Claus. "Humor is a critical component of what we do, although we're not at all a novelty band. We're not comedic. It's more like satire or pointing out irony."

Still, the Horse Flies augment their indulgence into the funny side of life with a serious social conscience, as on the dark "Sally Ann," a striking commentary on prostitution and the oppression of women. The same can be said for "Jenny On the Railroad," in which Rich Stearns sings: "Jenny is a junkie, Jenny shoots smack / Jenny's on the mainline never comin' back."

MCA Records signed the band on for another album (their third) slated for release in the Spring of '92 after the success of their 1991 LP Gravity Dance which received widespread critical acclaim. Their work has been called "brilliantly peculiar . . . new music with twisted roots," and Brett Milano of the Boston Globe honored them with the distinguished award of "Best Set By A Band We Never Heard Of" when the Flies opened for 10,000 Maniacs at Great Woods.

The Horse Flies, in their musical travels, conjure up what amounts to a surreal cosmic hoedown that will bring you one step closer to their far-out, self-described "neoprimitive bug music." And who wouldn't want to cuddle up next to a bunch of horse flies? Horse Flies, as defined in Webster's New World Dictionary, are the large flies that suck the blood out of horses. How does that relate to the band? It doesn't. I just wanted to write "large flies that suck the blood of horses." My own quirky passions aside, the spooky, mystical Horse Flies will buzz into town on Saturday for a night of weirdness and fun, so be sure to catch 'em.

The Horse Flies will bite at Pearl Street on Saturday the 16th. The show starts at 8:30 p.m.

Water aerobics class makes a splash at UM

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

While Jane Fonda's workout record includes the song "Bridge Over Troubled Water," it's doubtful the aerobics guru ever envisioned the fitness craze of the eighties would end up in the water.

As Jane's busy doing the Tomahawk Chop with Ted Turner, two University of Massachusetts students have introduced the latest trend in aerobics — water aerobics — to UMass as a course offering for both semesters this year.

"Not many schools in the east have this type of thing," said instructor Lauren Doyle, a senior from Westborough. "It's more popular out in the west."

Combining the rigors of a regular aerobic workout with the resistance of water, the fairly new form of aerobics is gaining in popularity, according to Doyle. In fact, some students were shut out in this, the inaugural semester for the course.

Doyle said the idea for the class came from her co-instructor Katie Sheehan, an exercise science major. Both women had been teaching land aerobics in the past, but saw this as an opportunity to create a new class for the University.

Sheehan, a junior from Scituate, had taught water aerobics previously on the South Shore and felt establishing a class would be beneficial for a lot of people.

"Personally, I like it a lot more than regular aerobics," Sheehan said. "It gets me more motivated than land aerobics."

The main difficulty in beginning the class, which is open to both men and women, was finding the pool time. However, Russell Kidd, the UMass Director of General Physical Education, decided the class was worth a shot.

"Russ Kidd really went out on a limb for us," Doyle said.

Kidd said, "It has been proposed for three years now. [Lauren and Katie] have done a tremendous job getting their act together and getting the class off the ground. They're two sharp, enthusiastic, intelligent instructors."

Kidd said he hopes to expand to another section, but in order to do so, would have to take pool time away from another class. Kidd said that won't be done until he takes a look at classes with small enrollments.

"I definitely want to continue with the class," Kidd said.

Doyle said the benefits of water aerobics are comparable to land aerobics and she emphasized the fact that even people with injuries can still participate and get a challenging workout.

"We have some students who have injuries that are in the class," Doyle said. "You can be injured and still exercise. You don't have to be a couch potato."

Both Doyle and Sheehan commented on the tremendous pressure exerted on the spine during land aerobics, whereas water aerobics allows a comparable workout without the risk of shin splints and other injuries.

One member of the class who has suffered through three knee operations is senior Jodi DiBartolomeo from Haverhill. DiBartolomeo was immediately hooked on water aerobics, having done it once before.

"It helps with flexing and strengthening my knee," said DiBartolomeo. "I can't do regular aerobics because of the impact. This way I can protect my legs by being in the water.""

Class member Lauren Berman, a junior from Stoughton who had also taken land aerobics at UMass, thinks the water helps the workout.

"You feel like you get a better workout," Berman said. "The resistance of the water helps.

"It's harder than regular aerobics because you're trying to do things in the water like you do on the land and you can't do it as fast."

Freshman Diana Cincotta from Waltham had never taken water aerobics before, but had done land aerobics.

"Water aerobics doesn't put as much strain on the muscles," Cincotta said. "It's probably the same workout but you're not sweating."

UMass' Allison White placed second in both the one and three-meter diving events. White lost the one meter by one point to BU's Reagan Bernardo, who also won the three-meter event.

The Minutewomen also placed second in the 200 medley relay, the 100- and 200-yard backstroke and the 100 and 200 butterfly events.

"What can I say, they smoked us," said Newcomb. "Our team swam really well, but they were just unbeatable today."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): A close personal relationship could be the source of conflict. Do not let an old romance cause jealousy. Exercise greater caution in financial matters. Avoid succumbing to peer pressure.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Use your time more efficiently. Seek help from associates who are both congenial and cooperative. Curb a tendency to spend too much money. Entertaining at home proves fun.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Much is expected from you today. Wearing brighter colors will lift your spirits. Pace your social life so that it does not conflict with family commitments or business affairs. Mate is supportive.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Stick to conventional business methods. Work done at home will go quickly. Eliminate the unnecessary from your busy schedule. Friends will be glad to help shoulder a burden.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Do not let a financial crunch get you down; it is strictly temporary! Good news arrives from overseas. Romance is on your mind. Be patient! Let a potential partner make the first move!

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Things could go awry today. Accounts may be out of balance or debts unpaid. Even a friend could lead you astray. Play things safe and you will come out unscathed.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Money spent on your home or family will prove to be a wise investment in the days to come. Visitors may come to you bearing gifts. Protect your reputation by paying bills promptly.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone may try to take advantage of your good nature today. Spend some quality time at home this weekend, even if it means being on your own. Better days lie ahead for romance.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A chance to bond with someone special could be your lucky break. Follow your instincts when mixing business with pleasure. It would be a mistake to jeopardize your good name.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A favorable day for moving ahead with a long-range business venture. Advance your plans through talks and letters; you can get exactly what you want. Go for it! The race is to the swift.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Certain aspects of your domestic life receive new attention. Emphasize your pursuit of knowledge or special skills. Close a good travel deal while you can. Include a loved one in your plans.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): You have a good idea of what the future holds. Communicating, with a wide variety of people will help you develop a successful public campaign. It is time to sign a financial deal.

Chancellor's Open Letter To Undergraduate Students

The University has been threatened with a strike by the Graduate Employees Organization (GEO). If a strike does occur, the University will make every effort to insure that your education is not seriously disrupted. Each academic department on campus has been asked to take all reasonable action to cover courses which might be affected by the strike. Once a department has been notified that a particular class is not being held, the department will either find an alternative method of covering the class or will notify students in the class of alternative methods for completing the course requirements. Students should recognize that it may take a day or two to implement such policies. We would also like to assure you that, in the event that grades are not reported as a result of the strike, the University will record a temporary pass grade for such courses until the actual grades are received. No student will be placed in academic jeopardy because of the strike, and no student's graduation will be jeopardized as a result of strike action.

The University has been negotiating with GEO for approximately nine months and we have reached agreement on many issues. It is our hope that a mutually acceptable agreement covering all issues can be achieved in the near future. In the meantime, we urge you to attend those classes which are being held and to look for further announcements on the coverage of classes which are affected by the strike. These announcements will be made through Housing Services Television Network (HSTVN) and the Collegian.

All of us hope that this problem can be resolved to the benefit of the campus community in the very near future.

Sincerely,

Richard D. O'Brien
Chancellor

UMass men's X-country to compete at IC4As

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team travels to Bethlehem, Pa. this weekend to compete in the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America Championships.

The IC4As, which also serves as the qualifying meet for the NCAA Championships, will include some 60 teams from the Eastern United States. The top five teams qualify for the NCAAs.

The Minutemen placed 10th in last year's meet, but graduated four of their top runners from that team.

"This year, I think we're in a little different situation," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "It's taken this long to get this team to the point where they are comfortable competing at the championships level in collegiate cross country.

"If we run as well as we're capable, we should finish around 15th," he said. "If we have a better than average day, we could finish 12th or 13th."

UMass placed second at the Atlantic 10 Championships, Oct. 26, and fifth at the New England Championships Nov. 1. O'Brien said he believes the team is just beginning to run as well as it is capable.

"The kids have looked very good in practice over the last two weeks," O'Brien said. "Over the past month, they've really come together, both physically and mentally."

The team competing at the IC4As will include senior captain Pat Ryan, juniors Matt Simon, Mike Davis, Keith Willis and Pat Reed and sophomores Craig Cormier and Kevin Greenhalgh.

Simon has been the top runner for the Minutemen this season. He placed sixth at the A-10s and 13th at New Englands.

Reed placed ninth at the A-10s and 39th at New Englands. He placed 150th at the IC4As last year.

Willis, who is having his best season ever for UMass, placed 15th at the A-10s and 20th at New Englands.

Davis placed 25th at the A-10s and 51st at New Englands. He was the fourth UMass runner at the IC4As last year with a 94th place finish.

Cormier missed the A-10s while recovering from the flu but came back to place 62nd at New Englands. He was the fifth finisher for the Minutemen last year, placing 110th.

Ryan missed the first four meets of the season with a knee injury. He came back from the injury to place 14th at the Eastern Conference Meet and 14th again a week later at the A-10s.

Greenhalgh led the team with a seventh place finish in the Eastern's and placed 18th at the A-10s.

Minutewomen harriers healthy for ECACs

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Another season of hard work and grueling workouts will come to an end Saturday, when the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team heads to Lehigh University for the ECAC Championships.

Leading the Minutewomen into Bethlehem, Pa. will be senior captain Michelle St. Laurent, running in her final collegiate meet for the UMass harriers.

Although the Minutwomen placed a disappointing sixth at the New England's two weeks ago, Coach Julie LaFreniere looks for this week to see the team in top form.

"The past two weeks, we've had some of the best workouts of the year," LaFreniere said. "We're definitely in better shape than we were two weeks ago, and we've finally got almost our whole team healthy."

Besides Maureen Meldrim, who has been sidelined since early season with mono, and Tricia Mathiesen, who is suffering from low iron, the Minutewomen are the healthiest they've been all season, and will look to capture a top 15 finish at Lehigh.

Kelly Liljeblad is back running at the front of the pack, and along with twin sister Kim, St. Laurent and junior Becky Johnson, hope to return to running in a tight pack which enabled the Minutewomen to capture the Atlantic 10 Championships.

"Kelly looks great. She's back running at the top of the pack and will definitely add something," LaFreniere said.

With Mathiesen less than 100 percent, the Minutewomen will turn toward freshman Tracy Delutis, and senior Cate Dean to pick up the slack.

"Tracy has really stepped up and helped us when we needed her," LaFreniere said. "And Cate, she's absolutely running the best I've ever seen her run."

The Minutewomen placed 15th at last year's ECACs, and in order to better that, they must run in the tight pack they have shown in previous meets.

"Physically, the women are prepared," LaFreniere said. "Cross country is 90 percent mental, and as long as they can stay mentally prepared, it looks good."

UMass falls to Northeastern in overtime

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

BROOKLINE, Mass. — And as it began, so it has ended.

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team started its season with a 2-1 overtime win at Parsons Field en route to a blazing 8-0 beginning. Yesterday, the team ended its national championship hopes by losing to Northeastern at Parsons Field, 2-1, in double overtime in the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

Northeastern's Kelly Wilk scored her second goal of the game on a penalty corner with 3:02 left in the sudden-death, second overtime period. Northeastern forced the extra periods when Wilk connected on a penalty corner with 10:18 remaining in the second half.

The Minutewomen stormed out of the gate, testing the Husky defense by pushing the ball into the NU zone. Sherlan Cabralis got UMass on the board first, nailing a slap shot from about 25 yards out at 16:50 in the first half. Cabralis took a loose ball, cocked and fired. The shot eluded goaltender Brenda Mitchell, and gave UMass a commanding 1-0 lead.

It was a lead the Minutewomen treasured, at least until halftime. Northeastern coach Cheryl Murtagh gave UMass credit.

"UMass came out strong," she said. "They were real aggressive and they took the strong [right] side away from us. We needed to use the whole field to create scoring opportunities."

However, late in the second half, UMass seemed to be moving in reverse. Northeastern relentlessly pounded the ball into UMass' zone, but time after time the Minutewomen's defense and Philippa Scott's goaltending turned the Huskies away. The Minutewomen kept turning the ball over, giving the Huskies prime opportunities, but would regroup just in time to escape, for a while.

The critical play in the game at that point occurred when Debra Sweeney, NU's co-captain and top scorer, was awarded a penalty stroke with 10:57 left in the game. Sweeney, standing right in front of Scott, picked her shot as a hush fell over Parsons Field.

Sweeney partially misfired, and Scott stopped the ball with her left foot to kill the Husky threat. It was a key turning point in the game. . . for Northeastern.

"This year, we've had little lapses," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "If we survive those lapses, we've survived the games. I thought the save on the penalty stroke was a turning point, but Northeastern kept charging."

Northeastern gained a penalty corner less than 30 seconds later, and Wilk connected, on an inbounds pass from Shelly Morris and an assist by Sweeney. That tied the game at 1-1, and turned the momentum in Northeastern's favor for good.

Yet UMass had a golden opportunity to win the game with less than two minutes left in regulation. The Minutewomen were awarded a penalty corner, but midfielder Joy Blenis' shot was blocked. The teams remained deadlocked, and went to a full 10-minute overtime.

Both teams had a good chance in the first overtime. Sweeney immediately rushed the UMass net, and was awarded a penalty corner. Scott made the save, and the Huskies were turned away.

For UMass, Tara Jelley broke through midfield and rushed the Northeastern net with four minutes left, but the team got nothing out of the play. The first overtime period resolved nothing.

Minutemen to battle ferocious Wildcats

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team will match up against its toughest opponent of the season tomorrow when it travels to Pennsylvania to battle Villanova University, one of the top teams in Division I-AA.

The Wildcats, 8-1 overall and 6-1 in the YanCon, are ranked second in the nation in total defense as they allow an average of only 227.6 points per game and their 39.9 points per game on offense places them third in the country.

"This is a very difficult game . . . with a capital V," UMass head coach Jim Reid said.

Against YanCon opponents, Villanova is tops in rushing defense, passing defense and total offense.

Villanova's quarterback Tom Colombo has the best pass efficiency ratio in the Conference. In nine games, the junior signal-caller from Brockton has completed 178 of 281 passes for 2,150 yards. In addition, his 17 touchdowns leads the YanCon.

"He's a huge force," Reid said after comparing the 5-foot-7 quarterback to the Canadian Football League's Doug Flutie. "He knows how to find receivers. He doesn't get sacked. He's just an outstanding, rugged, confident football player."

Colombo's top target has been Scott Donald. The junior tight end has caught 37 passes this season for 407 yards and nine TDs.

The Wildcats average over 225 yards on the ground per game, third in the YanCon. Their leading rusher, Pat Kennedy, will not play against the Minutemen as a result of an elbow injury he suffered last week. Yet, sophomore Vernon Smith filled in last week against New Hampshire and produced 135 yards on 28 carries, including two TDs.

Junior tackle Willie Oshodin leads the 'Nova defense as he has registered 55 tackles and six QB sacks on the season. In the secondary, strong safety Kevin Long Kevin Long has 55 tackles, seven tackles for losses and three interceptions.

So, how do the Minutemen prepare for the ferocious Cats?

"Monday we had a practice in pitch black," Reid said. "We were running around in the snow for an hour and fifteen minutes with car headlights on us."

Reid explained the field which the team usually practices on was unplayable as a result of the rain and snow.

However, there won't be any mud at Villanova Stadium as it is artificial turf.

The hard surface should benefit UMass tailback Jerome Bledsoe. The senior is the new leading rusher in the nation in Division I-AA as he is averaging 139.5 ypg. Bledsoe also averages 186 all-purpose ypg, second in the country.

Dave McGovern will be taking the snaps for the third consecutive week for the Minutemen. According to Reid, he will play a major role in stopping the Wildcats.

"We have to establish the play-action pass and take advantage of our speed," Reid said. "We have to successfully execute the short-passing game."

GAME NOTES: The game will be broadcast live on WMUA, 91.1 FM, Amherst and on the UMass Network, WTTT, Amherst.

Minutewomen soccer has defeated all odds

When a team loses six starting seniors, including the best player in the nation, lacks a scoring punch, speed, experience and depth it usually is not figured to go very far. These were some of the problems facing the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team as it entered the 1991 season.

The result was a team which recorded a 14-5 record, received an NCAA tournament bid and stayed nationally ranked for the entire season, climbing as high as No. 7. The Minutewomen surprised everyone, including their coach, Jim Rudy.

Dan Wetzel

"I didn't expect this much success," Rudy said. "We came a long way this year, especially from preseason when things looked so dim. There were a lot of uncertainties at the beginning, but the team did a nice job. This was a great team, I love underdogs."

Massachusetts surprised all by playing extremely tough defense, scoring opportunistic goals and getting outstanding goaltending from Briana Scurry.

Scurry started every game for UMass and recorded a 0.47 goals against average. Scurry also had 12 shutouts on the season. Although in a few games she was untested, in many contests she made the impossible saves look routine with a blend of fundamentals and athleticism.

In front of Scurry was a talented defense which proved itself to be one the finest in the nation.

"With the kind of schedule we play, a top schedule, the few goals we allowed [nine] is simply amazing," Rudy said. "Our defense was great, but by defense I mean all 11 players. It starts with our front people stopping the attack in midfield."

The defense was spearheaded by Hermann Trophy finalist and All-New England 1st team member Holly Hellmuth. Hellmuth is a dominating one-on-one stopper, who continually covered the top offensive threat on the opposing team.

Also leading the defense was sweeper Lisa Mickelson, and backs Carrie Koeper and Heidi Kocher. Midfielders Amy Trunk, Paula Wilkins and Michele Woodside were likewise outstanding.

Woodside joined Hellmuth on the All-New England 1st team as selected by the New England Women's Intercollegiate Soccer Association. Wilkins and forward Kim Eynard made the second team.

Only a sophomore, Wilkins played superb soccer despite being hampered all season by various injuries. When healthy, her presence on the field proved invaluable. It was Wilkins' 40-yard bomb in overtime against Rutgers that propelled the Minutewomen into the NCAAs.

Offensively, the Minutewomen struggled all season. If it weren't for Hellmuth's uncanny ability to head in corner kicks, 0-0 ties would have been the norm.

"You have just witnessed the slowest soccer team in the history of the NCAA," Rudy proclaimed to the press after losing to UConn in the Tournament.

Indeed UMass lacked speed and a single great finisher, a la April Kater last season, but the team did get strong play from Colleen Milliken and freshman Polly Hackathorn.

"This team wasn't a flashy one, they were a real blue-collar team," Rudy said. "We were mentally tough and we played everyone hard. We didn't back down from anyone."

There is a sign in Rudy's office that reads: "When I step on the field, I doubt defeat."

The Minutewomen seemed to take the motto to heart.

Women swimmers fall to BU

By LILLIAN K. LEGGIO
Collegian Staff

Boston University freestyler Sheryl Cotter set two Boyden Pool records, propelling the BU women's swim team past the hosting University of Massachusetts 198-102 last night.

In the second event of the evening, Cotter got off to a quick start in the 1,000-yard freestyle, built a commanding lead over the rest of the field and set a new pool record with a time of 10:33.91, breaking the old record, set in 1989, by seven seconds.

Cotter later rewrote the pool record in the 500 freestyle with a time of 5:12.97.

"Once we realized Sheryl was on record pace, the team really started pulling for her," said BU coach Reigh Whetmore. "Her performance really ignited our performance."

BU's performance included 14 of 16 first place finishes and one other pool record. In the 200 butterfly, BU's Lauren Curtis' time of 2:08.87 broke UMass' Michele Leary's 1990 record of 2:09.80.

"BU swam out of their minds and unfortunately this overshadowed some great performances by some of our swimmers," said UMass coach Bob Newcomb. "Jen Jackson was within 30 hundredths of a second from tying the 200-yard butterfly and we had other swimmers have their best ever-times."

UMass was highly successful in the 100 and 200 breaststroke as it captured first and second place in both events. In the 100 breaststroke, UMass' Amy Lewis swam a personal best, finishing first with a time of 1:12.31 with teammate

GEO negotiations remain at standstill

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts administration officials and representatives from the Graduate Employee Organization met informally last night to try to hammer out the union's final demands and end their two-day-old strike.

The organization will inform their membership of developments in negotiations today but top GEO officials conceded the strike will probably continue. Both sides plan to hold another informal session today.

The administration also has offered a proposal that both sides sign off on all resolved issues, end the strike and enter into mediation on the last issue of agency fee, according to chief negotiator for the administration, Susan Pearson.

Emily Isaacs, co-speaker of GEO, said she learned of details of this proposal through press accounts. "We are tired of negotiating in the press. We would like to negotiate at the table," she said.

Peter Underdown, a co-speaker for GEO, said, "We certainly have not accepted [the proposal].

On Friday, most graduate employees received a letter from Chancellor Richard O'Brien which gave them until tomorrow to return a form saying if they are working or not. If they don't return to work, graduate employees will lose their paychecks for that week and tuition and curriculum fee waivers for the remainder of the fall semester.

"We are, of course, prohibited from using public funds to pay any individuals who do not fulfill their contractual obligations," O'Brien wrote.

Isaacs, who said the letter employs "scare tactics," is urging all graduate employees to "hold off" on sending in the form to the administration.

She also said lawyers for United Auto Workers, which represents GEO, has declared the letter itself illegal. Isaacs said GEO is considering a class-action suit against the administration.

"It's just scary stuff," Isaacs said. "The administration is committed to breaking this union." She said graduate employees generally feel "outraged" about the letter.

Underdown said "legal findings obtained by UAW lawyers" have said that if such actions are carried out, it would be a "violation of civil rights."

Isaacs said the letter is legally questionable because it demands "self-incrimination" and also some graduate employees have not received the letter.

In other developments, the GEO said the United Auto Workers will pay all legal fees and damages if the University is sued by a non-union member graduate employee unwilling to pay $1 a week union dues. This agency fee question remains a major stick

Some graduates continue to teach

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

While hundreds of graduate students have been picketing on campus, at least one has chosen to continue his role as a teaching assistant.

Completing assignments on the 14th floor of the Lederle Graduate Research Tower, Nicolas Minutillo, a third-year mathematics graduate student and 10-year resident of the Amherst area, is continuing the educational process. He said he is calm and sure of his actions, he has not let the strike affect his academic life.

"I was about to join GEO until they called a strike," Minutillo said. "I thought the administration's contract offer was pretty good."

"I do not think they should be striking over an agency fee, which seems to be the big issue left," he said.

Minutillo feels his "teaching is part of the educational experience." Considering his teaching role he says, "It allows me to get what I really want here, which is not employment, but a Ph.D."

"I guess I feel a bit like an undergrad," he said. "The undergrads pay for [their education]. I don't. I feel lucky."

Is the teaching assistant role a job or a scholarship? This seems to be a question dividing strikers and non-strikers.

"Personally, I think it is a scholarship," Minutillo said.

"If they were charging curriculum fees to grad students, I would be upset, but it has been waved three semesters in a row," said Minutillo, who was unsure of the price of his tuition.

"I've never figured what it is because I've never had to pay it," he said.

In addition to tuition and fee waivers, Minutillo also said he receives a "larger than average" stipend, or salary.

Minutillo said he is content with the workings of the mathematics department, and his treatment there. "We have a fairly nice department here," which he said only expects him to work limited hours.

Minutillo is also concerned with the students he teaches in his section of Math 131.

"I teach an entire lecture myself, so if I did not teach they would miss as much as I was on strike for," he said, noting the departmental final which will be given in December which his students would not be prepared for.

"I have not really had any comments from my students, asking me to cancel class," he said. "No one is really pressuring me at all."

Minutillo said he has had "no problem" passing picket lines.

"If they are my friends, I say 'hi.' People are very polite," he said.

"A lot of grad students really do believe in what they are

Students rally in support of striking UMass grad TAs

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Over 200 graduate and undergraduate students gained a brief respite from the raw, rainy weather and rallied to support the Graduate Employee's Organization strike in the Cape Cod Lounge Friday.

Zack Exley, a junior Social Thought and Political Ecomony major, said GEO's activism was setting an example which undergraduates could follow to protest tuition and fee hikes.

"If [undergraduates] were really organized the way you guys were over the last three years, we'd be paying less than half as much in tuition and fees," Exley said. "Tuition and fees have been raised over $4,000 in the last few years."

"[Chancellor] Dick O'Brien thinks [undergraduates] aren't involved in this," Exley said. "You guys will really help us next semester."

Exley said a "union of undergraduates" was being organized for next semester to protest tuition and fee hikes.

Carol Knox, an international representative for the United Auto Workers, which represents GEO, said a current strike by clerical workers at Columbia University reflected many of the same demands GEO is trying to negotiate with the University's administration.

"The issues are job security and health care," Knox said. "The other issue there is why are Black and Hispanic workers on [Columbia's] campus paid less than others."

Knox added she was impressed by the show of support among graduate students for the strike.

"As a professional who's been on a lot of picket lines, this is really phenomenal," Knox said.

According to GEO officials, 700 of 930 teaching assistants had signed up for picket duty as of Thursday, the first day of the strike.

Following the rally, a group of GEO members went to Whitmore to deliver postcards addressed to Chancellor Richard O'Brien calling for the administration to grant GEO a fair contract. GEO members said 3,300 cards had been signed.

World Cup questions UM soccer cuts

World Cup USA 1994, Inc., the organizing committee for the international World Cup soccer tournament to be played in the U.S. in 1994, is pressuring the state of Massachusetts to reinstate the University of Massachusetts men's soccer program, which was cut from the Department of Athletics' budget last spring.

The committee is searching for areas to play the games and has slated Foxboro Stadium as a possible site. However, when members of the committee were informed the state's largest university dropped soccer due to the state-wide budget cuts, it warned

Edwards gets La. nod

Former gov. edges ex-Nazi Duke

By GUY COATES
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Democrat Edwin Edwards beat former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke in a landslide Saturday, reclaiming the governorship he had lost in disgrace. The election riveted national attention on Louisiana, where many voters saw the contest as a tragic choice between a racist and a rogue.

With 98 percent of precincts reporting, Edwards had 1,056,090 votes, or 61 percent, to Duke's 674,548 votes, or 39 percent. Turnout set a record for a Lousiana election — more than 78 percent of the state's 2.2 million voters.

Duke, a Republican state representative, was repudiated by most state and national GOP leaders, including President Bush, because of his white supremacist backgrounds.

Edwards, claiming victory before jubilant supporters at his headquarters declared, "Tonight, Louisiana became first, first to turn back the merchant of hate, the master of deceit.

"Tonight is the first night of our journey to decency, to honesty, to fairness, to justice, to respect, to honor, and to hard work ...

"I will make our people proud of our state, proud of our governor," added Edwards, who will be serving an unprecedented fourth term. His first three terms were marked with scandal, including his trial on federal corruption charges. He was acquitted.

Duke conceded with a call for his supporters to pray for Edwards.

"The candidate may have lost," he told disappointing but cheering campaign workers, " but the message goes out loud and clear across Louisiana and across the country... The time has come to begin to heal the liberal welfare system that is causing

Task force created

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Student Government Association President David Gagne, citing the "many issues that must be addressed" on this campus, has created three task forces to mobilize students to deal with problems at the University.

The task forces will deal with the issues of housing, tuition and fees and voter registration, he said.

The Housing Review Task Force will be headed by senior Bob Monaghan, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, while the tuition and fees task force is going to be headed by Student Trustee Kevin Newnan and Commuter Area Government President Jen Wood. The voter registration task force will be headed by sophomore student senator Mathew Pavisi. Gagne said the task forces will be open to all students.

"We're not looking to pass something specific," Gagne said. "Task forces are an attempt to mobilize students on an issue."

Gagne said he hoped as many as 150 students would join any of the task forces. The goal is to make students' work more actively in addressing issues and solving problems, Gagne said.

"[The Student Senate] is always setting up committees that are passing resolutions and doing nothing," Gagne said. "Whatever people pass doesn't mean anything unless they go out and actively do something for students.

Gagne said he is writing charters for each task force. The Housing Review Force will concentrate on students to take a role in "getting students apprised of their rights," Gagne said.

He added the voter registration task force will attempt to register as many students to vote as possible, while the force on tuition and fees will work to "restore funding for the University to the point where it once was."

Food science professor earns national award

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Correspondent

Long-time University of Massachusetts food science professor Ernest M. Buck is the recent recipient of an award for excellency in advising students from the National Academy of Advising Association. The conference, held annually, met from Oct. 6 to 9 in Louisville, Kentucky.

"We couldn't be happier! The students are thrilled about it," said Dr. Fergus M. Clydesdale, head of the food science department.

Last semester, Buck received the annual UMass Outstanding Advisory Award. "No other award could have meant more to me," said Buck. The UMass Award is awarded on the basis of letters from current students, and graduates.

"I've always been very student-oriented and had an open-door policy," Buck said. "It was really nice to get that award."

Buck began teaching at UMass in 1957, when he was involved with animal science. In 1960 Buck became interested in the food science field, and has been ever since.

In the last 10 years, Buck has developed uses for under-utilized fish. Using fish as a food analogy, he produced a "fake" crab meat, and a hot dog from red hake and mackeral.

Buck said although the UMass food science department is the oldest in the country, it is the most up-to-date technologically. Buck said there is an incredible network of UMass graduates and they are highly regarded. As an example, Ocean Spray Corporation currently employs 24 UMass graduates.

"Professor Buck was one of the reasons that I decided to go to UMass," said Eric Murrer, a food science undergraduate.

Buck foresees the food science field will change to meet the needs of the people with their changes in lifestyles. People are becoming more health conscious, according to Buck.

"It's dynamic — [food science] gives people what they want," said Buck. Buck said he expects to see "grazing" and more food products geared toward people with little time for sit-down meals.

Buck said it is important for students to move around in the first four to five years after they graduate. This way students can get a better idea of what interests them.

"Don't look at your first job as your last job," advises Buck to food science graduates.

After 35 years at UMass, Buck will retire at the end of this semester. "I have mixed feelings about retiring," Buck said.

"I think this is a great university. There are incredible opportunities for students," said Buck.

"We'll miss him terribly!" said Clydesdale.

Buck is interested in boating. After many years of boating, his students affectionately named him "the codfather."

The "codfather" is married, and has four children. After this semester, Buck intends to travel to Europe, Hawaii and "see as much of the United States as possible!"

crime, causing poverty, causing drugs, destroying the very basis of our lives."

Speaking of his future in politics, Duke, whose term in the Legislature expires this year, said, "I have no plans — no plans to run for any other office. But I have to say 'at this time.'" There has been speculation he might run for Congress, the Senate, or challenge Bush in some GOP presidential primaries next year.

Hailing Duke's defeat, Republican National Committee Chairman Clayton Yeutter said in Washington that voters of Louisiana "with one pull of the lever, today struck a mighty blow against racism, bigotry, and hatred."

" ... While we at the Republican National Committee do not celebrate a victory for the Democrats," Yeutter said in a statement, "we do happily accept the voters of Louisiana's decision to push away with David Duke, whose ruse did not succeed."

Edwards captured majorities of the vote in areas where Duke had to do well, including the parishes — Louisiana's equivalent of counties — taken by Duke in the Oct. 19 primary.

Police apprehend man after car chase

Compiled by JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Jacob A. Perkins, 18, of Amherst was arrested Thursday night for a number of violations. Police pursued a vehicle which failed to stop at a stop sign. The vehicle then attempted to elude police, and the pursuit continued over several Amherst streets. The vehicle went out of control on Old North Pleasant Street, going onto a sidewalk and striking a parked car. The operator fled the scene on foot and was apprehended behind a fraternity house.

Perkins was charged, among other things, with failure to stop for a police officer, operating to endanger, unlawful speed and malicious danger to real property.

LARCENY

• A man reported to police Thursday night that his leather coat containing his wallet and car keys were stolen while he was playing basketball in Boyden Gymnasium. The estimated value was $280.

SUSPICIOUS VEHICLE

• Eugene L. Facey Jr., 39, of Westfield was arrested by police Thursday afternoon for operating an unlicensed vehicle on an outstanding warrant from State Police.

doing," he said, although he understood the position of the administration.

"I do not believe the administration has pockets full of money to give out," Minutillo said.

He also thought it is unrealistic to demand an agency fee and union recognition, while it is illegal in the state to do so.

"Our labor board could make that change. Once that change is made and GEO is legal, then they can make those demands," he said.

Still, Minutillo says he has nothing against the strikers.

"Many of them feel the strike is the only way to have union demands met," he said. "and if they believe that, and that their demands are fair, then they should strike."

ing point in preventing GEO from finalizing their first union contract.

"We see that problem completely resolved," Isaacs said. "It won't cost them one penny now or at any time to grant us agency fee." She said resolving this issue could end the strike.

"We are forced to believe the only reason they still object to an agency fee is not the money," Isaacs said. "It must be that they want to break this union."

At this time, GEO is trying to convince the University's lawyer, William Searson, who Isaacs called a "known anti-union lawyer," of the possibility of accepting this GEO offer without holding the University liable.

The percentage of graduate employee health fee waivers also remains at issue. Though Pearson would not offer specifics, she said, "I think we are very close to agreement."

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Strike conduct is harmful

It is admirable that the University administration and the Graduate Employee Organization are moving closer to reaching a contract settlement. Not only because the GEO's demands are fair, but because strike tactics on both sides which polarize opinion and force students to take sides are harmful to the University.

Both Whitmore and the GEO are guilty of intimidation tactics and playing undergraduates against each other. While strikes are rarely friendly affairs, the Collegian can not condone those policies of Whitmore or the GEO which intimidate. All members of our community have the right to live and work in peace.

The GEO is angry, and rightfully so, about letters sent by Chancellor Richard O'Brien to graduate students. The letter promised reduced paychecks for those who either did not work or failed to turn in a slip showing whether they worked or not.

The letter also said those graduate employees who indicated they did not work or did not send in the form would lose their tuition waivers and be billed for the remainder of the semester. Although striking workers are not usually paid, those still working must have their rights protected. O'Brien's claim that Whitmore "recognizes the valauble contributions" of graduate students is altogether hollow in this light and shows a lack of respect.

On the other hand, the GEO's strike conduct leaves something to be desired. Surrounding O'Brien and shouting at him, or accosting students who cross picket lines doesn't make the GEO look too good. Undergraduates don't have much choice; their classes continue regardless. They never asked to be caught in the middle.

The Collegian hopes a fair settlement comes about soon, so that these sort of tactics are no longer seen as necessary.

Dear Undergraduates (graduates can read on if they wish but it's really not necessary),

Most of you know me as the "phallic burrito" and the guy who decides the "Graffitti of the Week." But now I'm here to chip in my two cents on. . . what else? The GEO strike.

Right here and now I want you to think about this issue and decide for yourself whether or not to support the strike. Don't be led by the nose by the so-called "undergraduate leaders." Don't let them think and speak for you; think and speak for yourself. Please don't allow yourself to be led blindly through the next few weeks by a bunch of neon stickers and chalk graffitti.

Now let's look at this whole strike thing with our thinking caps on shall we? (Sorry if I sound patronizing, being harassed by GEO strikers all day as I try to attend classes I paid for tends to put me in a mood.)

So, what happens if the GEO loses?

A simple question.

Lots of "quality" teaching assistants will flee in droves from the University. Real loyalty. The quality of education will drop.

What happens if the GEO wins?

Another simple question.

Well, the money spent to pacify the GEO will be bled out of academic departments and a rise in fees. The drain of resources from the academic departments will again lower the quality of education at the University. As for the fees... I'd guess there isn't one undergrad on this campus that doesn't know at least one other undergrad that was forced to drop out by rising costs. For those undergrads barely making it as it is that are forced to drop out next semester due to a rise in fees caused by the GEO strike, that's a real drop in the quality of their education.

It's time to remind ourselves that UMass has a purpose and an important function in this state: to provide higher education at a price working class families can afford. If the GEO wins and the fees go through the roof, I wonder if strikers will take the time to notice the drop in enrollment. I wonder if they will notice which students are missing: the children of the working class.

Then again, why should they care? Few were undergrads at UMass. Emily Isaacs, so-called champion of the working man who said she was going to "decimate" this campus, went to Colgate College (lots o' cash there eh?). They were never one of us, so why should they care about us. Maybe if they say, "We're not striking against the undergraduates" times they'll believe it themselves. Bottom line is that it's our blood they're spilling.

So I ask you to think and think carefully about the strike and where you stand. Don't be fooled into believing the administration has gobs and gobs of cash just lying about in easy to carry shopping bags and have some strange secret reason for not wanting to give it out. I know it's always tempting to bash Whitmore for everything and most of the time the administration deserves it, but not all the time. Even a jerk is right from time to time.

Well, that's what I think after having to fight my way to a class in Bartlett so again I implore you to think. Don't fall into the mob mentality. Think for yourself and speak for yourself, even if you don't agree with me. Just don't allow a few activist "leaders" to be your voice — they're not always on your side.

Sincerely,
Marc Elliott

Letter may be illegal, GEO says

Emily Issacs

Late Friday, Nov. 15, most grad employees received a letter from Chancellor Richard O'Brien demanding graduate employees inform the administration by 12 p.m. on Nov. 19 whether or not they met their contractual obligations during the GEO strike (beginning Nov. 14).

We were informed if we had not met our contractual obligations our pay would be withheld and our tuition and curriculum fee waivers would be revoked. Finally, we were to sign under the penalty of perjury and those who did not respond would have their pay withheld and waivers revoked.

Union lawyers confirm what many graduate employees have pointed out: this mandate is legally questionable because of the demand for self-incrimination and the possibility a given employee would not have received the letter before deadline.

Further, the GEO is considering a class action suit against the administration. There are other reasons why the legality of this demand is questionable, but, perhaps even more importantly, it is clear the letter is insulting to many and threatening to all.

Many perceive this letter as an attempt by the Chancellor to turn graduate students against each other, to have the graduate students to do the work of management. Chancellor O'Brien resorted to this means of discovering the strikers from the non-strikers because department heads and chairs, by in large, refused to do so.

Our advice is this: hold off on signing this letter. Responding to threats like this would set a bad precedent for all of us, strikers and non-strikers. GEO's updated recommendations, legal and political, will be given at every noon and 4 p.m. rally, at the membership meetings (Monday, 9 a.m. and Wednesday, 5 p.m.) and through the "picket captains" located outside Herter, the GRC and Machmer.

While I understand everyone is not convinced of the merits of this strike, it seems clear that this type of management strategy is unacceptable to all.

Although the administration still refuses to meet with us formally, they are meeting with us informally.

On Nov. 14 Chancellor O'Brien told us he had no principled objections to collection of an agency fee. His only concern, he stated, was protecting the University from legal costs in the event any non-member sued the University for collecting a fee.

In response, the GEO / District 65 / UAW offered to indemnify the University; in other words, the UAW will pay all costs — legal fees, damages — if the University is sued. Indemnification clauses are not unusual in union contracts and have been successful in protecting the employer from legal suits.

To date, the University's lawyer, William Searson, has instructed Chancellor O'Brien to reject this offer from the GEO/65/UAW. While this is disappointing, we are working hard to convince the Chancellor that legally the University would not be liable and that thus this would be an acceptable means to resolve the contract and end the strike.

Shared tales of crazy grandmothers

Jared Blaut

I was sitting at brunch yesterday with some floormates of mine when somehow we got on the subject of crazy senior citizens.

These pals o' mine were genuinely amazed at what the elderly of the world are capable of doing. Being from Ft. Lauderdale, nothing they said surprised me all that much because I'm used to seeing 80-year-old bungee jumpers at "Penrod's on the Beach," an establishment where people go get drunk and throw up.

My roommate started off by relating how his grandmother likes to get rip-roaring drunk during holidays. Seeing as how we can't seem to go a week without running into some important occasion like "Arbor Day," one can assume grandma is a pretty fun gal.

"Hey, Grandma. Can I borrow your car so I can go cruise around Boston, go to a few bars, get in a couple fights with some skinheads and then sleep with loose women?" "(hic) Sure, Chris-my-boy! Here, take (hic) fifty bucks."

He also told us a story about the grandmother of a friend of his who believes Jose Canseco is her own personal patron saint of driving. This lady drives around with Canseco's baseball card taped to her sunshield, as if something bad is happening to her a large man with wings and a baseball bat is going to appear and save the day. I wonder if she knows that Jose Canseco isn't dead.

I couldn't sit back and let everyone else talk about their grandparents without mentioning my grandmother, Mrs. Death. Symptoms include the packing away of all possessions in boxes with various relative's names on them so no one argues over who gets what when she dies, which of course is going to happen any day.

Never mind the fact all 500 doctors she has seen said she is okay. Or that grandma is in a constant state of securing new possessions because the old ones keep getting packed away. She's going to die soon, she knows it and she just wants to be prepared.

All this talk about death has made me hungry and — what? No, go away! Please, don't make me do it, everyone else is. Okay, put the gun away, no need to go wacko on me, I — I'll do it.

Music fan worries that the rock heroes of old have given in to the likes of Michael Jackson

Recent events in the music industry are beginning to worry me. Just today, I watched Michael Jackson's new video and frankly, I really think that he has finally snapped. What happened to him? He was such a bad-ass when he was young. His face has been cut up and contorted beyond recognition. His skin has been bleached to some hybrid peaked hue.

And what the hell was that masturbation scene on top of the car? Why is he doing that? He should leave that stuff to Madonna; she's much better at it. And what is his fixation with young males? Is he some sort of Bob Crane sicko pedophile (that's Colonel Hogan to you)? Maybe the pressure of a world that could never quite understand him finally got to him. Who knows?

Furthermore, I'm worried about Axl. I don't think he's going to be around for much longer. He'll probably go out with a needle in his arm.

What happened to the rock heroes of old? Never in a lifetime would you ever see Keith Richards tap dancing on a car while holding his crotch. O.K., bad example.

What happened to Ace Freshley singing shock me in his seven inch leather heels? What happened to real dance music like the Sugarhill Gang? You wouldn't see them doing any of that milktoast M.C. Toolshed crap. Alas, the hard ones are all gone. In the meantime, there is nothing left to do but listen to the new Chili Pepper's disc and anxiously await the next production by the chosen one, Rick Rubin.

Warriors make Rap for all

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

Great hip-hop from the Great White North? Yes, it's the Dream Warriors, a Toronto-based rap duo of West Indian Heritage. Now they have come to The States due to their early-bird success in London with their singles "Wash Your Face in My Sink" and "My Definition of A Boombastic Jazz Style".

Naturally England, a.k.a. the Home of the Weird, has pricked up its ears to this combination of groovy Count Basie and Quincy Jones jazz beats and street-wise, message-laden rhymes. Their sound is familiar, but hard to pin down. First take the deepest lyrics of Pink Floyd and mask it with child-like metaphors. Then mix it with jazz, rap, funk, reggae, and surrealism; a sound akin to De La Soul. Their new album, And the Legacy Begins, is a Whitman's sampler of all of these musical styles. As group member, King Lou explains, "There are, more or less, tracks for every breed of human."

Dream Warriors had their beginnings in Toronto's equivalent of the projects, where Jamaican-born Louis Robinson, aka. King Lou, grew up with Capital Q (the Q is for Quiet Storm), who was born in Trinidad. "Originally, we were a bunch of guys hanging out like a clique or a posse," remembers King Lou. "Some guys would be into smoking, some into stealing, some into making music. But we all hung together." King Lou and Capital Q wrote raps together in school.

Growing up in Toronto indeed helped the Warriors to develop their own style versus being sucked into the hip-hop beat factories of New York and L.A. "I walk with a gold cane/a gold brain/and no gold chain" are lyrics that shun the standard b-boy trappings. Instead of gold chains, King Lou and Capital Q sport long sugar cane staffs from the islands, and write songs about West Indian board games like "Ludi". At the same time, their love for the American role-playing game, Dungeons and Dragons inspired the

Paz Para La Vida
Hampshire College
Tuesday, Nov 12

"We can change the world. We must work for peace. We can teach them how precious it is," were just some of the words heard over the speakers as lights moved over to the photographs of Madre by Lucila San Jose. In one photograph, the silhouette of an expecting mother looked down at the protruding image of the earth which was printed on a simple white T-shirt that she wore.

In this exhibit, Paz Para Vida (Peace for Life), each Latin American artist expressed his and her own deepest thoughts on peace and living. Spotlighting and taped narrations that went along with each piece added intimacy.

A painting by ten-year-old artist, Melody Rubero, portrayed peace through a soldier crying in Soldier Wanting to go Home while Luis E. Flores pictured peace through action. In his Picasso-esque painting, Sadness, a soldier grabbed a gun in his fist. His other hand pressed a dove on the ground. "Peace can only be achieved through political actions," said Flores.

"For me, peace comes from within myself. It comes from a feeling of being content of who I am," were the words of artist, Elizabeth Rivera. Using many symbols, Rivera's mixed media scene encompassed the universe. Flames rose up toward a planet earth that contained many symbols of corruption including drugs, weapons, a tank, and the American flag.

A rainbow encircled the earth which represented "hope for the world". Rivera's concept of hope lies in the ability to accept others. On one side of the earth, a three-leafed clover made of red hearts represented love through symbols of heterosexuality and homosexuality. "You don't have to accept homosexuality," said Rivera. "Just leave them alone." Above the earth was a five pointed star. Images of world leaders of different culture and race took the place at each of the star's points. "Everyone has a different political view," said Rivera. "Leaders are the ones who can make a difference in the world."

In the center of the star was a drawing of Christ. "Although not everyone believes in Christ," said Rivera, "He duo the psychedelic "Twelve Sided Dice".

The Dream Warriors' appreciation of the music is certainly genuine. They teamed in 1990 with NY-based jazz rappers, Gang Starr, on the track, "I Lost My Ignorance And I Don't Know Where to Find It." And, in a historic session, the Dream Warriors collaborated with legendary jazz pianist/singer/composer Slim Gaillard on what turned out to be the last recording before his passing early in 1991. Gaillard was the hard-working surrealist who once invented a rap language of his very own. This style, that he called "Vout" was showcased in the b-side of the Dream Warriors' "Ludi."

"Dream Warriors wasn't conceived to be like a dance group or a fad thing," explains Lou. "It was made to be sticky and long-lasting." See for yourself tonight, for free along with opening band, The Coalition.

brought peace to the world. He was non-violent and humble. If everyone followed his role, there would be peace in the whole world."

Rivera's faith in toleration extends to the humbling belief in life on other planets. This is signified by a human-like creature hovering away from earth. "I believe that there are other systems of life besides what we have here," said Rivera.

Below this star stood a nude female figure with her arms outstreched. "This represents myself," said Rivera. From behind, a flying dove's outstretched wings mirrored the figure's gesture. Rivera's words on this mandala concluded with, "I want my peace to be my gift to life."

Elegance from the Orient

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

There's a well-kept secret in Sunderland that many UMass students would do well to discover. The Goten, a Japanese restaurant and bar tucked between Old Amherst Road and Rte. 116 offers student diners an elegant and affordable alternative.

The grounds contain several beautifully landscaped Japanese gardens, and Rte. 116 travelers enter via a lane lined with glowing lanterns. For students, there is a convenient bus stop located right outside the Old Amherst Road Entrance.

DINING OUT

Owner Toyoko DiRusso has operated Goten for 18 years, and has watched it grow from a tiny bar to a large restaurant with two spacious dining rooms. She graciously allowed a review during Goten's eighteen-year anniversary celebration. DiRusso said Goten celebrates an anniversary from Nov. 14-16 every year. A smiling, pleasant older Japanese woman, DiRusso said she puts her heart into her restaurant, but somehow, still finds time to be active in her local community. Three days a week DiRusso teaches children at the Sunderland Elementary School about Japanese culture.

Once inside, depending on one's reservation time, one might have time to sit at the bar and try a Goten special, a blended concoction made from slow gin, triple-sec, fruit juices and crushed ice that comes in a large goblet garnished with a saucy oriental umbrella, or one might go a more conservative route and order a Kirin, an imported Japanese beer.

Since I was driving, I opted for a beer, rather than the heavy duty Goten special, and Amy, since she was photographing, opted for a Coca-Cola. I found Kirin to be a pleasantly light and mellow beer. It went down smoothly, without the acidic bitterness I often associate with American beers.

We were led to our table by a young Asian waitress dressed in a beautiful blue kimono covered with pink flowers. Amy and I opened our menus and quickly discovered why UMass students should put Goten on their list of week-end options. Goten offers a two-for-one special every night but Saturdays. Considering the regular entres range from $11.00 to $20.00, unless one has recently received a generous donation from home, the specials are definitely the way to go for most student budgets.

The specials are combinations taken from the regular menu and include two options, the shrimp-and-scallop dinner, two for eighteen dollars, or, for those who like their protein on-the-hoof, the teriyaki steak-and-chicken combination, which was slightly more moderate at two for fifteen dollars.

Both specials include a tasty Japanese soup, a clear dashi, or broth, with cut mushrooms and chopped scallions floating on top. The salad was a small bowl of crisp iceberg lettuce drenched in a special Goten dressing that made iceberg lettuce, something I usually leave sitting, quite tasty.

The best part of Goten is the show put on by the chef, who actually prepares your meal at your table. Each table seats 8 to 12 people, with a large grill built into the center. Our chef, a young Asian man named Tom, tossed and clicked his blades with the grace of a skilled juggler, twirling razor sharp cleavers the way cheerleaders twirl batons.

Amy's favorite was the shrimp appetizer. She said, "I liked the shrimp a lot, and I'm not usually big on shrimp, to be honest, but these were really excellent. They tasted really fresh."

We chose the steak/chicken special, which also included stir-fried noodles and bean sprouts. Tom chopped, diced and stir-fried everything in front of our eyes. It was an amazing performance. Nothing was dropped, splashed or burned. The noodles were perfectly fried, with crispy vegetables seasoned with tamari, lemon, and sesame seeds. The meats were similarly seasoned and were also perfectly cooked, tasty and tender.

For dessert, Goten offers ginger ice cream, a treat not to be missed by frozen dairy fans. Amy and I gave it and Goten a definite thumbs-up.

UNIVERSITY STORE EMPLOYEES AND RELATIVES ARE INELIGIBLE

Dear Grad Employee,

The letter sent by Chancellor O'Brien to you has been examined by the 65/UAM attorneys who have found:

1. The letter intimidates and coerces people from exercising their rights of assembly, association and petition as guaranteed by the United States Constitution and the Declaration of Rights of the Massachusetts Constitution. Under the U.S. Civil RIghts Act of 1983 and the Mass. Civil Rights Act, any party whose constitutional rights are violated can sue for injunctive and compensatory damages. The union's attorneys are preparing to go into court immediately for such relief.

2. The University's threat not to pay people who did meet their contractual obligations but who do not return the form is a violation of Chapter 148, section 149 of the Mass. General Laws. Each violation of this law subjects the violator (the University) to a fine of $100-1000 and/or two months imprisonment.

Based on the above, please do not return the form attached to O'Brien's letter. We also ask that you sign off on and send back the following statement instead:

Dear Chancellor O'Brien:

I am unable to return the form as requested because I believe that request is a violation of my civil and constitutional rights, and otherwise illegal.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The spotlight is on financial projects, opportunities and advantages. Concentrate on essential tasks and the days will go well. Team efforts boost profits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Emotions run high now. Do not appear overly anxious or you will sap someone's confidence. A long-sought career goal moves within reach. Share the spotlight with those who have the stood by you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An excellent day to get out of the house and socialize. The atmosphere at work improves, thanks to the positive efforts of others. Use the power of suggestion to defuse a difficult situation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Follow a suggestion made yesterday and you will reap fine rewards tomorrow. Although a work relationship is sensitive, harmony should reign by mid-afternoon. Romance flourishes!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Aim to improve and perfect a love relationship. An element of newness gives you something to build on now. Put exercise and good nutrition at the top of your priority list.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be skeptical if someone claims to have inside investment knowledge. You need to obtain more information about a real estate manner. Joint ownership could pose several problems.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The financial picture looks brighter today. Those who hold the purse strings are generous. Take your time when making a decision that will affect both your personal and professional lives.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You get an unexpected opportunity to boost your career and prestige today. Higher-ups are relying on you for up-to-date facts and figures. Call their attention to important new data.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A professional or personal relationship moves closer to fulfilling your expectations. Compliment someone who has helped you in meaningful ways. Give family members extra attention.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Contacting people at a distance proves very rewarding today. You and potential allies can come to terms. Make certain no appointments are overlooked. Romance is more exciting than in the past.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may feel moody or frustrated about something this morning. Avoid making overly vehement statements. Self-improvement activities help chase away the blues. Build up your work skills.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be wary of getting drawn into office gossip. Conversation could get away too heavy, making career advancement seem an uphill battle. Stay on your toes, play by the book.

Software Design Engineers and Program Managers

A meeting you'll never forget.

Suddenly, there you are.

Face to face with the opportunity of a lifetime...and the implications are enormous. Your ideas, your code, power exciting new releases. Products designed to revolutionize the future of personal computing.

Our Software Design Engineers and Program Managers are well-equipped. We arm them with everything they need to do their best work, including full creative authority, and the freedom of our unique, unstructured environment.

As a Software Design Engineer, you design, develop and implement personal computer applications and systems software using the most advanced tools in the business.

You design software on 80386, 80486, RISC- and 680X0-based machines connected to XENIX (R), MS-DOS, and OS/2 file servers.

As a Program Manager, you are responsible for the product from initial concept to release. You drive the product through design and development: specification, coding, testing, and documentation.

You deal with all the details necessary to get the best possible product out the door on time. You'll learn your product category inside and out, research competitors' offerings, and examine user needs.

If you are about to graduate with a Bachelor's, Master's or PhD degree in Computer Science, Electrical Engineering, Math, Physics or a related discipline and you have programming experience, design skills and/or exposure to project management, we want to talk with you at our On-campus Interviews. It's a meeting you'll never forget.

We are an equal opportunity employer and are working toward a more culturally diverse workplace.

Spring 1992 Conservation Courses in the Department of Forestry & Wildlife Management

Wildlife and Their Environment
WFBIO 197A
Natural history of New England and international fish and wildlife, evolutionary relationships, animal ecology and distribution in the environment, and human-wildlife interactions. Students encouraged to experience natural history first-hand and to read classic books on wildlife natural history and natural historians.
Time: TuTh 4:00—5:15
Instructor: Todd K. Fuller

Fundamentals of Applied Ecology
FOREST 190A
Introduction to the principles of ecology, including the structure and dynamics of populations, communities, and ecosystems. Application of ecological principles to current problems in natural resources management and conservation, including topics such as conservation of rare and endangered species, management of fire in forest ecosystems, climate-vegetation interactions, and biological control of insect pest populations.
Time: TuTh 9:30—10:45; plus discussion section.
Instructor: Matthew J. Kelty
Course has Gen Ed designation of Biological Science (BS).

Wildlife Conservation
WFBIO 261
Wildlife management, conservation, and stewardship, ecological processes, animal behavior, habitat interactions, population dynamics, human dimensions of wildlife conservation. Prerequisite: Intro . biology course.
Time: TuTh 11:15—12:30
Instructor: Todd K. Fuller

New Courses!

Global Conservation: Race To Save The Planet
NAREST 190A
Global environmental issues: world population growth, environmental politics, hazardous waste, global warming and acid rain, renewable energy resources, recycling, tropical deforestation, wilderness preservation and other topics.

Minutemen falter at Villanova, 24-14

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

VILLANOVA, Pa. — Turnovers have hurt the University of Massachusetts all season and Saturday at Villanova Stadium in front of 6,100 fans, they plagued the Minutemen again, as the Wildcats converted three UMass miscues into 21 points and rolled to a 24-14 victory which earned them a share of the Yankee Conference crown.

Turnover number one came with just :43 to play in the first half and UMass leading 7-0. UMass quarterback Dave McGovern fumbled when he was hit by Andy Cobaugh, while scrambling away from a fierce Villanova pass rush which recorded four sacks. Kevin Long recovered the loose ball at the UMass 42.

From there, Villanova quarterback Tom Colombo, (15-25, 217 yards, two touchdowns and two interceptions) hit Vernon Smith over the middle at the UMass 12. Three plays later, Colombo lofted a pass to the corner of the end zone where Harold Hart hauled it in for the touchdown with just nine seconds remaining.

The touchdown not only tied the game at 7-7, but more importantly, it gave Villanova the momentum going into the lockeroom.

"The turnover at the end of the half really hurt us bad," said UMass coach Jim Reid. "We just didn't hang on to the football when we should have. We had problems with turnovers."

The Minutemen took a 7-0 lead early in the first half when Jerome Bledsoe eluded a tackler in the backfield, then broke a tackle at the line of scrimmage before racing 44 yards for his ninth touchdown of the season.

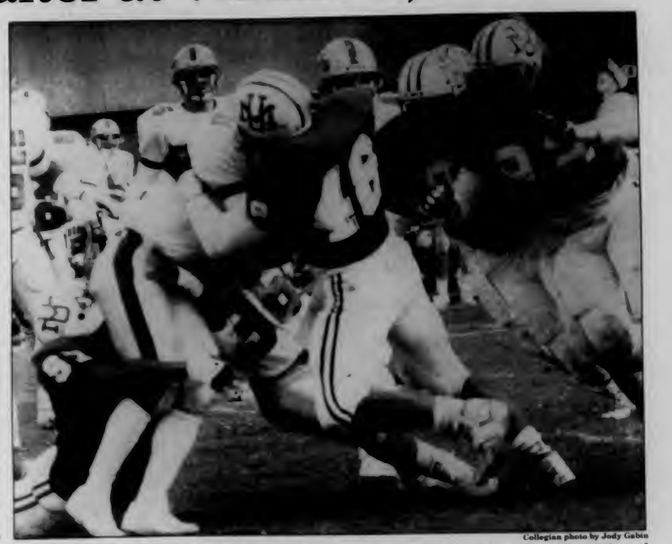
Bledsoe rushed for 181 yards on 32 carries, the ninth week in a row he has gone over 100 yards on the ground. He needs 195 yards rushing against New Hampshire next weekend to break Garry Pearson's all-time UMass rushing record of 1,631 set in 1982.

Turnover number two came late in the third quarter when fullback Mike George (11 carries for 87 yards) lost the ball at midfield and the momentum, which UMass had retook five plays earlier (a Lance Neveling interception) permanently.

Villanova linebacker Philip DiMaria fell on the ball and five plays later, Colombo threw a 36-yard touchdown pass to Hart. Hart made a spectacular catch, as Don Caparotti was right on top of him.

"It was a perfect pass," Caparotti said. "The guy made a great catch."

Trailing 17-7, Reid sent Paul Tornatore in to try and bring the team back. But on his first pass, Tornatore overthrew Lamar Newsome and Long picked off the pass and scampered 27 yards for the third Wildcat touchdown of the afternoon.



Collegian photo by Jody Gabin

The University of Massachusetts could not stick with Villanova Saturday as they were defeated 24-14.

"This game typifies our season," Reid said. "Penalties at the wrong time. Turnovers. No production from the quarterback position. We gave them some points."

Bledsoe scored his too-little, too-late 10th touchdown of the year on a 1-yard burst with just :31 to play in the game, to close the gap to 24-14.

The loss dropped UMass to 4-6, 3-4 in the Yankee Conference, and improved the Wildcats to 9-1, 7-1. Villanova earned a share of the conference crown with Delaware who is also 7-1.

If New Hampshire beats UMass on Saturday, then it too will earn a piece of the Beanpot.

"I can't tell you how proud of this team I am," Colombo, a Brockton native said. "It felt especially good to win the championship against a team from my home state."

■ men's soccer

it may hurt the state's efforts to host the event because of the lack of community support for soccer.

In a conversation with the Boston Globe's Scot Lehigh, Stephen Sampson, an assistant to World Cup USA 1994, confirmed that elimination of the UMass soccer team could hurt Massachusetts' chances of attracting the games. "That would be a fair statement," he said.

On Friday, Senate Minority Leader David H. Locke voiced his opinion to the Massachusetts Senate for the retention of the soccer program.

"When looking at ways to trim operating costs, the UMass Board of Trustees should consider principally the impact of their cuts on the student body," Locke said.

"It is patently unfair," he said, "to ask students who pay more than $400,000 in tuition and fees to the University to lose programs such as athletics, when I would suspect cuts can be made in administrative accounts that will have much less impact on the quality of student life."

If Massachusetts was selected to host the World Cup, it could provide the stagnant state economy with a much-needed boost. All host sites will get possibly as many as six games and at least three.

"The presence of the World Cup in the Bay State will mean an estimated $97 million in revenues for local businesses, including businesses related to tourism," Locke said.

The University of Massachusetts Men's Soccer Association, which is directed by players' parents and concerned parties and formed during the summer, has drafted a budget for the program in 1992, which was submitted to Frank McInerney, the Director of the Department of Athletics on Oct. 11. The total funding needed for the program to compete in the Atlantic 10 Conference next season is $40,583.

Sampson also stated to the Boston Globe, "As the organizing committee, our mission is not only to have the best World Cup in history, but also to leave a legacy for soccer in the United States.

"With respect to the legacy, the dropping of the soccer program at the University of Massachusetts does not bode well for the attitude of the state or the playing area as part of the legacy."

UMass President E.K. Fretwell, in a letter to Albert Bleau, President of the UMass Soccer Association, wrote, ". . . I have the greatest sympathy for your position and that of the other supporters. On the other hand, in the present budget crunch not all things that the University would like to fund are possible. Each campus Chancellor has the responsibility of funding those activities which in his/her view are of top priority."

UMass Chancellor Richard O'Brien said yesterday he was working on a formal statement concerning the matter and was not prepared to comment.

Gordon Oakes, the chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees said yesterday, "I can't comment except that I asked the Governor's office to take another look at it."

Locke also pointed out to to the Senate that the Legislature recently appropriated $4 million for the Hynes Convention Center, as part of a package to promote tourism in Massachusetts.

"If we can give the Hynes, a facility of questionable merit, $4 million for a potential $8 million payoff in state tourism," Locke said, "shouldn't the state's anchor University be able to fund a $100,000 collegiate soccer program that will not only benefit its students, but produce a potential $97 million boost for our economy through tourism?"

Jets stop Vaughn at 1, Patriots late rally, win sixth of year, 28-21

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The New York Jets stopped Jon Vaughn's run from the 1 with one second left and clung to one very nerve-wracking victory Sunday.

It was the final stunner in a fourth quarter filled with surprises as the Jets hung on for a 28-21 win over the New England Patriots after squandering a 21-0 lead after three quarters.

The Patriots had rallied for three touchdowns in 10 minutes. An instant replay reversal giving Vaughn a 2-yard scoring run, his second of the day, made the score 21-14 with 2:16 left.

Ken O'Brien then threw in his own surprise, a winning touchdown pass to offensive lineman Trevor Matich, who had lined up at tight end, with 57 seconds left.

But the Patriots, starting from their 27, moved to a first down at the Jets' 8 with 12 seconds left on a 16-yard pass from Hugh Millen to Irving Fryar.

After an incompletion, Millen hit Greg McMurtry for a 7-yard gain with :01 left. McMurtry fumbled reaching out for the goal line, and New York's James hasty recovered. But officials ruled the ground caused the fumble and the Patriots called their last timeout.

Vaughn, a seldom-used rookie, then ran behind the left side of the line, but was buried by a swarm of Jets as time ran out.

The win revived playoff hopes as the Jets (6-5) won for the fifth time in seven games. They had lost a week earlier to previously winless Indianapolis. The Patriots (3-8) sustained their fourth straight loss.

O'Brien threw for 309 yards and three touchdowns, the final one to Matich, the Patriots' first-round draft choice in 1985 who has played every line position for New York and is the third-string tight end.

After Vaughn tied the game, the Jets took the ball on their 29 and O'Brien took over. He completed all five passes on the six-play drive, starting with a 21-yarder to Al Toon.

He then hit Freeman McNeil for 4 yards before McNeil raced 23 yards to the New England 23.

Completions to Toon of 7 and 13 yards moved the ball to the 3. O'Brien rolled to the right and threw back toward the middle of the end zone, where Matich was all alone. He clutched his first NFL scoring catch.

The Patriots' comeback had begun when Millen threw a 56-yard scoring pass to Fryar with 12:01 left in the fourth quarter on a one-play drive. With 4:28 left, Vaughn ran for a 3-yard score.

On the first play after the ensuing kickoff, Brad Baxter fumbled after a 3-yard gain and Brent Williams recovered at the New York 17-yard line.

On the fourth play, with the ball at the 2, Vaughn slipped as he cut toward the end zone and rolled over the goal line.

Free safety Erik McMillan rolled over him, and the officials ruled that Vaughn was touched at the 1. But an instant replay reversal gave Vaughn the tying touchdown.

The Jets had scored one touchdown in each of the first three quarters on A.B. Brown's 1-yard run, O'Brien's 7-yard pass to Chris Burkett and his 35-yard pass play to Terence Mathis. They were the first NFL touchdowns for Brown and Mathis.

Shiite kidnappers free two hostages

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Shiite Muslim kidnappers freed British hostage Terry Waite and American Thomas Sutherland yesterday, and Waite said the remaining three Americans held hostage in Lebanon would be released by month's end.

"Terry Waite and I are very happy to have received our first gulps of Lebanon and Syrian fresh air, but we have to wait to tomorrow to meet the sunshine," said a joyous Sutherland on his arrival from Beirut.

Their release by the group Islamic Jihad, or Holy War, was a dramatic advance toward ending the hostage ordeal. The United Nations has been leading diplomatic efforts to gain freedom for Western hostages in Lebanon in exchange for the release of Arab detainees held by Israel.

Sutherland and Waite's release raised speculation that the Israelis may have made a committment to free Sheik Abdul-Karim Obeid.

Waite said at a news conference that his captors told him before they set him free that American hostages Joseph Ciccipio and Alann Steen would be released within the next five days, and Terry Anderson by the end of the month.

He said he did not know when the three remaining hostages — two Germans and an Italian — would be released. U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said all should be freed by Christmas.

Waite and Sutherland indicated they had been chained to a wall day in and day out for most of their captivity, and that they depended on each other for comfort and company.

Waite said that one captor came to tell them yesterday afternoon they would be released. "He also said to me, 'We apologize for having captured you.' They recognized that now this was the wrong thing to do, that holding hostages achieves no useful, constructive purpose."

Sutherland said he and the others were "humbled" by learning over the past few months of the support the hostages had worldwide.

Of Anderson, the longest-held hostage, Sutherland said: "He's a man who should never have been kidnapped," adding that Anderson had just been doing his job as a journalist.

Sutherland's daughter Joan watched her father's news confrence on an airport television in Portland, Ore., then boarded a plane to reunite with him.

"He looks wonderful!" she shrieked.

"He looks just like he did before. I just can't believe how good he looks."

British officials said Waite would be taken late last night to Cyprus to spend the night before returning to England today. Sutherland's plans were not known.

Waite, 52, who had successfully negotiated the release of other Western detainees in Iran and Lebanon, came to Beirut in 1987 to try to free Americans held by the Iranian-allied Islamic Jihad. He was kidnapped himself, and held for nearly five years.

Sutherland, 60, was the hostage held the second-longest, only a few months less than Associated Press chief Middle East corrospondent Terry Anderson, who also is held by Islamic Jihad.

At least six hostages remain and Perez de Cuellar said they all should be home in time for Christmas.

Decisive GEO vote: the strike will continue

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

About 600 members of the Graduate Employee Organization overwhelmingly voted yesterday to continue the strike in order to finalize their first union contract, according to a top GEO official who said only 23 dissented in the hand vote.

Both the GEO and the University of Massachusetts administration also engaged in negotiations as graduate employees rallied and picketed around major teaching sites on campus.

"The membership is confident that striking is the means to obtain what they need," said GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs at a press conference after the membership meeting. Both sides have not agreed on the union's demand of weekly dues collections for graduate employees who aren't union members and the percentage of health fee waivers.

"It seems that ending the strike is in [Chancellor Richard O'Brien's] hands," Isaacs said.

She also has requested graduate employees not return a form mailed to graduates last week from O'Brien. The form requests graduate employees to indicate if they are working or not. If they don't return to work, they will lose their paychecks for the week and tuition and curriculum fee waivers for the remainder of the fall semester.

Isaacs called the letter "illegal and unconstitutional." According to lawyers from GEO's parent union, United Auto Workers, the letter from O'Brien intimidates and coerces people. The union's attorneys are prepared to take this issue to court, according to GEO materials.

In addition, UAW legal findings declare that the University's threat not to pay people who did obey their contract but did not return the form violates state General Laws. The findings say each violation of this law subjects the University to fine of $100 to $1000 and/or two months' imprisonment.

Instead, GEO has encouraged graduate employees to return the following statement to O'Brien: I am unable to return the form as requested because I believe that request is a violation of civil and constitutional rights, and otherwise illegal.

One graduate student who refused to identify herself said that in protest she stole 44 completed forms that had been turned in by graduate employees yesterday from the payroll office where the forms are being collected. She emphasized that she was not a GEO member and that she took the completed forms in order "to make [O'Brien's] letter not work."

The GEO has also offered to the administration to pay all legal fees and damages through the UAW if the University is sued for offerering GEO the union benefit of agency fee — collection of dues ($1 a week) for non-members. The four other campus unions have agency fee.

Isaacs said if the administration agrees to this proposal, the strike would end. "This is a simple, easy, quick way to settle the strike and get the undergraduates back into the classroom," states a GEO press release.

In addition, some undergraduates are trying to use GEO's struggle to get a fair contract as a springboard to a revitalization of undergraduate activism.

David Gagne, president of the Student Government Association, said students will only mobilize to pressure the administration to settle this conflict if the strike continues for an extended time.

"Most people don't care until it directly affects them," he said. "I think undergraduates are either uninformed, ignorant or haven't been directly affected."

According to the Associated Press, the state this year cut aid to the campus by 12.5 percent to $112 million. Also, the University raised the mandatory student fees from $1,932 to $2,811.

Members of the Graduate Employee Organization meet in front of Herter Hall yesterday.

MSP may help grads

By KIMBERLEY REYNOLDS
Collegian Correspondent

Officials of the Massachusetts Society of Professors will be recommending to its membership that it ask Chancellor Richard O'Brien to withdraw his threat to withhold salaries of graduate student employees. Professors may also stage a sympathy action with the Graduate Employee Organization.

"The members of the MSP are very angry about this letter, it certainly will not settle the strike and may even be unconstitutional," said David Lenson, president of the MSP.

"We will discuss a sympathetic action if the letter is not withdrawn," added Lenson. While Lenson did not verify it, this action might be a strike by MSP workers at the University.

In his letter of November 15, Chancellor O'Brien requested each graduate employee indicate whether he/she fulfilled his/her graduate student employment for the period of Nov. 11-15. Those students who indicated they were involved in the strike and those who fail to return the letter will receive a reduced paycheck on November 22nd, will no longer have an employment contract with the University, and will receive a bill for tuition and curriculum fees for the remainder of the fall semester unless he or she returns to work by Tuesday, November 19th.

The MSP's announcement was delivered during a meeting last night of undergraduate students supporting the GEO. Picketing by undergraduates is scheduled today from 2:30 to 3:00 p.m. at the Whitmore ramp. A loosely-organized group of undergraduate students discussed formation of some sort of "undergraduate student union."

According to Johnathan Hymer, a junior STPEC and history major, "we are seeking a unified approach as undergrads to deal with raised fees, budget cuts, and various other undergraduate concerns."

The small group met at the Cape Cod Lounge, and discussed plans for supporting the GEO through picketing, telephoning, and letter-writing.

Chalk will be distributed for marking on sidewalks. This activity has led police to question several protesters, asking for students' identification or a driver's license. The organizers will be in touch with legal services to determine the validity of police requests.

"We want the GEO to win so that Whitmore will know that grad students' demands need to be met, maybe then they will more responsive to undergraduate needs," said Liz Plass, a member of the group. "We will be having more meetings to support the GEO."

Wampanoags elect tribal leader

GAY HEAD, Mass. (AP) — The Wampanoag tribe of Gay Head, a federally-recognized Indian tribe, elected a new chairman and ruling council at its annual meeting.

Beverly M. Wright became the fourth woman to head the tribal council since it was incorporated in 1972. She replaced Donal Widdiss, who served two two-year terms.

Wright was elected Sunday by a 73-32 vote over Widdiss. Matthew Vanderhoop, a natural resource planner for the tribe, collected 38 votes.

After a 15-year struggle that included land court battles for native lands, the tribe was federally recognized in 1987, enabling it to receive housing, health and developmental assistance.

The 500-member tribe hold elections yearly. Under the new constitution that came with federal recognition, all 11 elected tribal council seats came up for a vote this year.

The tribe's ruling body was completely transformed with Sunday's vote, prompting some members to call for constitutional revisions to prevent future destabilizing changes.

Wright said some revisions may be necessary, but said she was pleased by the broad participation in the voting.

"Today showed we can come together and take part even if the process is rough around the edges," Wright said. "Our priorities are health, education, and economic development. We are going to move ahead."

"Tip" O'Neill still a storyteller

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly five years out of office, former House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Jr. hasn't lost his storytelling talents.

At a testimonial last week, O'Neill ruefully reflected on fleeting fame. It seems he was boarding a plane to fly to Akron, Ohio, to plug the paperback version of his memoir, "Man of the House."

As was customary when he was speaker, O'Neill waited to be the last to board the plane, assuming he would be in seat 1-A. But a stewardess told him there was no first class on the flight and O'Neill would be in Row 18.

"There was a girl sitting there who said, `I hear we're waiting for someone famous to get on the plane. Do you know who it is?' " O'Neill recalled.

"I have no idea," the former speaker replied.

"What do you do?" the girl asked?

"I'm a book salesman."

"How's it going?"

"First day on the job," O'Neill replied. "I'm flying out to Akron today."

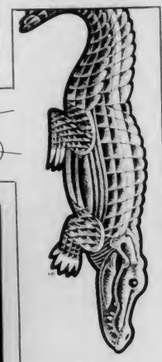
O'Neill's daughter, Susan O'Neill, who attended the luncheon, said family members want Tip to write another book, "with all the stories he didn't tell in the first one."

Certainly O'Neill remains in demand even if some air travelers don't recognize him. He said hardly a day goes by that he doesn't get several calls from graduate students working on papers on James Michael Curly, the legendary mayor of Boston.

Looking out at a room full of younger faces, O'Neill said he was sorry he didn't see some of his old cronies who inhabited some of his best stories. "Maybe I've outlasted them all," he said.

Deer enters, flees home

Injured doe crashes through window



LYNNFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A deer crashed into the living room of a home here, lurched its way into the kitchen and then toward the laundry room before it made an exit through a window in the family room.

The town of Lynnfield's dog officers have tried to find the deer, which was apparently gashed by broken glass. But Jean Procurol, one of the officers, said yesterday that the animal had not been seen since Saturday's incident at the home of Kathy and Joseph Diaz.

Mrs. Diaz said she was loading her dishwasher around noon that day when she heard glass shatter.

"It just went on and on," she said "I thought it would never stop."

Diaz, alone in the downstairs part of the house, hurried down the hallway to the living room, where she came face to face with a disoriented doe.

The deer couldn't stand up in the hallway because of the slippery floor and struggled its way into the kitchen. The deer tried to mount the dishwasher and broke its door. The animal knocked over the trash and then headed for the laundry room, where it jarred loose a wall-mounted storage shelf containing laundry detergent, a coffee maker and a jar of change.

"Everything came tumbling down and she tore into the glassware and broke all that," Mrs. Diaz said.

But by the time Lynnefield police officers arrived moments later, the deer had fled through a window in the family room at the rear of the house.

Mrs. Diaz was uninjured, but the deer left some blood in the house.

Advocacy Network still unrecognized

Group's contributions ignored by UM

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Correspondent

For 37 years, the all-volunteer Advocacy Network has helped the mentally retarded in western Massachusetts. Only recently, however, has the Commonwealth recognized the Network's accomplishments.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, board chairperson of the Advocacy Network, says many, including the University of Massachusetts administration, still don't recognize the Network.

"Through the years, the Advocacy Network has been closely involved with thousands of UMass students who have participated in the long-standing and successful Boltwood Project," Ricci said.

"Unfortunately, UMass officials — to this day — fail to recognize the good that these students do in the real world to help the mentally retarded. This angers me."

The Boltwood Project is one of the many projects which Advocacy Network uses to benefit the mentally retarded in western Massachusetts. It is through this project that students are able to help retarded people.

"Without the students of UMass, the Boltwood Project would not exist," said Ricci, a former physiology professor at the University. "The time that they volunteer is so special and so beneficial to these people. They have helped us tremendously over the years."

In 1972, Advocacy Network (then known as the Belchertown Friends Association), filed a class action suit in state court, charging that the First, Fifth, Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments of the mentally retarded at the Belchertown State School were violated.

"The conditions at the School were absolutely atrocious," Ricci said. "Something had to be done — the facilities were dirty, we had unlicensed medical doctors and nurses and the mentally retarded were not treated with the respect they deserved as human beings."

Ricci said without the help of UMass students, Advocacy Network's victory in court would not have been possible.

"Throughout the whole ordeal, the students were always right there, writing editorials, protesting on campus and even speaking to the Governor at the State House," Ricci said.

"Because of the students' hard work, the mentally retarded can now live in their own homes (four or less people). They can live life like any normal human being and that makes them feel good about themselves."

However, Ricci said he is still dismayed that Advocacy Network and its student volunteers from UMass are not recognized by the University.

"These administrators have their heads in the clouds," Ricci said. "It is one of the greatest tragedies in the history of UMass that these administrators cannot even thank these students for their contributions to the community and the University. It is absolutely inexcusable.

"Many students have changed their career goals after working with the Network on the Boltwood Project," he continued. "The administrators completely missed the boat with student involvement in the real world.

"They fail to recognize the fact that what students are involved with outside the University greatly affects their life. Through this outside involvement, they are able to give a lot back to UMass," Ricci said.

Advocacy Network is supposed to be listed as an approved agency by Commonwealth of Massachusetts Employees Contribution (COMEC) this fall for the first time in 37

Public school funds unequal

Per pupil expenditures vary with property tax rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — The traditional method of financing public education through local property taxes is being challenged in courtrooms and state legislatures because of the disparity it produces in dollars and opportunities for pupils.

"We can't help kids dream through money, but we can help them dream through experience — and money buys that," says George Towery, principal of Cameron Elementary School in Alexandria, Va.

Americans traditionally have taken pride in local control and financing of public schools. But heavy reliance on local property taxes produces fiscal inequalities because the tax base is not distributed equally across school districts.

Lawsuits are pending in more than 20 states charging fundamental unfairness in educational opportunity because of economic disparity, according to the Educational Commission of the State.

Over the past 2 1/2 years, courts in Kentucky, Montana, Texas and New Jersey have declared the state educational systems unconstitutional and ordered that spending between affluent and poor districts be equalized.

The battle continues in some of those states. New Jersey still is trying to come up with ways to equalize its system. In Montana, a group of poorer school districts has launched a new challenge to the revamped financing system.

"Each state is unique, but the major thing is there is a tremendous difference in the quality of education in some districts relative to other districts," said Richard G. Salmon, a public finance specialist at Virginia Tech. "Kids are dramatically affected because of where they may reside."

Property-poor districts usually have low expenditures per pupil even with high tax rates, while districts with affluent residents and high property values have high expenditures per pupil — even with lower school tax rates.

New Jersey's affluent Princeton area last year raised $8,346 per student, using a tax rate of 67 cents per $100 of assessed property value. Poorer areas have less money for salaries, books, instruction and other resources.

Other examples abound:

• In Illinois, $2,100 is spent per student in the most impoverished school district while the wealthiest spends more than $12,000. The state average per pupil is $4,500.

• The average per-pupil expenditure in Maryland was $5,054 during 1989-90. Yet, Caroline County spent $4,049 per pupil, while Montgomery, the state's wealthiest county, spent $6,629.

• In Ohio, there is a $2,000 per-pupil difference between the highest and lowest spending districts.

Israeli author to lecture at UMass

Horrific realities of the AIDS virus discussed

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

Dr. Harold P. Katner stunned last night's audience with the terrifying visual realities of the AIDS virus.

Katner, an AIDS specialist and practicing physician who has cared for over 300 AIDS patients, spoke last night to a half-empty Mahar auditorium.

He gave the usual statistics: 1.5 million infected with the virus in the United States, one out of every hundred persons is HIV-positive. The majority of us seem to have become immune to statistics.

However, Katner brought these empty figures crashing into reality with picture after picture of his patients at varying stages of the disease, documenting with horrific clarity the progression from minor irritations: lesions on the tongue or back, to grotesque and terrifying weeping sores covering entire genital regions and faces.

Katner showed pictures of AIDS patients reunited one last time with what remained of their families, he read to the audience the last letter of an infected mother to her two tiny sons.

"Every time I turn around I see another family, another child, another person, that looks like you, like me," Katner said.

Katner described the virus as "a mutation machine," and said that cures and vaccinations at this time are a virtual impossibility due to the constant transmutation of the disease once established within the body.

One of the most terrifying things about the disease, he said, is that not only is it virtually impossible to maintain an overview of an epidemic which changes so fast, but also the disease attacks cells from the inside, while antibodies attack disease from the outside: "How are they going to get inside?" Katner asked.

"I'm afraid you have to see someone die of AIDS before you change your behavior," Katner said, admitting that AIDS was merely an extremely interesting virus, for him as a physician, until he came face to face with the tragic realities.

"Help us fight this horrible disease before it destroys us," Katner implored. "I don't know if this is the answer, I don't know if education is going to work."

If last night's meager attendance is anything on which to base an opinion, perhaps Katner is right to wonder about the power of education.

William Kennedy Smith

'Tabloid news' part of the story

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Television's "tabloid news" shows have not only heavily covered the story of alleged rape at the Kennedy estate, they've repeatedly become part of the story and the legal case.

From one show's "re-creation" of the alleged rape — using actors, mysterious footage from inside the estate and narration from a Palm Beach police officer — to last week's trespassing charge against a free-lance cameraman who had done work for another, the popular syndicated shows keep making news and spurring legal motions and judicial actions.

"It is affecting us, in terms of our access to the courts," said Steven Brill, who heads the new Courtroom Television Network. Brill, whose network is providing coverage of the case to up to 6 million cable subscribers across the nation, said "it's absolutely outrageous" that the tabloid antics aren't drawing stronger protests from news organizations.

The Palm Beach Post described the tabloid TV competition as "the how-low-can-this-go derby."

"The techniques that the tabloid TV shows use are scary," Post executive editor Edward Sears said.

One result has been some new limitations on coverage of jury selection, which continued yesterday for the trial of William Kennedy Smith, nephew of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass). Circuit Judge Mary Lupo has set opening statements for Dec. 2 on a Jupiter woman's allegations Smith raped her March 30 at his family's Palm Beach Estate.

Another, broader result is a reinforcement of distrust and negative feelings about the news media in general, said Sears, who with executives from The Miami Herald and Fort Lauderdale's Sun-Sentinel last week heard criticism from a Palm Beach County leadership group.

"The slime kind of rubs off on the rest of us," Sears said. "People from the shows are laughing all the way to the bank.

"This story has a perfect cocktail mixture of America's first family, the American royalty if you will; alleged sexual misconduct and it's set on Palm Beach, home of the rich and famous," expained Steve Dunleavy, top correspondent for "A Current Affair."

His show, which he said has covered the Smith case "like a blanket," is reaping strong ratings from its features about it. The show ranks sixth amongst syndicated TV shows ("Wheel of Fortune" is first) and posted a 7.3 rating. Each point indicates 921,000 homes tuned in across the nation.

"Hard Copy has also highlighted the case. It ranked 17th, with a 5.4 rating, in the latest ratings.

The shows say they make news more appealing and interesting to most of the public, but the giving-the-public-what-they-want approach irritates some executives.

"Pablo Escobar could use that defense," said Brill, referring to Colombia's cocaine lord.

"I'll reserve comment on their pompous coverage," Dunleavy said of the mainstream news media, adding that The New York Times and NBC news were among the first groups to identify the alleged victim.

ON THE RUN — A Croatian guardman runs to a defensive position on the front line at Nova Gradiska Sunday. Yugoslav Federal Army troops attacked this Croatian village one day after a cease-fire was signed. Croatian officials met yesterday with the federal army to negotiate the surrender of Vukovar, where the Serb-dominated army demanded the remaining Croatian forces surrender unconditionally.

Forces close to victory, Croatia seeks evacuations

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — With federal forces close to victory in their three-month seige of Vukovar, Croatian defenders today negotiated surrender terms and appealed for help to evacuate thousands of trapped civilians.

Some street fighting and shelling continued in the eastern town despite a cease-fire arranged by the European Community, which has attempted to mediate an end to the 4 1/2 month civil war in the secessionist republic.

The loss of Vukovar would be a psychological and strategic blow to Croatia, which declared independence June 25. The resistance has been a source of pride for Croatia and embarrassment for the army — which would gain unchallenged control over most of eastern Croatia with Vukovar's fall.

EC spokesman Ed Koestal said monitors left Belgrade for Vukovar early today. The EC received military guarantees of safety, but "if there's no real guarantee of a cease-fire, then we can't go in," he said.

The Belgrade-based Tanjug news agency said Vukovar-area Gov. Marin Vidic-Bili met with federal officers yesterday and demanded a surrender in the presence of the International Red Cross.

Army representatives did not object, but demanded the remaining Croatian forces surrender unconditionally, the report said.

Tanjug quoted the army as saying that several thousand civilians had been taken from Vukovar and were receiving medical care.

Croatian radio said the Red Cross was trying to arrange evacuation of 500 people stranded in the basement of the town's hospital. They are reportedly without adequate water, medicine or blood supplies.

Elsewhere in Croatia, fighting slowed after the cease-fire pact took effect Saturday. It was the 13th EC-brokered truce.

A U.N. envoy, former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, arrived Sunday in Yugoslavia to work on details of a possible peacekeeping mission. But the United Nations has said it will not send troops unless a firm cease-fire is established.

Federal forces and ethnic Serbs opposed to secession have captured about a third of Croatia. The Croatian government says nearly 2,000 people have been killed since the republic declared independence. But the figure does not include substantial casualties suffered by the army or Serb insurgents, neither of which provides comprehensive numbers.

A senior Croatian government official in Zagreb said little hope remained that the defenders could hang on. The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said 12,000 to 15,000 residents remained in Vukovar — which had a population of about 40,000 before fighting began.

Amos Oz was born in Jerusalem in 1939 and at the age of 15 chose to live and work at Kibbutz Hulda, officially joining in 1957. After serving in the Six Day War of 1967 and the Yom Kippur War of 1973, Amos Oz became active with various groups struggling for peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Since 1977, he has been one of the leading figures in the Israeli Peace Now movement. His most recent exposure to the American Public was through a moving interview on Public Radio's Fresh Air speaking on the Persian Gulf War.

Mr. Oz earned his B.A. in Hebrew Literature and Philosophy from Hebrew University and holds Honorary Doctorates from Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati and Jerusalem, and from Western New England College in Springfield, MA. He has been a Writer-in-Residence at Oxford University, Hebrew University, Colorado College, Boston University and UCLA at Berkeley.

Currently Amos Oz teaches Hebrew literature at Ben Gurion University in Israel and divides his time between writing, teaching and farming.

His talk is being sponsored by UMass Hillel and The Center for Jewish Studies, UMass Arts Council, and The Grinspoon Fund for Jewish Education.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

The awful truth about men is they're not so awful - sometimes

Men are scum and women are bitches. Sometimes.

Before I go on with this escapade into the argument of the sexes let me say that I, like all other women, have denounced men and sworn them off for life. Fortunately, I didn't have enough stick-to-it-iveness.

To a certain degree, I feel as if I'm going against my femininity in writing this, and all female bonding will be lost. Nonetheless, this article must be written.

As a female, I can honestly say I love men. I even have a few female friends who think men are as wonderful as I do. Men are, in general, absolutely wonderful beings. I say in general because they easily turn into little turds on occasion.

Men are remarkable creatures. There is actually more to them than just something nice to look at. Men have a different perspective of life than women do, which is seriously something to be appreciated. Having gone to all-girl schools before college I've learned this.

Men are also wonderful in their variation. There are the jocks, the brains, the ROTCs, the artists. The "I need space" men and the smotherers. Those that prefer blondes and those that are smart enough to know that it's stupid. Some wear jockeys, others wear boxers. The sensual men, and those who just are.

Throughout my adolescent years, I had heard of the fairy tales where the virginal young maiden of perfection and naivete is swept away by the studly machismo prince of charm and masculinity. Needless to say, during my pre-pubescent years, this was the basis for my ethos. Then I woke up.

Partly because of my own naivete, I've had my "not-so-much fun with men" and have consoled friends during their dilemmas, too. To a large degree, these adverse times make the true Prince Charming all the more a stud muffin.

Seana Barnhill

Because of the ongoing fairy tales (the strong chivalrous knight on his white steed), we have created certain strictures that all men must fall into. This is, the perfect, understanding, and sensitive gentleman. I know I am hardly the model princess. Nevertheless, I sometimes inequitably expect the significant other to constantly know what I'm thinking and when I change my mind. When to stay when I tell him to leave or to give me a hug when I shriek, "Don't touch me!" And when not to be honest with me about anything, simply tell me only what I want to hear. He also must know when none of these rules apply. I've apologized profusely to my passing beaus for my subconscious archaic beliefs. I've come to realize that no man is perfect. They are wonderful in their diversity created by their individual flaws.

"There are guppies and there are sharks," a quote from my buddy Mandy. We (men and women) need to realize that we are all individuals. Neither of the sexes are as bad as we sometimes believe, there are good points, too. I am quite aware that women are capable of being the most heinous bitches on earth. I've even been a bitch myself. But men, most of whom will admit it faster than women, can be absolutely ruthless. There are those men who are evil to an irrefutably grotesque degree. I know some. But this is several out of millions. It is unfair to judge an entire gender by these few jackasses.

The point in between the rubbish is that men are wonderful. They shouldn't be blamed for another guy's mire or be expected to always be a prince. They are here, not only as a source of entertainment, but as companions as well.

As a last note on the behalf of men, don't forget that some of those toads will later turn into princes.

I will not even mention any of the political opinions I have on this issue; this article is here solely to teach the graduates to picket with respect. Respect! Respect!

Eric D. Martellini

Thursday and Friday were bad days for me. I had two major exams and the flu; not good days. The first line I crossed was at Mahar for my 11:15 class. [Strikers] accosted me in large numbers, trying to make me feel quite small and quite stupid. They asked such questions as, "Do you know what the GEO is? Do you even know that we are on strike? Well, do you have any idea why?" All of these questions were asked in a belittling, angry tone. I almost wanted to answer the way they seemed to expect me to. "Golly, you guys must be angry. I don't even know why you're on strike, but I'll sign anything you have."

Entering Skinner, I was asked point-blank, "Do you support us?" handed out almost as an ultimatum. When I replied with a "yes" and kept walking, the grad's reply was, "Then why are you still walking into that building?" I held my tongue and walked. Criminy! I have to justify myself to every Tom, Dick and Mary!?

My experience on Friday was the worst, and pretty much supplied the ink for my pen. I was walking into Whitmore to see if my loan had finally arrived, had just come from my anatomy exam which, after extensive studying, I had done miserably on and, as I stated before, had a rip-roaring cold. The grads were walking in a circle. I walked to the side, minding my own problems.

I heard these little giggles and whispers. I turned around to see this woman making fun of the way I walked and casting this mean expression on her face, mimicking the frustrated look I had on mine. She didn't even have enough intelligence to look at me while she was doing it. So, there are all her buddies staring at me with frozen expressions, faces turning red, and she still goes on for a good seven or eight seconds. Finally, she looked up and noticed that I was watching her making a blatant mockery out of me. She froze for a second then quickly said, "Don't go to class!"

"What?" I replied. (Okay, I screamed.)

"Don't go to class. If you don't go to class then the administration will know we are serious," she told me. I was so angry at that moment, I could have mentally caused the nearest automobile to go up in flames.

I mean, if she had just said ... "sorry." Just "sorry" instead of all that dribble. How can she ask to be taken seriously when here she is making fun of someone at a time when she is asking for support? Gosh, there's a true professional for ya.

Let me give those grads who need it a few tips:

1.) When someone walks through your line, don't whisper behind his/her back. That's not nice. Just because there are probably more of you marching in your line doesn't mean you can gang up.

2.) Respect other people's beliefs. As much as you don't want them to, they may want or have to walk through your line. Respect their wishes and beliefs, and stop trying to make them feel like they are the cause of your problems. That's also not nice.

3.) Finally, to that woman (and company) outside Whitmore at 11:15 Friday morning, the 15th — because of your lack of respect for me, yourself and your cause, you have lost one undergrad who was in support of your actions.

Is there any mail for me?

I hate Sundays.

I wake up sometime late in the morning, after four or five hours of sleep. I'm tired. I'm irritable. I'm not feeling very fun. I feel guilty about not doing any homework for two weeks but then I think, hey, I have all day, and I drift off again.

Then I realize I won't do any work until after I spend all afternoon in the depths of the Campus Center, eat dinner, and make social rounds. So I won't start homework until nine o'clock or so. That's okay. It's the weekend.

I drag myself out of bed each Sunday with the hope that this week, it won't be so bloody boring. Nothing exciting happens on a Sunday. No one calls me long distance. Everyone else is doing their homework or sleeping. There isn't even any mail.

Darienne Hosley

That's why Sundays are so dull. No mail. I would gladly dish out fifty cents for a stamp if only there was mail service on Sundays. I could spend all day waiting in anticipation, because maybe, maybe, there would be something for me.

That sounds really pathetic.

I never received mail at home. I had one magazine subscription, so I could count on something at least once every two weeks. But that was kind of predictable. The credit card offers and those little pick-me-ups from Ed McMahon never did anything for me either.

Sometimes a relative would send me a note. Occasionally, I'd get a postcard from a friend having a lot of fun in an exotic place. But only occasionally.

I paced through my house in the summer, listening for the mail truck. Those shorts-wearing postal carriers never came to my town. I like the truck better — I can hear it coming. When I heard the truck, I was off. Whether I had been asleep, in the middle of a conversation or eating lunch, I'd skip down the driveway, open the squeaky mailbox and pull out the pile of envelopes.

I'd check all the names on the envelopes. Nothing for me. Well, maybe I missed one. Nope, still nothing. Maybe I dropped it. Maybe not. It was pretty depressing.

The nicest part of living away from home is that there is mail for me nearly every day. I love it. I come home from a rough day of two classes and head straight for the mailbox.

Sometimes there aren't any letters, just newspaper clippings from people at home. Those are fun. My mom sends recipes. Just to bother me. She knows I won't bake — she should just send me the finished product. But the recipe is the next best thing. I guess.

I do have fun with the postal service. I realized that the "Hi-how-are-you-I-am-fine-what's-new?" letters weren't terribly inspiring to most people, so I began to turn each letter into a major project.

The postal service takes a lot of abuse for twenty-nine cents.

The most exciting thing about a letter in the mailbox is simply the fact that there is one. The stuff inside is secondary. Again, anticipation is everything — the envelopes are turned over and over, read and reread before they are finally opened. That's why it's important to make a good first impression.

Forget putting last names in the address. All they really need is the street number and a zip code. "BOB" is so much more personal than "Mr. Robert W. Someone." And about that stamp — you have to create a mood for them. Turn it into something. Draw the duck to go with the duck head.

There's simply a plethora o'things to do to an envelope. The best one I ever saw was written entirely in code with no key. Someone in the post office actually sat down and deciphered it.

Get out some markers and crayons. I don't advocate abuse of the postal system, just some fun. And a little something I learned — the more neat-o mail you send, the more neat-o mail you receive. Enjoy ...

Poor attendance of forum troubling

Last Thursday, I attended a forum about "What Should the University Do About the Problem of Racial and Ethnic Harassment?" Now hold on a minute. Before you make a judgment about what type of person I must be, let me clarify something. The only reason I went to the discussion was that my professor wanted me to cover the event and write a summary of it. I would have much rather watched "The Simpsons" and "Cheers" and gone out for some fun.

If this admission angers you, good! It should. It is this type of attitude that is plaguing this University. When I entered the Cape Cod Lounge, I found that there were only about ten people there. I thought that I must have been early. I was. It was 7:25. The forum was to start at 7:30. By the time it began, of the 120 chairs that were set up, only about thirty were filled. Thirty!

How can this be? Racial and ethnic harassment is a problem that is crippling this country, and on a smaller scale this campus. I am aware of this; I just didn't think that it was important for me, as an individual, to attend. It really didn't matter why people weren't there. The fact is that people weren't there.

Based on my previous attitude, I am probably not qualified to preach. However, the fact remains that I was there. For whatever reason, I was in attendance. My awareness has increased. It may take me a while to learn something, but once I do I never forget.

Lawyers spoke on the definition of harassment. Bailey Jackson, Dean of the School of Education, spoke of harassment on a more personal level. Panelists spoke about how people misinterpret their First Amendment rights. Those in attendance voiced their concerns about how the University will respond. People were speaking all over the place. The only problem is that there weren't nearly enough people there to listen.

Jethro Tull live: still too young to die

By STEPHEN MOSHKOVITZ
Collegian Correspondent

Jethro Tull
Worcester Centrum
Saturday, Nov. 16

Jethro Tull is now in the midst of its twenty-third year as a band, and they are just as fresh as the most energetic newcomers. Lead singer and multi-talented Ian Anderson, who played five different instruments during the show, led the rest of the troupe through two hours of rock and blues fun.

Opening with the first verse of "Minstrel in the Gallery" and then launching straight into "Cross-eyed Mary," the band rocked through all the classics such as "Living In the Past," "Thick as a Brick," and of course "Aqualung" and "Locomotive Breath."

They also played five tracks from their latest album Catfish Rising. The album, which is by all means decent, was given new spirit and songs such as "This is Not Love" and "Doctor to My Disease" took on new life.

The band also played some excellent blues jams (spotlighting guitarist Martin Barre) and some lesser known material, such as the flute instrumentals "Serenade to a Cuckoo" and "Bouree" (written by J.S. Bach — no*not* the dude from Skid Row), as well as "A New Day Yesterday."

An integral part of the show, aside from the music, was Ian Anderson himself and the many little things going on in the background. First of all, Anderson had an amazing rapport with the crowd. After starting off the show with a "Helllllloooooo!' or as Rod Stewart would say Goooooodbye!" (making reference to the Stewart cancellations in the area), he reminded the crowd that "you are looking at some very old bastards!"

All this was taking place on a stage resembling a posh restaurant/English pub, complete with candlelit tables, dartboard, and brick-faced bar that doubled as a keyboard. The roadies were dressed in black ties and white sportcoats, and also served as waiters.

It was almost difficult to watch the band perform and still catch the subtleties such as drummer Doanne Perry shooting darts, or keyboardist Martin Allcock making shadow puppets in the spotlights. However, it was impossible to miss the waiters/roadies standing in front of the tables air-guitaring with frying pans.

Jethro Tull is a band steeped in tradition, be it Anderson's should-be-patented flamingo stance and flute twirl, or the monstrous balloons released at the end of the show. Now, I am usually a very critical individual. I can find something wrong with virtually anything. However, the only complaint I have about Jethro Tull's set is that it had to end. Unfortunately, it may not be much more than another twenty years before they really are "too old to rock 'n' roll," so catch them if you can.

Opening act Chrissy Steele, the latest in the line of heavy metal females, was definitely not appropriate for a Jethro Tull crowd, but she had spirit, and more importantly, some good songs. Her first single "Love You 'til it Hurts" and the title track of the album "Magnet to Steele" both had good sound. Apart from the whole "I know you can make more (expletive) noise than that!" bit, and the constant references to Tull in order to get some noise from the crowd, she displayed some definite potential.

Romeo and Juliet
Rand Theater
Thursday, Nov. 14

"My bounty is as boundless as the sea, my love as deep; the more I give to thee, the more I have, for both are infinite." —Romeo and Juliet, Act II, scene ii

This production of Romeo and Juliet, directed by Kym Moore for her thesis production, has chosen to shift the emphasis of the tale away from the feuding families and focus instead on the magic and power of the love shared between the young couple. What has been created is a very modern fairy tale that incorporates the latest in pop music and dance while retaining Shakespeare's Elizabethan prose.

The star-crossed lovers Romeo (Tony Maestrone) and Juliet (Jennifer Costello) appearing in Romeo and Juliet at the Rand Theatre November 14-16 and 20-23.

The effect is humorous and more touching, but at the play's end we blame fate and youthful impetuosity for the death of the lovers, instead of the bitter, pointless feuding of their two families, the Capulets and the Montagues.

Juliet (Jennifer Costello) was especially endearing in her cutesy, naive role as the sheltered daughter of Capulet. She pranced and frolicked gleefully over every part of the set.

Romeo (Tony Maestrone) was also exceptionally well-portrayed though with more of a slapstick, dopey edge than the traditional Romeos. He was cool, sharp and sparked beautifully with Juliet. Their chemistry was intoxicating as they danced, kissed, and stared moonily into each other's eyes. The set got a little steamier later when Juliet emerged later in nothing but a sheet.

The supporting cast was equally as talented and managed to create definitive personalities for even the most minor characters.

Juliet's bawdy nurse (Carolyn F. Carlson) continually choked up the audience with her lewd comments and geaticulations. Even Lady Capulet (Katia Lynn Anderson) had her own subplot without a word spoken about it — could it be that she and Paris, Capulets' match for Juliet, were having their own affair? So much was added with little changes to the original lines.

Another new edition to the timeless script, the dancers, was almost too much. They made the audience scream with laughter and helped put the performance in a place where they could better relate: MTV.

The costumes, original and a splendid mix of modern and Elizabethan styles, blended masterfully with the awesome, stark cityscape of Verona, created by UMass Professor Larry Novakov-Lawlor.

Juliet emerged from a preppy, sheltered daughter into a courageous heroine and Romeo evolved from his ripped-jean-black- leather-jacket-harmonica-playing-sauntering-self into a weepy-thrashing-himself-about-on-the-floor wimp at the end.

Mercutio (Daniel T. Miller) had many good moments. "A plague upon both your houses!" rang through the theater as his dying body was dragged away. Benvolio, clad in a purple shirt and flowered tapestry vest also gets a huge thumbs up.

This original interpretation of the balcony scene strips away the traditional romantic sugarcoating and manages to make the scene sweet and geeky. As Juliet vaults over yet another piece of set Romeo hands her back her shoe and mid-line she replied, "Thank you," with a professionalism rarely seen in some student productions.

I like the modernity and realism injected into the play. That Romeo would not be thrilled at first hearing the word "marriage" makes sense in this show because up to that point he had been a fickle, free-wheeling bachelor. These are only some of the new twists on the plot that make it refreshing and thought-provoking.

Friar Laurence, belting out "Good Day Sunshine" while swinging a basket of flowers was another priceless moment.

The sword fights are also very well executed.

Capulet comes through as a marvelously villainous tyrannical father.

Everyone gave marvelous performances. The comic relief was perhaps the highlight; the serious moments did not always hold their believability (Romeo thrashing about on the stage and whimpering on Juliet's leg.) This production is strongly recommended because it has something for everyone.

Romeo and Juliet will return again to the Rand Nov. 20 - 23 at 8 p.m.

Bombastic fun-k!

The Bombastics
The Hatch
Thursday, Nov. 4

A-larger-than-usual crowd showed up at The Hatch Thursday night as The Bombastics made their appearance on stage. The five-member band pleased the audience from the very first moment with a boyish and funky yet powerful style.

Their weird, dissonant harmonics, their long improvisational off-beat passages and their line up — including an alto sax and a trombone — was reminiscent of such modern funk ensembles as The Slickaphonics.

The most remarkable soloist of the band was doubtlessly Scott de Musis on trombone — a small, but incredibly energetic player with an huge, rasping and growling tone, full of jumping and unexpected lines.

Also remarkable was Bill Chenaille on alto sax. His musical lines were very fluent and converged in intensive high notes, while guitarist Eric Olsen, with his long, iridescent lines was clearly more on the relaxed side.

Bob Lawliss on bass gave some funky slap solos, and along with drummer Joe Fitzpatrick demonstrated his ability to accurately accompany the horn players.

The band has been playing for only four months, but is already showing signs of developing into a strong musical ensemble; they possess the talent to build up musical climaxes and to produce a modern, though not over-intellectualized funk sound.

The second band of the night was local

The Clancy Brothers

Saturday, Nov. 16

If you were to take a poll of Irishmen and ask them who their favorite musical act was, your answers would be relatively uniform. The Dubliners and Chieftains would garner many votes, while The Pogues would show quite a respectable following among the younger crowd. In all likelihood, however, the Clancy Brothers would probably take the prize as Ireland's favorite sons, and they showed why this past Saturday.

The Clancys have stood the test of time by providing their audiences with a friendly atmosphere that invites folks to sing along.

Youngest brother Liam warned those sitting near the stage to "cover your drinks," because during fast songs they tend to spit, and they "wouldn't want your drinks to be diluted." Any sort of performer-audience barriers that may have been present were smashed by this statement, as the brothers (Liam, Pat, and Tommy) then dove into an assortment of their classics.

There were no surprises with their song selection. "Leaving of Liverpool," "The Moonshiner," "The Irish Rover," "Brennan on the Moor," and of course "The Wild Rover" were among the sing-

Marijuana: a look into legalization

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas thinks he may have had "several puffs [of marijuana] in college," and perhaps "one at law school." Lewis Carrol had a habit. Louis Armstrong, Billie Holiday, Victor Hugo and The Rolling Stones also smoked cannabis.

Marijuana has been available for as long as humans have wanted it, and according to Jack Herer, national director and founder of Help End Marijuana Prohibition (HEMP), "weed" was legal tender in the United States from 1631 for over 200 years. Herer also cites examples of arrest and imprisonment for those refusing to grow cannabis at times of shortage.

Cannabis sativa (hemp) has been illegal in the United States since 1937. An estimated 80 percent of students "experiment" with pot while in college, some 50 percent of whom go on to use the drug for recreational purposes. Consumption rates follow close on the heels of alcohol and tobacco.

Before 1937, however, the plant was not harvested with smokers in mind, but as a valuable source of paper, rope, fabric and oil. It is still arguably America's number one cash crop, and the home industry has a yearly turnover of some $20 billion. The economic benefits of this industry are not, however, reaped by America at large.

Herer argues that marijuana was not prohibited for social reasons in 1937, but essentially because of the threat hemp paper posed to the wood pulp industry, which according to Herer was controlled by the politically powerful.

Advocates of legalization believe the reversal of prohibition laws can benefit the world. If six percent of the United States were planted with hemp, reformers say, the greenhouse effect would be reversed. Hemp-based paper would reportedly save entire forests, hemp seed oil would prevent the world's energy crisis, and hemp tofu products would help nourish the world's starving.

Aaron Wilson, vice president of the Cannabis Reform Coalition at the University of Massachusetts, believes the present condition of the Massachusetts economy will result in the legalization of cannabis in this state within the next two to three years.

Prohibition has pushed the homegrown industry underground, literally. Gregory Porter, director of the National Organization to Reform Marijuana Laws reports: "Growers in this country have reached such a level of sophistication that they can reproduce any strain, anywhere."

Porter establishes that cross-fertilization has made American marijuana notably the strongest in the world, up to ten times stronger than anything around in the 1960s or anything imported. Growers are relocating indoors and underground with the latest high-technology equipment.

Marijuana has been used for thousands of years, for recreational purposes, relaxation, celebration and religious ceremonies. Carol L. Otis, author of Campus Health Guide, writes that pot, however, should not be smoked "when studying, attending class or planning to take a test," due to the effect of the drug on the learning centers of the brain.

She describes the effect of marijuana, if smoked or eaten, as resulting in "a state of distorted perception and sometimes hallucinogenic effects." However, the exact effects of marijuana usage are not fully documented as of yet.

Otis writes of the "amotivational syndrome," as a direct result of heavy marijuana consumption (one to five joints smoked per day for four or more days a week), inducing apathy and disinterest at "what should be a challenging and exciting time of life."

Opinions of users on campus suggest that the primary motivation for marijuana consumption is to "add color and spice" to what ordinarily would be "fairly mundane and monotonous."

The links between tobacco and marijuana are not yet fully documented. Tobacco contains the physically addictive drug nicotine, while marijuana contains tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), which is reported to be non-physically addictive.

According to Otis, THC enters the bloodstream through the lungs and produces a high which is accompanied by "a dry mouth and throat, red eyes, an increased appetite, an increased heartrate of up to 50 percent and sometimes a panic attack of paranoia."

Advocates of legalization document up to 395,000 deaths resulting from tobacco in the United States each year, and none from cannabis. The long-term effects of THC are not fully realized yet.

The relatively recent linking of tobacco to lung cancer suggest that more years of research into cannabis will be necessary before a link between marijuana and lung cancer can be validated. In her guide, Otis cites studies in which the tars of marijuana and tobacco were painted on the skins of mice for 74 weeks. Results showed that both groups of mice developed tumors, but "with a slightly larger number in the tobacco group."

The medical controversy surrounding the healing properties of marijuana continues. Advocates of legalization stress the properties of the plant to alleviate glaucoma, asthma, depression, and nausea resulting from chemotherapy, as do some doctors.

However, the Bush administration has taken a stand on stamping out the growth and use of the plant in any form.

Four months ago, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court denied Joseph Hutchins, who was terminally ill, the right to use marijuana for medical purposes. The judge ruled that "society's interest in preventing illegal drug use outweighs the suffering of one man who used marijuana to relieve pain and depression caused by chronic illness."

Of the several people questioned on campus, the majority of smokers said they do not buy marijuana themselves, but do smoke it "a couple of times a month," or when it is available. Where are these avid buyers and consumers who keep the $70 billion marijuana business in this country thriving? Perhaps, as Aaron Wilson suggested: "Most people play down the amount they buy and smoke, to prevent further crack down."

Pot, prison, and the realities of business

Ari Vais

My first semester at UMass, I had a neighbor. He was from down South, and in this article his name will be "Clyde."

Clyde sold pot. He always had some, or had a lot, sometimes good, sometimes bad. Clyde was very open and naive about his business, and the crew that often found themselves in his room (of which I was a part) was too young to realize what would come with that naivete.

One night late in November, we were gathered in Clyde's room. I remember he had three pounds of grass that week — different types, stuffed into plastic the size of Stop 'n Shop bags. It was more than I had ever seen at one time and we were all pretty excited. Clyde was trying to "get rid of it."

The phone rang. It was Clyde's dealer. He told Clyde a couple of guys were on their way over to buy some bags. (Even with three pounds of marijuana, Clyde was still only a middleman with a dealer).

"These guys are pretty cool," Clyde's dealer told him. It was a hint, but it went unnoticed, and when the customers arrived something felt funny. They were two older guys who looked tired and did not partake in the customary small talk. Clyde had all the dope out on his bed (although it would not have mattered at that point — he had already let them in), and made the sale.

A brief silence ensued before the men drew their guns and screamed at us to get on the floor; they were the Massachusetts State Police. Clyde's dealer had just been busted and here was our friend, on all fours, asking the police to "go easy."

Completely stunned, I remained momentarily motionless until a boot connected with my side and I went sprawling onto the floor with the others.

Nothing teaches you respect like a gun pointed at your head, and we were suddenly very polite, almost loving, to the officers.

Since we did not have any drugs on our persons, we were told to leave the room.

Ari Vais

On our way out, we said to Clyde what turned out to be the customary things to say to a friend under arrest: "We'll come get you within an hour, man," and "We love you, Clyde." (Would we? Did we?)

Next semester, Clyde was back, but the parties were over. He waited for hearing after hearing. The night before one of the hearings, he got a haircut: short, conservative, respectable. It looked absurd on him, but we did not say so. We followed him around the dorm, cooing sympathetic things, as he tossed tufts of his hair into every corner of the building. He had become somewhat of a martyr.

Soon thereafter, Clyde went to prison. The rest of the year went quietly. I calmed down and got into my work.

After Clyde was released we had a wild party, and he flew home for a while and then returned to serve his parole. Jail had sent him further into space instead of closer to the ground. We had little contact.

I went to Europe to study for a year, and returned just last summer. Holland was nearby, easily accessible and fascinating. Pot, like beer in American bars, is featured and consumed at coffee shops throughout the country. This is, of course, no big deal if you are a native.

When I got back to UMass, I ran into Clyde. He looked older, heavier, but as enthusiastic as ever. Tentative dinner plans were made.

A few weeks ago, Clyde's girlfriend phoned me with the news that he had been arrested again: on parole and selling a bag to a hippie who was really a cop — stupid. Luckily, Clyde had already received his degree and accepted a good job offer from a solid New England firm. There would be a hearing to try to convince the judge to give Clyde a break. Would I come?

I was stunned to see Clyde rattle in, bound by chain around the ankles and handcuffed. Other members of the "old crew" were there to show support. His lawyers were good, and Clyde is, as far as I know, suiting up for the new job as this is written.

Did all of this need to happen?

All the time and money both Clyde and the state had to give up? All the innocence Clyde had to part with in jail? I don't know. I am not here to voice my opinion, but to ask yours.

Maybe the prohibition on marijuana is sensible — after all, smoking anything does nasty things to people. In fact, they should make cigarettes illegal, because I know I can't give up the damn things on my own. And booze should certainly be banished from this country, because a drunk person is always worse news than a high person, who usually just wants some food.

However, as it stands today, everything made perfect sense: Clyde was selling an illegal substance, and he was caught.

Unique store combats labor exploitation

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP)— The game is called "Class Struggle: The Game of Life in Capitalist America."

It is designed for two to six players, each representing a distinct social class chosen by a roll of the "Genetic Die."

Shelved next to that game is "Starwords," a non-competitive version of the more contentious "scrabble" game.

This is the toy and game section of the Peace on Earth Store, called a "peace department store" by one staff member, that anchors the new Peace and Justice Coalition quarters in Burlington's Marketplace.

"Niche-marketing," the contemporary buzzword of the retail industry, might well have been coined to describe this store. The concept is for retailers to find a niche of products and customers that no other local retailer has probed. Usually, a niche can involve price range, product line and marketing method.

At the Peace on Earth Store, the niche is non-violence and cooperation. But those themes bind together an inventory directed at a market defined not so much by demographics or income as by ideology. "People have different entry levels to the peace movement," said Alice Christian, a coalition staff member and the store's buyer. "Some write letters. For some, it might be shopping at our store, and that's great."

Boundaries between the store and other functions of the organization are indistinct: the coalition's three full-time and two part-time staff members take part in running the store. If they think of themselves as being in business, it's not typical retail that they describe.

"The business we have been for the past 13 years is really the education business," coalition treasurer Wendy Coe said. "The store is just a way to support that."

The store is not as new as its recent presence on the marketplace makes it seem. It has operated since the 1970s, when it opened as a Christmas specialty shop in a converted gas station at College and St. Paul streets, a location later made famous as the birthplace of Ben & Jerry's ice cream, now Ben & Jerry's Homemade, Inc.

The coalition center and store moved up College Street to an 800-square-foot, second floor suite in Pomerleau Building, where it remained until September's jump to Church Street — a move that increased the store's space four-fold.

At first glance, the store's inventory, which generated $97,000 in sales last year, appears similar to what shoppers might find in other Church Street nooks or at vending cars: wooden toys, hand crafted jewelry, and Guatemalan and Andean crafts abound.

But the difference, Christian said, is in quality and origin. The imported goods sold in other shops and on the street, she said, often arrive in Burlington after being bought from Third World textile factories. Peace on Earth closely selects sources to assure that labor is not being exploited, Christian said.

"I don't buy from people who just walk in off the street and say, 'Hey, I got back from Equador and I have all these great sweaters,'" Christian said. "There's just no way of knowing how these things were produced."

Much of the store's stock is purchased through the Alternative Trade Movement, a wholesaler of imported crafts from the Third World. ATM, Christian said, has established a worldwide network of entrepreneurial artisans who, because they have more control over their products' manufacturing, sell at prices slightly higher than those of competitors.

Other wearable items, Christian said, come from a Guatemalan cooperative called Threat of Hope.

Books and periodicals anchor much of the store's business. Peace and Justice center coordinator Ellen Kahler said, particularly small-circulation, alternative periodicals, some of which are not available elsewhere in Burlington. Last year, the store bought the inventory of Maverick Books from Greg Guma, an early Peace and Justice worker who recently moved to California.

Kathy Bouton, the store's marketing coordinator, brought her retail bookselling expertise from Middlebury's Vermont Book Shop to Peace on Earth — at a substantial reduction in salary.

"But I'm happy," Bouton said. "I've always worked in book stores, but something was missing when the profits went directly to the owner of the store. Here, the profits are at work."

The store's earnings provide 15 percent of the budget for the coalition, which serves as an umbrella for more than a dozen organizations, including the American Friends Service Committee, the local chapter of the National Organization for Women and the Vermont Committee on Southern Africa.

Despite skills that lean more toward non-profit organizing than to seat-of-pants retail, the staff has displayed a measure of marketing savvy.

A rented display space at last month's Vermont convention of the National Education Association put Peace on Earth goods on display for teachers from throughout that state and carved out another niche for the store.

"We're selling a lot to teachers these days," Christian said. "That's becoming a big part of our business."

While coalition board members expect the store to help pay for the center's work, staff members say they don't sense pressure to bang out profit figures that reflect month-to-month earnings growth, like other retailers might.

"They have accountants," Kahler said. "We don't."

Dear Graduate Student Employee:

The Administration recognizes the valuable contribution you and your colleagues make to our teaching and research and our mutual interest in improving the situation of graduate student employees. But a number of graduate student employees have decided to break their contracts, and we need to be sure that those of you have not will get your paychecks as usual. We believe that the majority of graduate student employees will honor their contractual obligations to the University and their responsibilities to the undergraduate students.

We are, of course, prohibited from using public funds to pay any individuals who do not fulfill their contractual obligations. In order to determine whether we can issue a full paycheck to you for the week of November 11-15, we must receive in the Payroll Office no later than noon on November 19, the form which appears below.

Any graduate student employee who checks #2 below or from whom we do not receive a completed form by November 19 will receive a reduced paycheck on November 22, which reflects the percentage of committed time actually worked. Since Trustee policy provides the tuition waivers only for active graduate student employees, any graduate student employee who checks #2 or from whom we do not receive a completed form will no longer have an employment contract with the University and will receive a bill for tuition and curriculum fees for the remainder of the fall semester, unless he or she returns to work by Tuesday, November 19. Failure to pay this bill in a timely fashion will result in the usual student administrative withdrawal procedures.

Sincerely,

Richard D. O'Brien
Chancellor

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cheer up — the best is yet to come! Your personal relationships grow in a big way. All the world is a stage — dress for the leading role. A bright idea deserves new attention.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take stock of what must be done and set up a work schedule. Do not waste time asking useless questions. Teamwork can accomplish miracles. Stick to the facts when seeking your co-worker's help.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Real estate transactions are in the spotlight. Be sure you and a partner are in agreement. Develop your business skills. You may have to cool your heels where romance is concerned.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Obligations and duties could keep you busy most of today. There is a new awareness of what needs to be done. Use your skills as a teacher or counselor to effect overdue changes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Try to make your home a place of harmony. Sentimental occasions should be celebrated with an exchange of small gifts. Bottled-up emotions want out. Lay your cards on the table without further delay.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good day for borrowing, lending and making ends meet. Charitable endeavors bring special recognition. Discuss tax matters with a helpful person. Forget old regrets.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Remain calm when dealing with those who are upset by recent trends. Hug the sidelines and keep a low business profile. Romance thrives on thoughtfulness. Treat your mate like your best friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The required and the necessary are what occupy you now. Avoid frivolity, luxuries, and fads when shopping. Take things nice and slow in romance. Loved one may not be ready for a commitment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day for travel, business-pleasure combinations, and matters of the mind. Strive to be more tolerant and independent. Social opportunities abound this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Know your priorities today. Do not let an important matter slip your attention. Something that is delayed or postponed today may never get done at all. A nostalgic mood takes over tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Confidential matters and behind-the-scenes maneuvers enjoy favorable influences. You see a new trend where your relationships are concerned. Benefit from the experience of others.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You could be singled out for an honor today. Special favors are yours for the asking. Use your charm! A fine time for hiring new employees and dealing with your subordinates.

favorite Who's Kiddin' Who which consists of nine members. Clearly more professional than the Bombastics, their sound was precise and dense thanks to a big horn section capable of good solos.

However, as is the case in so many successful semi-professional club bands, their music was not really fresh or new. Many of the songs they played were classic rock standards, like Jimi Hendrix's "Crosstown Traffic," in funky arrangements but without any great surprises.

The audience was totally delighted, though, and most of the young listeners went wild the whole night to the danceable rhythms. Who's Kiddin' Who obviously satisfied the tastes of most listeners, though this critic much preferred the more surprising opening act.

along favorites that the Clancys provided us. Liam jokingly told us that they "almost regret the day that (The Wild Rover) was committed to vinyl," claiming that it was the song most abused each St. Patrick's Day since the beginning of time.

The highlight of the evening was provided by Robbie O'Connell, who joined them, instead of the traditional Tommy Makem, who is playing shows on his own these days. O'Connell's "Kilkelly" was a beautiful ballad, written in the form of letters from a father in Ireland to his son in America, updating him on events in the motherland. The final letter came from his brother, however, informing of their father's passing, and left only a few dry eyes in the Horse.

You don't have to like Guinness, and you don't even have to be Irish to enjoy the music of the Clancys. If either of these descriptions fits you, then the Clancy Brothers and Robbie O'Connell would have showed you one of the best times you've had in a long while on Saturday.

with," played a big role. "I'd say we had the best recruiting class in the East. All we have to do is make sure the kids progress mentally as well as physically."

Javier Gonzalez scored 29 goals on a variety of shots, and Luke Harlan's strong left arm pumped home 27 goals. Adolfo Oliete led the team with 31 assists, and Pat Lau and Rich Schragger both saw substantial playing time.

"The importance of the other kids," Yarworth said, "is that everyone came back a year older, a year smarter, and a year wiser. Considering we graduated five seniors last year, I think we did a nice job maintaining our position in the East."

Assistant coach Jon Miller, in a heat-of-the-moment comment after a loss, said Larson "is the best goalie in the East, except the defense [was less than satisfactory]." Larson's back-up, Todd Hourihan, saw limited playing time, but said that the possibility of learning from Larson was "one of the reasons I came to UMass. It's a goalie thing."

Larson, who stopped 50 percent of the shots against him last year on his way to the All-East Second Team, stopped 53 percent this year facing 23 more shots, and was not recognized.

"It's kind of surprising to me," Larson said. "It was probably my best season and no honors. It's okay, I was really happy with my season. For the team the season was a roller coaster. The turning point was losing to Brown in four overtimes at Harvard [in the New England League Tourney]. Things kind of just seemed to go downhill from there. It's disappointing. We had the best team there has been at UMass."

Yarworth said that he is not recruiting for particular positions, but "will go for the best available players. I've got to get a goalie. Hourihan is good, but you've got to have two or three goalies on campus. I'd like to get a few lefties to give us more options. And a more mobile holeman — more of a quarterback and less of a scorer."

In only its fifth season as a varsity sport at UMass, water polo has achieved success that other Eastern schools with more established programs have not enjoyed, and Yarworth is quick to realize that fact.

"I'm proud of the kids," Yarworth said. "They really put in a lot of time and worked hard. It's all a question of getting to the next level — what do you have to sacrifice to get there? We've been the 4th, 5th, or 6th team in the East for three years now. It's up to them now. We can't keep being middle of the pack. We've got to make some mental or physical change to get up there."

Sports

Come for a ride on the wild Zamboni

Hey there! Jump up on the Zamboni and cruise around the rink with me as we visit the NHL, the NBA, Cleveland and points west. It's another sports column, infinitely better than The Strange Death of Liberal England but not quite as much fun as Studs.

The complications just keep piling up for the Bruins. Now Glen Featherstone, who was going to be such a big acquisition for Boston's understaffed defense, has back injuries which may sideline him for three months. In addition to a herniated disk, Featherstone had broken vertebrae in his back. Ouch. Actually, double ouch, considering the amount of money the Bruins dished out to get him.

At least Barry Pederson is back where he belongs — wearing the black and gold. There's something about an ex-Bruin playing for the Whalers that just doesn't sit well. It's kind of like the difference between imported havarti and Cheez Whiz, or Dom Perignon and Mad Dog 20/20. (How about that — wine and cheese on the sports page. Who says we're not cultured?)

Greg Sukiennik

I see the Quebec Nordiques deep-sixed coach Dave Chambers after the team went 3-14-1 to start the season, replacing him with General Manager Pierre Page. My question ... why?! What did they expect from a defense which has given up 81 goals in 18 games — a whopping 4.5 goals per game? Was Nordiques management really expecting to win the Cup this year?

How can management complain when they couldn't sign the savior of the franchise, Eric Lindros? I don't care how greedy he is, when you're awful, you do something about it. Firing the head coach may produce some wins in the short term. But let's put it this way: you can put it in a can or a bag, but it's still garbage.

Shark alert: San Jose has piled up a whopping two wins since I wrote about them last, creeping toward sub-mediocrity at 3-17-1. I'm pissed off because I missed both wins. They've let up 104 (one hundred and four, not a typo) goals in 21 embarrassing outings, which averages out to nearly five goals a game.

Just when they thought they were smart: Here's the Buffalo Sabres, feeling all proud about dealing half the team to the Islanders for Pat LaFontaine. What a pick-up, huh?

Well, pride goeth before a fall, and wouldn't you know, here's Jamie Macoun of the Calgary Flames. Whack. Oh no, Pat, you got hit across the face with Macoun's hockey stick? You say your jaw's broken and you might be out up to two months?

Hey Pat, sucks to be you, huh? "He's a cutie," says a resident Islanders fan (right, Debra?), but such is life in the NHL. Fast-skating millionaire one day, eating yogurt and pudding through a straw the next. Only race car drivers, rodeo riders and other intellectuals can say the same about their jobs.

Meanwhile, the Canadiens no longer have the best record in hockey. Nor do the Caps. That distinction belongs to the Vancouver Canucks, who check in at 14-4-3, 31 points. If anyone has any information on who the hell these guys are, or how they do it, send it to Greg "sports desk exile" Sukiennik at the Collegian, 113 Campus Center. Inquiring minds want to know.

Over in the NBA: Usually, Boston Celtic fans are among the most vocal anywhere. And why not — they have reason to be proud of the green and white.

Then they lost to Charlotte. Charlotte! I'm glad I missed that game. What an embarrassment. Larry Bird gets schooled by Larry Johnson? Dell Curry outscoring the entire Boston bench, 22-21? Tell me it isn't real.

In the NBA standings, there are few surprises. Golden State leads the Pacific at 7-2, but it's not like anyone thought they didn't have the potential. Miami and Philadelphia are tied for the Atlantic lead, but it's hard to expect either team will last on top very long.

All else is very predictable indeed. San Antonio, Houston and Chicago are among the league's top teams and few could be surprised. The Bulls seem as dominant as they were at the end of last season; what's-his-name looks pretty good, too (If you don't know who I'm talking about, give up now).

Finally, how could I resist a cheap shot at the Patriots? It must be tough being a Pats fan when the team loses on the last play of the game twice in a month.

Why did they run the ball up the middle? Why not spread the field and hope for a mismatch or a weak spot instead of stacking the line exactly where the Jets thought they would?

Where are you now, Steve Grogan?

Men's XC ends season

Has poor outing at IC4A meet

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team ended its season on a low note Saturday. The Minutemen traveled to Bethlehem, Pa. and placed 22nd at the IC4A Championships.

Providence bested the other 67 teams in the meet with a score of 63 points. Boston University placed second with 86. Georgetown, Dartmouth and Bucknell rounded out the top five and qualified for the NCAA Championships.

Terrence Mahon of Villanova was the overall winner in the race. Mahon covered the 10-kilometer (6.2 miles) course in 30:17.

After recording a second place performance in the Atlantic 10 Championships and a fifth place finish in the New England Championships, the Minutemen appeared to have shed the inexperience which plagued the team earlier in the season. Coach Ken O'Brien had hoped his team would continue its improvement on Saturday.

"I'm a little disappointed with the final score," O'Brien said. "I thought we had made some nice adjustments at the A-10s and New Englands and I had hoped to carry that through to this weekend. Unfortunately, we went down there and reverted back to our rookie status."

Matt Simon was the top runner for the Minutemen on Saturday. He placed 65th in the field of approximately 250 runners.

Simon was followed by Pat Reed in 102nd place, Pat Ryan in 142nd, Kevin Greenhalgh in 149th and Keith Willis in 151st.

O'Brien said that he was pleased with the finishes of his top three runners.

"Matt Simon did everything, as an individual, that he needed to do to compete at this level," he said. "Ryan and Reed also executed their races exactly the way they had to.

"Unfortunately, in a championship meet of this caliber, you need to have 100 percent of your team have their best day in order to compete successfully. We didn't have that kind of effort."

Water polo underachieves, ends disappointing season

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

This year's University of Massachusetts water polo team had big things expected of it, as their mix of veterans and young, budding superstars looked to push the program further than it had gone before.

Those expectations went unmet, as the team's 16-8 record and first and second round losses in the Eastern Championship denied them a shot at qualifying for the NCAA Tournament, and dropped their national ranking from 16th to 20th. They had been ranked as high as 15th during the season after a pre-season ranking of 17th.

"I can't say we had a bad season," said coach Russ Yarworth, "but satisfied — no, and I don't think any of the kids on the team would say satisfied because I think our goals were higher. Maybe our expectations were too high, but if you don't set lofty goals, then you're not challenging yourselves as much as you can."

The team's biggest problem this season was a lack of motivation in big games. The Minutemen were a talented team, but not so talented that they could beat Eastern teams like Brown, Harvard, Iona, and Navy on talent alone. Against those four teams, UMass had a record of 7-5.

In seven tournaments, UMass placed first twice, second twice, third once, fifth once, and seventh once. It was the seventh place finish that really punctuated the season.

It occurred in the Eastern Championship during the last weekend of the season. UMass, ranked 4th for the tournament, had to win all three games to go to California for the NCAAs. A first round game against 5th ranked Princeton, certainly not a walkover team but a team UMass beat 9-7 earlier in the season, saw the Minutemen lose 8-6 in a flat effort.

A second round 14-13 loss to 8th ranked Washington & Lee, and a final round win over 7th ranked Iona earned UMass a final Eastern ranking of 7th.

"A lot of teams would be satisfied with the season we had," Yarworth said. "I still think we may be one of the top four teams in the East. The point I'm more upset about is it seemed to be a continuing problem during the season that we didn't show up ready to play at the right emotional level, and I don't know how to solve that problem. It's got to come from the kids. It can't come from me."

Yarworth said his season-long grappling with the matter is the first time one of his teams have had a motivational problem.

"Scotty Reed has to become a more vocal team leader and work on being positive in practice," he said. "He's quiet and tends to get down, and I need him to be a leader. I'd like to see Jay Peluso and Dan McOsker become leaders too. The other guy is Scott Deluca. He became a leader this year, and just has to progress in his swimming skills.

"Because of our lack of communication" he said. "I'm going to put in a much more structured offense and structured defense. My philosophy is to give the players a lot of different schemes and hopefully they'll adapt and read the defense. This year's team didn't seem to think, to solve a problem as a team. The defense was uninspired at times. Next year, I've got to give them very specific ground rules and game plans. I don't think it's the way to play, but it seems like it's the way I have to do it."

No matter how Yarworth changes his coaching, he has good players to work with, especially in the offensive end of the pool. The team hit 48 percent of its shots, a team record.

Reed, a junior, scored 34 goals while hitting 62 percent of his shots. He was second in points with 44, and tied senior goalie Todd Larson for the team lead in steals with 33. Reed was voted to the All-East second team.

Tsan Engin, a sophomore hole-man, led the team in goals with 39, and points with 51. He was an All-East Honorable Mention.

The freshmen, a class Yarworth said he was "very pleased

Profs to stage sympathy strike

By KIMBERLEY REYNOLDS
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Society of Professors voted yesterday to strike on Thursday in support of the Graduate Employee Organization unless Chancellor Richard O'Brien withdraws by 11 a.m. today his letter threatening to withhold salaries if graduate employees do not verify their employment with the University.

O'Brien said last night that he will not withdraw his November 15 letter sent to the 2,200 graduate employees on campus.

"I will absolutely not consider withdrawing the letter," O'Brien said.

The letter required graduate students employees to indicate whether they had fulfilled their employment contract for the period of November 11 to 15.

Students who indicated they were involved in the strike or who failed to return the letter would receive a reduced paycheck on November 22. The letter said employment would also be terminated and students would be billed for tuition and fees for the remainder of the semester.

The MSP, which represents all professors and librarians on this campus, voted to engage in a one-day "sympathy strike," joining the GEO on the picket line. According to the resolution, professors will not cross lines and will cancel classes on Thursday if O'Brien's letter is not withdrawn.

MSP President David Lenson said after the meeting, "It was necessary — a good strong action showing support for the graduate students."

Chancellor O'Brien said last night he was surprised that the faculty union would strike since the faculty's contract forbids strikes.

Lenson sent a fax to O'Brien earlier Tuesday that demanded "that you publicly retract your threat to inflict serious financial damages on any graduate student employee who fails to respond properly to your letter, for whatever reason(s).

"Billing students for all remaining tuition and fees for the fall semester and cancelling their employment contract seems to our members outrageous measures."

"We did what we had to do," said John Cole, professor of anthropology and a past president of the faculty union.

The faculty union discussed findings of the District 65/UAW attorneys who represent GEO. The attorneys found "the letter intimidates and coerces people from exercising their rights of assembly, association and petition as guaranteed by the United States Constitution," and that its "threat not to pay people who did meet their contractual obligations but did not return the form" is also illegal.

The union's attorneys are preparing to go into court on these issues, according to GEO officials.

O'Brien said it was "complete nonsense" that the letter was declared illegal, adding that the issue could not be contested in court.

Arlyn Diamond, associate professor in the English department said, "We deeply regret that it's come to this. It is necessary for our role as teachers. This is no way to treat grad students who've acted in good faith."

O'Brien letter: mixed reaction from profs

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

A letter sent to all graduate employees by Chancellor Richard O'Brien last week asking them to indicate — under a penalty of perjury — if they are working or striking has been met with mixed reactions by graduate students and department heads.

"We are, of course, prohibited from using public funds to pay any individuals who do not fulfill their contractual obligations," O'Brien wrote in the letter, printed as an advertisement in the Collegian yesterday.

"Since Trustee policy provides the tuition waivers only for active graduate student employees, any graduate student employee who checks #2 [which is admitting strike participation] or from whom we do not receive a completed form will no longer have an employment contract with the University and will receive a bill for tuition and curriculum fees. . ."

The Graduate Employee Organization has advised members not to return the form, which was due yesterday at noon. "I think faculty was just outraged," said Emily Isaacs, co-spokesperson for GEO. "I think that letter really indicates [the administration's] desperation."

In response, the Graduate Student Senate sent a letter to O'Brien saying "the letter is entirely inappropriate, and breaches our employment contracts."

The letter from the Graduate Student Senate also claimed that many graduate students did not receive O'Brien's letter "because many deans and department heads. . . are choosing not to distribute them."

Patricia Greenfield, director of the Labor Relations and Research Center, said she allowed the letters to be delivered to graduate employees working within the labor center.

"I guess I do not believe in keeping information from people. People should make their own choices," she said.

Barbara Partee, head of linguistics, said she distributed the letter to all the department's teaching assistants but suggested they ignore it.

Partee said the letter was "an unwise thing for the administration to distribute because it has escalated tensions."

Partee wrote a letter to the Board of Trustees to show "how crucial our TAs are to the quality of this University," she said. "I personally support the graduate students very strongly."

An English department source said the tone of the O'Brien's letter was "unfortunate" and "should have been less authoritarian."

Fergus Clydesdale, department head of food science, was not one of the faculty "outraged" by O'Brien's letter.

Agency fee the impasse of GEO strike

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Graduate student employees continued picketing around major teaching sites yesterday as talks between the Graduate Employee Organization and the University of Massachusetts administration failed to end the five-day-old strike.

Although Chancellor Richard O'Brien called off formal negotiations last week since GEO had broken a no-strike agreement signed on January 25 of this year, "informal contacts" are continuing. Neither side last night would divulge details of the talks.

"We're are pursuing all avenues to a quick settlement," said GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs.

Both sides are wrangling over the collection of weekly union dues — $1 a week — for graduate employees who don't wish to join the union. The four other campus unions enjoy this privilege of agency fee.

Author speaks on Israel

'Painful compromise' can solve debate

By MATT GRIFFING
Collegian Correspondent

In a speech entitled "The Various Confrontations in Israel Today: Insights of an Israeli Novelist," renowned Israeli author Amos Oz spoke to a crowd of 250 in Mahar Auditorium last night.

Alternating between analysis and anecdote, he said a "painful compromise" is the only way out of a "fight to the death."

"The reason for this is that the nature of the conflict is intransient because both sides are right," he said.

"This is a true tragedy, not a western movie because it is a clash between right and right. It is a clash between justice and justice," Oz said.

This realization has been slow in coming and is not nearly complete which Oz said "is due to developing symmetrical nationalisms."

"Although these historical developments are fascinating, they are politically irrelevant," he said.

Referring to the Palestinians, "This national existence is our problem, as ours was theirs."

On the basis of the valid claims to land that both parties clearly desire and in order

Shamir visits New England to find jobs for immigrants

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir came to high- tech New England with an economic mission: find jobs for skilled immigrants pouring into his country.

"It's not normal that a small country like ours should support so many people," Shamir told a group of Israeli bond investors. "It's not normal, but we have to do it. We cannot rely on others."

The open-armed acceptance of Jews from around the world is Israel's mission, and Shamir reminded the wealthy investors that the country has gone a long way to providing housing for immigrants, but yet has to solve the problem of unemployment.

The jobless rate in Israel currently hovers between 10 percent and 10.5 percent, even though the economy is growing at a rate of about seven percent, said David Jacobson, Israel's consul for economic affairs in New England.

The main reason unemployment is so high is that the country cannot absorb the high influx of Jewish immigrants. "The vast majority are skilled, which is a major asset, but in the short term it is a problem," Jacobson said.

Between January and September of this year, Israel has accepted 115,557 immigrants from the Soviet Union alone. Israel now has the highest percentage of engineers and scientists in the workforce of any country in the world, Jacobson said.

In Massachusetts, a high-tech state that has fallen on bad economic times, Shamir finds a willing audience. The topic of trade and economic ties came up right away when Gov. William F. Weld greeted Shamir Tuesday morning at Logan Airport.

"I told him about my desire to forge more joint ventures between Massachusetts and Israeli companies. He is of course very interested in that," Weld said.

The governor plans to travel to Israel on

"It asked if they were working and I guess that is a fair question," Clydesdale said.

Anthropology department chair Alan Swedlund said a meeting was planned among department chairs but declined comment on his feelings on the letter.

In a statement released yesterday by the administration, it was acknowledged that "the form which we ask graduate employees to sign, indicating whether they are fulfilling their contracts, has caused offense.

"We are open to any other process which indicates whom to pay and will certainly accept department chairs' lists of those not striking," the statement said.

■ agency fee

The GEO feels this agency fee would allow them to organize new members each year, negotiate strong contracts and keep the membership informed, according to union press materials.

GEO's parent union, the United Auto Workers, has offered to pay all legal costs and damages if the University is sued for allowing this provision on GEO's first union contract.

The University argues since GEO was not certified by the state Labor Relations Commission in 1979, they cannot legally collect such a fee for graduate employees.

In a statement made available to the Collegian yesterday, the administration said until GEO obtains formal recognition as a union, giving GEO agency fee would be illegal even if UAW picks up the tab for legal damages.

"The administration is entirely prepared to deduct agency fees, but only when it is legal," the statement said.

Negotiations appear to be evolving into a no-win situation: the union is demanding an agency fee but the administration won't offer it to GEO since they are not officially recognized as a union by the state.

In addition, the administration's statement says, "We have high respect for those employees, we believe they are seriously underpaid, and we continue to be anxious to improve their pay and working conditions, but within the tremendously reduced finances of the University."

State aid to the University this year has been sliced by 12.5 percent while fees have risen by $879.

The GEO, which represents 2,200 graduate employees, half of whom are dues-paying members, has been struggling to finalize their contract for almost a year.

On Campus-Recruiting for Spring Semester is quickly approaching. Have you completed the Career Center checklist to participate in Spring interviews? If not, don't wait another minute. Check✓ your list with ours...

☑ Make sure that you fill out an "update" registration form so that the Recruiting Office has your schedule of available interview times.

☑ You must attend a Recruiting Workshop before participating in on-campus interviews. This workshop provides essential information about the on-campus recruiting process. On-Campus Recruiting Workshops will be offered again in February or, better yet, come to the Career Center now for individualized instruction.

☑ To find out which employers are coming to campus, pick up the Career News Update during the first week of December. This issue will list employers interviewing in February many of whom have resume deadlines in January. Companies will begin interviewing on campus during the week of February 3.

☑ Submit your resumes to the employer folders at the Mather Career Center or the Curry Hicks Satellite Office BEFORE leaving campus. UM professor kicked off panel for opposing Bush

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts environmental studies professor said he was rejected for a spot on a national wetlands review panel by the Office of Management and Budget because he publicly criticized President Bush's wetlands policy.

Joesph S. Larson, director of the University's Environmental Institute, was nominated in early October to serve on the panel. Larson was dropped later that month after he and another nominee expressed concern over the president's wetlands policy at a press conference before the National Press Club, according to Inside EPA. Inside EPA is a Washington D.C. based weekly newsletter dedicated to covering Environmental Protection Agency activities.

The panel was created to study controversial revisions of the federal manual for regulating wetlands.

Larson and Mark Brinson, a professor from East Carolina University, called for a different approach to wetlands regulation at the Oct. 8 press conference, which was sponsored by the National Wildlife Federation and the National Aududon Society.

"We reported on the preliminary results of federal and state field testing of the proposed manual," Larson said. "Because of the potentially serious adverse effects of wetland losses on flooding and water quality, we supported a call made earlier by the Society of State Wetland Managers for an independent review by the National Academy of Sciences.

"It now appears that was a politically incorrect position to take," he added.

Ohio State University professor William Mitsch, the panel chair and the person who nominated Larson, resigned from the project in early November.

Inside EPA reported that Mitsch thought the OMB was politicizing the panel's selection process and that he feared it would damage his scientific credibility.

According to Inside EPA, federal agencies use the disputed manual to determine which wetland areas are subject to regulation under the Clean Water Act.

Larson said more than 50 percent of wetlands now protected by federal wetland guidelines would be made available for development if the manual is allowed to stand as it is.

Student reports rape

Compiled by PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

An 18-year-old student reported to University of Massachusetts Police that she had been raped by a male acquaintance in a residence hall early Saturday morning.

No charges have been filed, police said, and the matter remains under investigation.

• A small box containing three vials of a flu vaccine was brought to the police station which a man found next to his vehicle in Lot 22. Environmental Health and Safety, which is responsible for investigating fire and safety incidents, and University Health Services were notified.

• A motor vehicle traffic stop on Melville Road Saturday afternoon resulted in the discovery of a .357 replica of a Crossman Airgun in the glove compartment. The man did not have a license to carry the weapon and will be summonsed to court on a number of weapons violations, police said.

DISTURBANCES

• A glass panel in a fire extinguisher box in Van Meter Residence Hall was smashed early Saturday night and police questioned a male visitor after he was treated at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton for a severe laceration to his hand. Police had Amherst Fire Department ambulance transport the student.

• A fight erupted early Saturday morning in John Quincy Adams between two male students over an argument about cleaning up a mess caused by the illegal discharge of a fire extinguisher. Police said the victim was apprised on the procedure for filing charges in court.

LARCENY

• A Coolidge woman reported to police early Saturday morning that while visiting in an adjacent room she heard someone knocking on her door. She told police that she saw three men, who she did not recognize as Coolidge residents, leaving the vicinity of her room. She discovered that cash, two gold rings and a pair of earrings had been stolen from her. The estimated value is $736.

• A man returning to his car in Lot 32 on Saturday morning discovered that both left doors had been pried open. A compact disc player, five compact discs and a radar detector were stolen. The estimated value is $620.

Alex's appellation sparks controversy in Hamilton

HAMILTON, Mass. (AP) — You can call him Alexander Hamilton. Or you can call him A. Hamilton. But please don't call him Alex Hamilton.

That's the message from some town officials upset that the noted 18th-century statesman's name is abbreviated as "Alex Hamilton" on the town seal.

H. Grant Crowell, a lifelong resident and member of the Hamilton Historical Commission, called the nickname "almost sacrilege."

Crowell said Hamilton, who served under President George Washington as the first secretary of the U.S. Treasury, was never called "Alex." Crowell noted that he usually signed his name as "A. Hamilton."

Crowell said the town seal, which also bears Hamilton's profile, contains sufficient space for his full name. He asked the town's board of selectmen to let voters decide at the next town meeting whether they want to revise the seal.

Selectman John E. Lawrence Jr. said the board "stands eager to right an ancient wrong," but asked Crowell to do more research into who shortened Hamilton's name and why.

Hamilton — the town — is located about 30 miles north of Boston. The town seal controversy came to light as the community of 7,200 residents planned events for its bicentennial in 1993.

After gulf war, Lebanon angry with United States

Dr. Fawaz Trabulsi, prominent Lebanese-French writer and editor, spoke at Smith College last night.

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Correspondant

The Lebanese have a lot of ill feeling towards the United States in the aftermath of the Gulf War, said a prominent Lebanese-French writer and editor at Smith College last night.

"The whole war has been personalized with Saddam Hussein," Dr. Fawaz Trabulsi told a small group in a speech entitled, "Post-War Prospects for Democracy in the Arab World."

"There has been a total misunderstanding. Although the Arab government sided with the United States, people have very hostile feelings whether they are Iraqi or not," said Trabulsi.

Trabulsi, known for his sharp political critiques of Arab governments, spoke of how the Arab World has been effected by the Gulf Crisis.

There aren't any rich people in the Arab World, the republic is changing," said Trabulsi. Trabulsi added that there are still remnants of those who want to support the revolution.

Trabulsi expressed the belief that the Arab people feel that the U.S. has let them down in the war. "It has left people extremely disillusioned," he said.

Trabulsi feels that the Iraqis were punished in the Gulf War, rather than Saddam Hussein.

"There is a dictatorial state in the Arab world, and many people want to attribute this to Islam," according to Trabulsi. "I'd like to challenge this."

According to Trabulsi, religions may be equal, but they are not a democracy, and they are not concerned with individuals or freedom. Trabulsi feels that a common misconception is that the Protestant Reformation in Europe helped to promote democracy in the Arab world.

In the Arab world, a formally secular state exists, Tribulsi added. "There is no Islam, just as there is no one Christianity," said Trabulsi. He feels that the Arabs may be guilty of Arab nationalism, but nothing competitive [per say].

"I'm concerned with societies themselves and not their representatives," said Trabulsi. There are authoritarian and resisting regimes throughout the world, attributed Trabulsi. The key question is how to move the Arab world from an authoritarian regime to the Arab people themselves, said Trabulsi.

According to Trabulsi, there is a modern archaic movement. The most imortant revelation in Lebanon in the world is the hands of the civilians and Lebanese, said Trabulsi.

Trabulsi admits that the situation in the Arab World is very complex. He holds a doctorate in history from the University of Paris, and has written several books on the national question and democracy in Lebanon.

Trabulsi is a member of the Lebanese Writers Union and the Arab Organization for Human Rights. "I think most of the movements are a modern form of archaism in their majority," said Trabulsi.

to escape more war Oz said that "a painful compromise on land must be reached.

"The delegates at the summit in Madrid looked as if they were going to a funeral, both sides realizing the truth that compromise is necessary, but having years of instilled dogma against it," he said.

Oz spoke of legitimate and useful criticism of Israeli and Palestinian action. He noted attitudes in the U.S. of leaning towards the Palestinians.

"Israel needs political criticism. Moral finger waving is wrong. There is Christian belief that the victim is elevated by suffering," Oz said. "Therefore the Jew who has more of a reputation of suffering should not be aggressive in the conflict.

"Both actions are human but not always humane," he said in reference to active and passive roles.

He said he is angry with the Shamirs and Arafats of the world and offered political criticisms.

According to Oz the "honeymoon doves," people who believe that the conflict is based on misunderstanding alone, have an unrealistic view.

"The contemporary global peace movement falsely considers love and peace to be synomonous," he said.

"Love is involved in the conflict in Israel. The conflict is a matter of survival fought everyday. If you love an entire country it means very little," he said.

For Oz, who termed himself a "fair divorce dove," the solution involves a separation for peace. After the separation and time, "There is the possibility of Arabs and Israelis getting together for a cup of coffee."

There are currently about 110 U.S. companies with subsidiaries in Israel, and at least 150 joint ventures between the countries. The U.S. and Israel have a roughly even trade balance of about $3 billion a year, Jacobson said.

Digital Equipment Corp., the Maynard-based computer firm, is the second-largest computer company doing business in Israel, Jacobson said.

■ MSP meeting

"Since we will not be teaching classes Thursday, we invite our undergrads to join us picketing," said an English department professor who wished not to be named.

Not all professors were sympathetic.

"I really don't care what the MSP voted, I will not strike. I think Chancellor O'Brien is taking appropriate action," said Robert Ballou, assistant professor of economics.

Professor Ronald Manino, chairperson of the accounting department, when informed of the strike resolution said, "Well, that wouldn't be me. I believe in teaching my classes and I hope they allow me to do the same."

Julie Caswell, associate professor of resource economics said she was not properly notified of the meeting and could not attend.

"I don't think it's right to pass a resolution of any kind at a meeting which was not properly publicized. The entire membership should have voted on a resolution of this kind — I'd have liked some input," she said.

Caswell said she will not be participating in the strike.

The faculty meeting was composed of approximately 200 out of its 1,200 members.

Anyone is susceptible to AIDS, especially students

Twelve days ago one of the greatest athletes of all time announced his retirement from professional basketball. His reason being was that he had contracted the AIDS virus.

If you analyze the statement above you will see how short sighted and narrow minded I was when I wrote it. But this is the attitude I have encountered since hearing this sad story.

Magic Johnson is a human being first, and a basketball player second. But the majority of people whom I have talked with see him only as a person who can shoot the ball through the hoop.

Instead of feeling sad and angry over the death of such a fine and charitable person, they think instead that it is a shame that Larry won't be able to cover Magic one more time in game seven of the NBA World Championship.

This type of attitude has only hindered the attention that this disease needs, in order to help find a cure. It would be ignorant for me to quote you any statistics on this deadly disease, because I am sure that they change almost daily, for the worst!

Anybody is susceptible to the disease as I am sure we all know. It is no longer a homosexual disease, but rather it has become a part of our sexually promiscuous society. But did it take someone of Magic Johnson's magnitude to enlighten us on this subject? You would have to be ignorant, which I am sure a majority of this campus is, to think that you are immune just because you are heterosexual.

Mark Preston

Every weekend, or for that matter every night, college students, to use the term lightly, are hooking up. You go out, have a few beers, meet a man or a woman and go someplace and have a sexual encounter. But in the actual act of the sexual encounter you forget to use a condom.

At the time you think that it is no big deal. You wake up the next morning and begin to think to yourself, what did I do? After a few days of worrying it slowly slips your mind and you forget all about it. Little do you know that you might have contracted the disease AIDS. Or herpes, gonorrhea, warts, etc...

Just imagine ten years down the road you are married and have a child. You are living out the American dream. White picket fence, a dog named Spot and a BMW parked in the driveway. One day you begin to feel fatigued.

It does not go away within a week, as you had hoped. Upon a visit to the doctor, you learn you have AIDS. With this you also learn that your wife and child are more than likely to have AIDS as well.

But just think about all the people that you have ever slept with in an unsafe sexual encounter. Will they have AIDS? What do you think...? Of course they will! If it takes you that long to answer that question than you are an idiot.

What I am trying to get at is that AIDS is all around us. I would even venture to say that we as college students are more susceptible than most people. Because of this you have to be extra safe when you engage in a sexual encounter.

Don't throw your life away for fifteen minutes of ecstasy. It is not worth it. If you think that you might have contracted AIDS or for that matter any sexual disease, go and get checked at Health Services. You do not have to feel embarrassed, these people see it everyday.

If you happen to glance over this piece, please just remember one thing. All the money that Magic Johnson accumulated will not be enough to save his life.

Weird things could happen; plants may grow in your sink

The strangest thing happened! I was washing dishes in the bathroom when a friend of mine walks in. She peers into a sink and says "Oh my God! There is a plant growing in the sink!"

I was doubtful, but after meandering over myself, I found she was right. In the middle of the overflow pipe at the top of the sink was a sprout peeking it's leaves through the opening. I tugged it out, and discovered it was mine. How'd I know? Days before, I was rinsing pumpkin seeds in that sink so I could toast them, and one went in the drain pipe. I thought nothing of it at the time.

Lorrie L. Cozzens

So now I am growing a pumpkin sprout in my room, and if I ever get a pumpkin from it, I'll be making fresh pumpkin pie around February; and you're all invited to have some should that day ever arrive.

Geez! I'll tell you, the gullibility factor around here astounds me at times. I've had people come up to me and congratulate me on my impending "marriage." I didn't think you would actually believe me! I'm going to share with you all a tad bit o'information: Don't believe everything you read. (Although, facts printed in the previous column really are true.)

Aren't relatives wonderful? (I know they can be brutal at Christmas when they pinch your cheeks and exclaim about how much you've grown.) My relatives always know when I have a bad day, because it's then I get something in the mail. Whether it be a card or emergency chocolate, I always feel better afterwards. So now I'm going to thank them publicly for being such sweethearts, even though they do not live in this state. Curses upon you who don't write back!

Is it just me, or are those voice mail chain messages with graphic stories starting to get mighty irritating? I won't speak for everyone, but I've got lots of work to do around here. Where do people find the time do this stuff? Obviously, someone goes through great pains to create these ditties. Call me crazy, but I'd rather be forced to watch reruns of "Webster" and "Silver Spoons" than have this junk sent to me.

My dream is to have my name in the grey highlight box on the front of this newspaper. Also to achieve the "columnist" status would be cool. Okay, so they are small dreams. I'd also like to be a famous writer/film producer. But there is nothing wrong with a little instant gratification from (very) short term goals. Besides, I've never exactly been known for my outstanding volume of patience.

I've been told that I ought to write about more serious topics. Should the mood strike, I most certainly will. However, it's people like myself, (and that other bagel-sweater-graffiti dude) who use our allotted space to provide energy deprived college persons with a little entertainment that pits that crooked grin on your face for two minutes. It's worth it. Besides, columns like these provide good conversation openers: "Did you read about that weird woman growing pumpkins in the bathroom?" Maybe not, but I can not resist the opportunity to plug my own column.

Until next time, remember, "I'm not wrong, your just misinterpreting the quality of my genius." Signing off...

Divisive tactics won't work

In any struggle it is important to know one's opponent. It is imperative that the motives of each action be understood by the other side. Each side must realize that the other will work in their own best interest. They key is understanding how and why each action took place in order to reduce the other side's effectiveness.

Chancellor O'Brien has taken several actions recently in response to the GEO strike that at first I found confusing or simple-minded. However, upon analysis, I found that he is cleverly using the concept of divide and conquer in a novel way.

The first of these actions occurred when the Chancellor moved his Thursday press conference from Whitmore to the Robsham Visitors' Center. The analogy has been made that this was like moving from a fortress to a phone booth. O'Brien's true goal, however, is to focus the strike on himself and take the struggle away from the halls and employees of Whitmore.

O'Brien's maneuvering also confused me when I saw his "Open Letter to the Undergraduate Students" in Friday's Collegian. The Chancellor used expressions like "has been threatened with a strike" and "if a strike does occur" in an newspaper printed on the second day of the strike. My original reaction was that he wrote the ad long before the strike began and forgot that the paper would be read after the strike had started.

This letter contrasts with an open letter to graduate employees printed one day earlier but dated the same day (November 13, the day before the strike started) which did not place the existence of the strike in doubt. Obviously, the Chancellor wished to treat the graduate employees with more respect than the undergraduates, whose ignorance he falsely assumed. After many hours of thought, however, I realized that he was attempting to mock the strike and its effects. The remainder of his open letter proves this.

The Chancellor goes on to say to undergraduates, if I may paraphrase, "Don't worry. Don't get involved. It won't affect you." The Chancellor was aware well in advance that GEO would blame the strike on the administration's stubbornness, so he acted to balance this important move.

Despite the Chancellor's preparation, there is one thing he could not accomplish. He can't get me to believe this.

Scabs and alternative grading methods will not replace the education I am losing. As far as I am concerned, the TAs on strike are irreplaceable and must have their fair and reasonable demands met. The Chancellor needs to understand that many of us care more about the quality of our education than our actual final grades. The Chancellor's plan is nothing but an ill fitting Band-Aid on a much larger wound and we know it.

Now that I understand the Chancellor's attempts to alienate us from the strike, I will refuse to let him do this.

Open letter to Chancellor O'Brien

I came in to school Monday and someone said "The Chancellor wants to know where you were on Thursday and Friday." I thought they were joking until I picked your letter up from my mailbox. (Did the Whitmore office pay someone overtime to sneak it in late Friday evening?) Let me read my contract the way I see it. . .with a few minor details. First, as a research assistant, I am not paid strictly by the hour. My contract says that I am to work 20 hours a week to get my job done. There is nothing about working Thursdays or Fridays. There is nothing even about working nine to five. As long as I put in my 20 hours and get my job done, there is nothing to stop me from going hot air ballooning on Thursday and picketing for GEO outside the GRC on Friday. If I did not get my job done, it gives my supervisor the authority to inform my dean and terminate the contract.

In my opinion, there are two groups of people who do more than fulfill their contractual obligations. Yes, the faculty and the graduate student employees. As your office as handed down more and more budget cuts and hiring freezes, our faculty have done more to bring in external funds and bear a heavier teaching load at the same time. Teaching assistants have taken up the burden of filling in for frozen faculty positions. Fewer research assistants are trying to keep up the pace of research output. The way we see it, there are folks at the administration end of the campus who have let us down and are certainly NOT fulfilling their contractual obligation of keeping the University afloat! Perhaps all of you in Whitmore should publish the pages from your appointment books for last Thursday and Friday. (I'm sure the Collegian or the Campus Chronicle would oblige.)

I am not signing the letter that you had sent (under penalty of whatever). And I am not returning the unsigned letter to your office or to payroll (I recycled it). In fact, I still think that the letter was such a hollow and transparent threat. The big-wigs at Whitmore are funny (I'm borrowing a phrase from The Sound of Music). "Expensive, but very funny!"

Not all grad students support GEO

The Graduate Employee Organization went on strike with the expressed intention to "decimate" the University in a bid to force recognition from the administration. As anyone who walked through campus the last two days has seen, the result is a light turn-out and ineffective show of support from all segments of the University.

Members of the GEO show surprise at the lack of action, but the majority of graduate students who ignored the strike call are simply keying the GEO hierarchy into a well-known fact: many of us don't want unionization. Less than a third of eligible graduate students belong to GEO and there is widespread dissatisfaction with the adversarial manner they have assumed with the administration. Indeed, amidst the many hallway conversations among graduate students about the strike is a pervasive attitude that the administration's latest offers are respectable and worthy of continued talk.

The bottom line of this strike is the agency fee and long-term survival of the GEO as a UAW surrogate on campus. Frankly, I do not understand the chaos that rejection of the agency fee by the administration has engendered among the GEO. It seems to many of us that the GEO has made real progress during negotiations about the important issues that affect grads across this campus, but is willing to submarine everything they are working for to clasp onto an irrelevant association with the UAW.

Indeed, the administration is negotiating in good faith (remember, they don't need to negotiate at all!) while the GEO is bleating to every other group on campus to support a graduate student population that will not strike, will not support an agency fee and will not succumb to the irresponsible rhetoric of Emily Isaacs and her cohorts in the GEO leadership. An organization that truly represents graduate student empowerment wouldn't have to beg undergraduates to skip class to "cut up this University." I find it insulting for this small minority of graduate students to attempt coercing undergraduates into missing class. That is not our mission at this University. We are here to disseminate knowledge, not block it from people that are paying for an education.

All graduate students support waivers for the many fees that come with graduate school. We all want dialogue to continue with the University, but it is wake-up time for the GEO and their cloying insistence on unionization. The GEO as it stands now has been successful in bolstering the graduate student agenda and I support those activities. But unionization does not clearly further our goals as graduate students (all grads, not just GEO members) and this disappointing strike has only served to undercut us all.

Condoms, Swayze and Osaka on HSCN

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN

Yo, Schwarzenegger fans, AHnold is back this week in Terminator 2: Judgement Day. Other new releases to keep an eye out for are: Sleeping with the Enemy, Pacific Heights, and Scenes from a Mall. Keep that popcorn popping this week, because there are more than a few hot picks that you won't want to miss.

The Evil That Men Do — Charles Bronson, Theresa Saldana, Joseph Meher. Very violent, but what else does Bronson do? Bronson is a professional killer tailing an evil British doctor. Worth watching only if you can stand that face of Bronson's for a couple of hours. (Is it me, or does the man look like and elderly Sharpei?) *1/2

Skin Deep — John Ritter, Vincent Gardenia, Alyson Reed. Writer/director Blake Edwards introduces some unforgettable condoms as well as a lot of laughs in this zany spoof. Ritter is a very successful writer who just can't seem to keep his hands off the wine and the women. Extremely predictable, but who cares?

Stormy Monday — Melanie Griffith, Tommy Lee Jones, Sting, Sean Bean. Sharp, sassy film about four people in the financially depraved city of Newcastle. Excellent performances by all four leads, and writer/director Mike Figgis brilliantly contrives striking visual images. 1/2

Terminator 2: Judgement Day — Arnold Schwarzenegger, Robert Patrick, Linda Hamilton. Schwarzeneggar's back, but this time he's the good guy, and he must protect Hamilton's son, John, who is being targeted for termination by the advanced evil cyborg played by Patrick. You won't get much dialogue from Patrick, but the special effects instilled upon his body will completely blow you away. 1/2

True Believer — James Woods, Robert Downey, Jr., Yuji Okumoto. The late 80s brought about many popular courtoom drama/action/adventure movies like Suspect, Nuts, Jagged Edge, etc., but here is a fine movie from '89 that I felt was unfairly glossed over just because it was "another courtroom film." Woods is brilliant as a once-radical 60s lawyer who's lost some of his drive and desire until his worshipping clerk (Downey) talks him into taking on a seemingly impossible case. Extremely entertaining. ****

The Sicilian — Christopher Lambert, Terrence Stamp, Barbara Sukowa. Biography of Salvatore Giulano who took on the Mafia, the Church, and the State to attempt to promote the secession of Italy in the late 1940s. The movie is done with few traces of either style or taste. I got indigestion watching this disaster. No stars.

1984 — John Hurt, Richard Burton, Suzanna Hamilton. Remake of the 1956 film. Bleak and austere, but with an overall masterful effect. ***

Black Rain — Michael Douglas, Andy Garcia, Kate Capshaw. Two tough New York cops track down an escaped Japanese criminal in Osaka. A wonderfully sleek Garcia. 1/2

Cinema Paradiso — Philippe Noiret, Jacques Perrin, Salvatore Cascio. (With subtitles.) A young boy is dazzled by a movie theatre and its projectionist in a small post-WWII Italian town. Cannes Film Festival winner of 1989. A splendidly superior film. Don't miss this one! ****

Ghost — Patrick Swayze, Demi Moore, Whoopi Goldberg. Fantasy, romance and mystery combine to make one fantastic movie. Goldberg won Best Supporting Actress. ****

Harlem Nights — Eddie Murphy, Richard Pryor, Redd Foxx. Murphy's writer/directorial debut which flopped. Pryor is magnetic and is hysterical as ever, but even the star-studded cast can't save this one.*1/2

Boys From Brazil — Gregory Peck, Laurence Olivier,

HCSN

James Mason. A jewish Nazi-hunter (Olivier) is stunningly believable, and Peck is wonderfully conniving as the former Nazi who desires to make a new breed of Hitlers. Based on the Ira Levin novel. Worth watching! 1/2

Brother Sun Sister Moon — Graham Faulkner, Judi Bowker, Leigh Lawson. Directed by Franco Zefferelli. Story of Francis Assisi from a youthful perspective. **

Hope and Glory — Sarah Miles, David Hayman, Derrick O'Connor. Autobiographical of director John Boorman, the film lovingly and cleverly looks at the British during WWII through the eyes of a young, curious boy. A rare treat. ****

Ice Castles — Lynn-Holly Johnson, Robby Benson, Colleen Dewhurst. Uh-oh, tear jerker alert! Yes, I cried, and you will, too. An Iowa farm girl/professional ice skater has her dreams violently interrupted when she is blinded in a horrible freak accident. 1/2

Jagged Edge — Jeff Bridges, Glenn Close, Robert Loggia. Close is a lawyer who will defend her client only if she believes he is innocent of murdering his wife. Well, she believes him as well as falls jin love with him. Too many loopholes in the plot, but generally a good movie. ***

Pacific Heights — Michael Keaton, Melanie Griffith, Matthew Modine. Griffith and Modine buy an old Victorian and rent out rooms, but this one tenant just won't leave. Keaton is a landlord's worst nightmare as he devilishly slithers around paying rent. A couple of real shock scenes make the movie, but the very end is somewhat predictable. You'll cheer for Griffith, though. 1/2

Movies that are on HSCN this week but are not reviewed are the following: Sleeping with the Enemy, Miller's Crossing, and Scenes from a Mall.

How American Express helps you cover more territory. For less money.

Become a Student Cardmember today and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only $129 or $189 each.

Only the American Express® Card offers an exciting travel program exclusively for students—including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines. And much, much more.

Just look at the map and pick the place you'd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fly for only $129* roundtrip. Or you can cross the Mississippi for $189 roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytime—because there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

Membership Has Its Privileges®

By becoming a Student Cardmember, you'll also enjoy other benefits from the American Express® Student Privileges™ Program. Such as up to 30 minutes of MCI long-distance calling every month for an entire year—absolutely free. And that's just one example of how the Card can help you save.

For just $55 a year, the Card gives you all these savings. And it's easy to apply. Just call us (have your bank address and account number on hand). What's more, with our special student offer, it's easier to get the Card now while you're still in school than it may ever be again.

So get the Card. And get ready to cover new territory on either side of our Great Continental Divide.

*Minneapolis-St. Paul-St. Louis and New Orleans are considered cities east of the Mississippi River.

A credit of up to $5.70 for calls will appear on each billing statement for 12 months after enrollment. $1.70 is equal to the charges for a domestic, 30-minute night-weekend MCI Card-Compass Salary call and appropriate surcharges. You must enroll for this service by December 31, 1991.

Third World Affairs

The wave of the future: beyond the New World Order

The age of ideology is over. The days in which the competing universalist moral ideologies of communism and capitalism engaged in a teleological crusade for the soul of mankind are gone. With the long-overdue demise of moral ideology, what then are the forces that are likely to effect relationships between societies, cultures, peoples, and nations?

We are left with the drives of nationalism, racism, religion, and greed. Nationalism remains a potent force, although it may be undergoing various kinds of reconfiguration in both the developing and developed worlds. You all know plenty about the racism that drives aggression and subjugation. Especially in the South, religion and the awesome power of faith remain one of the most potent inspirations. Finally, greed, of the kind that drives the re-invigorated lust for plunder, may be the single most powerful driving force, especially in the industrial North.

Currently, the globe is run by a co-operative Northern alliance under the strict leadership of the United States, in a system that has been described as "functionally pragmatic transnationalism." In other words, the states of the North have been willing to see many of their pressing concerns in the context of a broad alliance, and have placed themselves under U.S. leadership. Yet, the factors of nationalism and, more importantly, greed, put the future of this asymmetrical relationship in doubt. Are the Germans and Japanese free of ambition? Are you kidding?

The continued domination of the U.S. is most undermined by the total inability of this country to compete economically with German-led EEC and Japan. After all, the game ultimately is a bid for the loot pillaged from the rest of the globe. The cliche is that politics is about "who gets what, how, etc." but it's still quite right. The U.S. economy fails at every level, and shows no signs of the requisite restructuring. It is simply outclassed.

The relentless drive towards an integrated global economy has resulted in a shift in power and the emergence of a multipolar economic order. The new reality is most loudly announced by the collapse of the Bretton-Woods system of unilaterally-imposed "multilateralism" and its centerpiece, GATT. The world is witnessing the relentless drive towards "quasi-trading blocks," each dominated by one of the three economic superpowers, between which trade will be managed. The days of the non-competitive niche are gone, and the North is likely to experience a set of ruthless trade wars as all move to gain the largest possible share of important emergent markets like microelectronics, biotechnology, and the new materials industry. The U.S. is not well placed.

Multilateralism being dead, has the first great bilateral alliance already been made between the EEC and Japan? Is the U.S. in danger of being frozen out? Are the British the only Europeans left who see the U.S. as a more strategically valuable ally? There is no doubt that the most senior U.S. policy makers are wondering.

Essentially, the United States has two choices. The first would be to bite the bullet and endure the excruciating pain of total societal restructuring to re-invigorate competitiveness. This option would be very unpopular, risky in many ways, and may well be seen as impossible. Hence it is very unlikely. Instead, it will probably seek to control the alliance by emphasizing the role of military power projection over that of economic competition.

Hussein Ibish

The U.S. will seek to play the role of the "heavy" in the Third World and the referee in the North. By extending and utilizing its relative monopoly on military power projection capacity, it will attempt to control the access to, and distribution of, the raw materials of the South. In this way it sets itself up as the guarantor of "stability" and the grand arbiter. In this context, note the distinct lack of enthusiasm for the Gulf War in Bonn and Tokyo. They understand the implications.

To maintain this monopoly, the U.S. will have to restrain the development of any independent, ambitious military development of Japan, and simply insist that they pay for U.S. adventurism. In Europe, the U.S. must seek to keep defense structures centered around an American dominated NATO, and preclude or supercede any independent power, such as the proposed Franco-German armed force. Ofcourse, the focus of NATO will have to turn away from Europe, and towards the South. Among other Anglo-American moves in that direction, the Gulf War can be readily seen as a NATO war.

The U.S. will also have to carefully manage the emasculation of the USSR and its sucsessors, and make sure that no uncontrollable variables arise from its ashes. It will also have to ensure the Northern monopoly on deterrence by prohibiting the spread of nuclear weapons and missile technology.

In sum, what we are most likely to see is a United States which increasingly relies on military might, with an increasing propensity to intervene, and struggling to avoid increasing marginalization. "Stability" of the system becomes the obsessive and monomaniacal concern of an economically declining superpower.

For the Third World, of course, all this signals the dawning of an era of the darkest tyranny. Those regions with loot left to plunder can expect an immediate process of re-colonization. The rest will be marginalized in an unprecedented manner. Can we see the globe as a kind of planetary metropolis with rich suburbs, productive areas of exploitation, and increasingly violent slums?

In any case, control of the Middle East, with its vast energy resources and strategic maritime "chokepoints", has clearly become the lynchpin of U.S. pre-eminence. Hence the need to destroy Iraq, to colonize the peninsula, to crush the Palestinians, etc. The same pattern of control applies less dramatically in other resource rich areas as the U.S. seeks to blackmail its friends.

But the emergence of the rivals will happen, sooner or later. If it is managed well, the emerging trade zones will become "spheres of influence" and "zones of stability" in a U.S. dominated system. If badly managed, they will become colonies of the newly competing rival empires of the developed world.

Either way, the results for the Third World will be more of the same: exploitation, plundering of resources, debt pillage, intervention, and the net transfer of wealth from South to North. The rule is: the rich beat the poor, and the poor pay the rich.

But the slums may not be quiet for long. The South fairly seethes with rage at the oppression it experiences. If ideology is dead in the North, what makes anyone think that the new spirit of "realism" and ruthlessness won't have a Southern dimension? Here the driving factors are likely to be nationalism and religion.

Many parts of the Third World are ready to explode, and the recent changes may well light the fuse. We are likely to witness new forms of resistance and rebellion, non-ideological, fantastically sophisticated, and utterly ruthless. As ruthless as the North.

The technology behind the New World Order indicates that it contains within itself the seeds of its own destruction. As sophisticated technology spreads, it will link with the new spirit of resistance and lead to the potential for undreamed of chaos. Ideology is dead. It may well be replaced by proportional response, something the North has not experienced in this century. It is probable that no one can really imagine the ferocity and determination of proportionate response in a world like ours. But the end of the age of ideology ushers in the era of competition and conflict at a revolutionary level of bitterness and violence.

India in the 1990s: 'a powder keg waiting to explode'

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

The past several months have witnessed dramatic and far-reaching developments in the Indian subcontinent — the assassination of former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, the collapse of a coalition government, the worst economic crisis since India's independence from the British in 1947, an unprecedented opening up of India's tightly-controlled markets to the West, and an alarming rise in tensions along lines of caste and religion.

Members of the Indian community on this and other campuses had a wide variety of opinions, analyses, and predictions.

Ahmed Ali Nawaz from Calcutta, a second-year computer science student at Hampshire College, said that the rise of religious extremism and anti-Muslim sentiment was a very unfortunate situation. "It is deplorable that religion is being used by politicians as an instrument to fulfil their own agendas," he said. "This is also fueling secessionist movements in states like Kashmir, which will threaten the Indian union."

Echoing some of these concerns, R. Aparna from Bangalore, studying economics at MIT, said, "Slogans like "Muslims belong either in Pakistan or in the graveyard" endanger the very principles of secularism on which this country was founded." She said that the stage is being set so that only those parties which are ideology-based will survive — whether those ideologies are credible or not.

N. Venkateswaran from Vellore, studying astronomy at the University of Hawaii, said, "A major socio-economic development in the past few decades has been the growth of a huge urban consumer class. This was brought about by a large industrial infrastructure, agricultural self-sufficiency, growing literacy, and open access to information about the outside world."

The boom in the Middle East and the prosperity of other Asian countries like Singapore, Taiwan, and Korea also caught people's eye, he said. "Now the average Indian wants something more than the previously closely-managed economy allowed, and this led to the drive for liberalization," Venkateswaran said.

Athena Kashyap from Bombay, studying history and political philosophy at Mt. Holyoke College, deplored the increasing "bourgeoisation" among urban middle classes. "This 'washing-machine syndrome,' with its clamor for goods like microwave ovens, is out of place in the Indian context," she said, "since most of India's population lives in the villages and has negligible use for such commodities."

S. Harpreet from New Delhi, a computer science graduate student at UMass, added that two major factors leading up to the current economic crunch were import liberalization during the Rajiv Gandhi era, and the Gulf War which caused thinning of foreign exchange reserves. "The extreme desire to enter the world market might prove disastrous in the long run," Harpreet said.

The opening of the Indian economy to multinational companies in the area of consumer production may lead to a crisis sooner than expected, he said. "For instance, you have companies like Kellogg converting a common man's source of nourishment, maize, into flakes and selling it at ten times the price."

Elaborating on this issue, Uma Surkund from Delhi, an economics senior at Mt. Holyoke College, said that Pepsi, which owns a potato chip industry in the state of Punjab, has bought fields where instead of wheat, a special kind of potato for chips is now being grown. "In this manner, whether we like it or not, our increasing dependence on the West is going to have far-reaching consequences on our own society," she said.

An important player in this scenario is the International Monetary Fund (IMF), to which India is turning for loans to help overcome its current external debt of 80 billion dollars, up from 20 billion in 1980.

A. Arora from New Delhi, teaching economics at Carnegie-Mellon University, said that one of the problems with turning to the IMF is its strong ideological tilt towards free trade, which is not always a good thing from India's point of view.

S. Sunder from Madras, studying computer engineering at the University of Illinois, said, "What we need is a middle ground between government control and complete laissez-faire. We must remember that the IMF is not a charitable organization, but has a responsibility to do whatever it takes to enable recovery of money lent to other countries."

Addressing India's international role, Sunder said that India's foreign policy will have to become increasingly isolationist and opportunistic. "We have taken progressive stances in the past and developed a Leftist image, but now it looks as if we have to lose some of our dignity and self-respect, and do everything we can to woo the U.S. and Japan. The way we stand, beggars can't be choosers," Sunder said.

Yatin Marathe from Bombay, a polymer science researcher at UMass who just returned from a visit to India, said, "Indians abroad will find it hard to visualize just how rapidly things are changing in India, even from week to week."

The currency is being devalued as per IMF regulations, and food prices and transportation costs are spiralling upward in an alarming manner, he said. "Meanwhile, the middle classes in cities lap up MTV programs, CNN, and American football and baseball, which are recent arrivals on the Indian TV scene," he said. He condemned this "unabashed admiration for Western media." Non-resident Indians (NRIs) are also exacerbating this situation by using their now-powerful dollars to buy real estate, he said.

"I am alarmed by the lack of deep analysis of both local and global issues, on the part of Indian intellectuals," Marathe said. "While the collapse of the Soviet Union has spelled disaster for the people of Iraq during the genocide, it has also adversely affected India's trade and military ties with the Soviets — yet, most intellectuals look up to Gorbachev as some kind of hero."

The United States is likely to demand inspection and restriction of India's nuclear and missile programs, Marathe said.

Assessing the future, Marathe said, "We are now watching a once-proud Third World giant selling itself out willingly, and reducing itself to a state of vassalage. There is nothing but deprivation, chaos, and strife ahead. India is a gunpowder keg, just waiting to explode."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Spend part of today developing long-term plans. Do not involve someone in the decision-making process just because he is paying you for a certain service. Seek advice from experts only.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Travel could complicate your efforts to get things done today. Rely on others to follow your instructions. Take tests and welcome challenges. Being on time to an appointment could make you a winner.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Be as flexible as possible when planning your work schedule for today. Look for opportunities to advance a pet cause and increase business. Romance takes a temporary backseat to your career.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): A good day for making an inventory, disposing of clutter and getting your home ready for colder weather. Enjoy a platonic relationship without trying to change it. Pay special attention to small details.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Respect and courage are the code words that will bring success today. Stand up for your principles and you will emerge the big winner now. Keep spending to a minimum this week. An inspiring voice should be heeded.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Refuse to be kept in the dark about financial matters. Know what is going on and what people are talking about. Higher-ups ask probing questions. Have the answers at your fingertips.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day for spontaneous invitations, heart-to-heart conversations and short business trips. Although your evening may be demanding, you feel proud to be a part of things!

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Opportunity knocks very loudly today. The resources you have mustered recently will come in handy. Do not join others in making unnecessary criticisms. Emphasize the need for teamwork.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Push financial, domestic and budgetary matters. A child's disposition may cause some concern. Set a good example! Getting married now may have its drawbacks. Plunge into a creative hobby tonight.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The day generates strong convictions and a rather conservative attitude. Do not allow prejudice to influence public policy. Tolerance breeds harmony. A friend shares wonderful news.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone could urge you to spend money unwisely. Make your own decisions. Purchase what you need before buying what you want. Avoid people who try to nag or flatter you into doing their bidding.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Prudence and teamwork are essential to business success. Be more adaptable to changing circumstances. Temptation is strong during the evening hours. Remember your promises to a loved one.

Case continued against Red Wing player

BOSTON (AP) — A Boston Municipal Court judge has continued the case of a Boston Bruins fan charged with attacking Detroit Red Wings Captain Steve Yzerman earlier this month.

A court spokesman said Tuesday that Judge William J. Tierney continued Paul Colletti's case until Dec. 16, when it will be scheduled for a trial.

Colletti, 20, of Braintree, was charged with assault and battery and being a disorderly person following a scuffle at a Nov. 2 game.

Colletti initially said Yzerman hit him in the right eye with the butt end of his hockey stick as he left the ice at Boston Garden.

Later, Colletti admitted that the story was untrue, saying he lied to explain his own black eye. He said he still didn't know how he received that injury.

He also said he regretting blaming Yzerman, adding: "I think he's a fantastic hockey player."

Yzerman maintained he never struck Colletti, even after the Braintree sanitation worker allegedly punched him. Detroit coach Bryan Murray said a videotape also supports Yzerman's account.

Colletti, who spent the night in the Government Center police station, is free on $25 bail. The court spokesman said no attorney has yet entered an appearance on Colletti's behalf.

"I used to be technologically deficient, and had no practical skills other than Nintendo. Then I went to work at the Collegian. Now I can pump up my resume with all kinds of neat things.

Women harriers finish season on down note

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

On Saturday, the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team closed out it's season in less than dramatic fashion, finishing 20th at the ECAC Championship's in Bethleham, PA

Although Coach Julie LaFreniere and the Minutewomen would have rather brought home a top 10 finish from Lehigh, the lady harriers can instead bring home a season full of memories in a year which will surely be one for the books.

The 1991 season definitely will be one LaFreniere remembers, as it was the type that drive most coaches to ulcers and hair pulling.

The troubles started early for the Minutewomen, preseason to be exact.

During pre-season training, returning team MVP Kelly Liljeblad suffered what was feared to be a season ending arch injury, starting what would be a season long plague of injuries for the Minutewomen.

The troubles continued for the Minutewomen, as in their first meet with Boston College both Kim Liljeblad and Maureen Meldrim fell victim to injuries, although both would run in the 18-45 loss to the Lady Eagles.

While Kim Liljeblad would continue to stay healthy and running, the B.C. meet would prove to be the last for Meldrim, who the next week was shelved for the entire year with mono.

Add injuries to Tracy Delutis, Becky Johnson, Cheryl Lyons, and Tricia Mathiesen, and the season was shaping up as one of disaster for the Minutewomen.

However, behind the determined running of senior captain Michelle St. Laurent and the motivation of LaFreniere, everything would soon fall into place for the Minutewomen.

October 11th marked the women's fourth meet of the season, and also the return of Kelly Liljeblad to the Minutewomen five and a second place team finish behind twin Kim.

Liljeblad's return, along with the improved running of twin sister Kim, and the return to form by Johnson, added the much needed stability LaFreniere was looking for, as the Minutewomen headed to Van Cortland Park, NY for the Atlantic 10 Championships.

It was in the Bronx that day that the season of hard work and dedication reached it's apex for the Minutewomen.

Behind the strong running of St. Laurent and the rest of the team, the Minutewomen rode back to Amherst with the team's first ever A-10 crown, and an Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year award for LaFreneire.

Altough the last meet may not show it, the UMass women's cross country team's 1991 season was one full of good memories, and LaFreniere and the team have nothing to hang their heads about.

And with the 1992 season looming just nine short months ahead, the team should look ahead with eager anticipation to the season, one which should again prove succesfull for LaFreniere and her team.

You can get tickets on Thursday to see Tony Barbee shoot the three against Keene State when the Minutemen take them on in the Curry Hicks Cage, Monday.

SPORTS NOTICE

Student tickets for the Nov. 25 men's basketball game against Keene State will be available Thurs., Nov. 21. They can be picked up between 7 a.m. and 3 p.m. in the lobby of Curry Hicks Cage. Students with a valid undergraduate I.D. can obtain one general admission ticket.

Red Auerbach called and suggested the cigar, I couldn't object, Red knows what works.

"Everyone needs a trademark, kid," Red said.

"Sure, Red. Mind if I borrow yours? I could light up after each successful column."

"Go ahead, kid, just make sure they're the good Cuban cigars."

No problem. Anyways, time to sort through the junk drawer of sports tidbits.

• It says here that whether Magic plays in the 1992 Olympics or not, the man deserves a gold medal. Along with Larry Bird, the Magic man did more for the sport of basketball than anyone since Naismith. Period.

• UConn's women's soccer coach Len Tsantiris ranks right up there with Don King as a candidate for the "Ding Dong of the Year" trophy.

UConn beats UMass on a purely coincidental goal and the guy says it was planned. Right, and David Duke's going to be inducted into the Motown Hall of Fame. At least UConn lost to Virginia this past weekend. Too bad Lenny.

• Hugh Millen and the Pats are almost done with their soon to be published book, "101 Ways to Drive a New England Fan to Drink." My roommate is still wandering around the house aimlessly saying, "How could they lose that [expletive] game?"

Problem is, he's been saying it four straight weeks. If they could only get blown out legitimately...

David Scott

• I was a season ticket holder when the NFL players went on strike but I still went to the Scab Games. They were fun and our seats were great. So why not bring in scabs during the GEO strike?

Some of the scabs could even stay on and become professors if they teach a few good classes. Otherwise I'd like a refund for the classes I'm missing.

• It's bad enough that the adminstartion cut men's soccer, now World Cup USA 1994 says they don't want to bring the games to an area that can't support and promote soccer.

That could translate into millions of dollars of lost revenue that the World Cup would bring to the Boston area, get the feeling that Willie Weld might be making a few calls to Amherst?

• It's nice to see Notre Dame lose a few games, but they still get a major bowl bid. It'll be a good way for Lou Holtz to end his college coaching career, I suppose.

• My dog Bo was called to fill in for Damiani in Saturday's fight against Holyfield. He decided it wasn't in his best interest to dodge a rematch with neighborhood bully Rock. Rock's people declined to comment. Holyfield should consider himself lucky.

• Of course we hated Vinnie Johnson when he was with Detroit, but there's a place for the Microwave in the Garden.

• It's better to have the Celtics and Bruins hurt at this time of year then during April and May.

• There was some really poor refereeing in the NFL this past weekend and Dallas Coach Jimmy Johnson was absolutely right in voicing his opinion. Commissioner Paul Tagliabue knew he was right too, Johnson received no fines, just a warning.

• My pool game is really getting much better. No, that's a lie. My partner selection is improving. Friday night I (we) went three for five with some super bank shots.

• From the pictures, I had a tough time deciphering the Lithuania women's team from the men's team.

• Roger Clemens deserved the Cy Young, but his acceptance from the golf course in Hawaii sort of took something away from the announcement.

• Dick Vitale won't be here for Friday's game, but Dan Patrick and Clark "Special K" Kellogg will be on hand. Dick's obviously waiting for the Minutemen to get a few wins under their belt.

• I'd give the ball to Jerome Bledsoe every play on Saturday just to ensure he gets the single-season rushing record for UMass. I'd venture to guess Jim Reid feels the same way. Bledsoe's the kind of player you might not appreciate while you're watching him, but down the road you'll be happy to say you saw him carry the ball.

Professors' sympathy strike called off

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

More than 300 members of the Graduate Employees Organization and other campus unions rallied to show solidarity with graduate employee's week-long strike yesterday on the Student Union Steps even while several agreements were announced between the administration, the GEO and the Faculty union.

Massachusetts Society Professors President David Lenson told protesters he had just made an agreement with Chancellor Richard O'Brien to withdraw the threat of firing graduate students and collecting tuition and fee waivers.

In return, the MSP, which had voted Tuesday night to hold a sympathy strike, will continue to teach tomorrow.

"The MSP owes GEO a tremendous debt of gratitude for bringing us together," Lenson said. "When you mobilize again, we'll be right behind you."

Lenson said the MSP's agreement with

Only ten minutes before yesterday's 11 a.m. deadline set the by Massachusetts Society of Professors for Chancellor Richard O'Brien to rescind his controversial letter or face a one-day sympathy strike by faculty, O'Brien called the president of the faculty union and told him he would withdraw the letter for now.

The letter threatens graduate employees with witholding wages, cancellation of tuition and fee waivers and the ending of employement contracts.

David Lenson, the president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the faculty union, said yesterday Chancellor O'Brien told him that he is not "presently contemplating termination of employee contracts nor the revocation of tuition and fee waivers."

At a press conference last night, after the bi-weekly Graduate Employee Organization membership meeting, Larry Mallory, one of the faculty union vice-presidents, said the union threatened O'Brien with a sympathy strike "because we felt the letter from O'Brien to graduate student employees was a pernicious and highly inflammatory document.

"[O'Brien] took out the punitive nature of the document," Mallory said. Attorneys for the United Auto Workers, GEO's parent union, have declared the letter illegal and a civil rights violation.

Mallory said O'Brien now only asks graduate employees to indicate on the form if they are working or striking. Those who return the form indicating they're not fulfilling their contractual duties will receive a paycheck tomorrow cut by 40 percent.

Still, Mallory said 70 faculty union members will join graduate employees on the picket line today in between teaching their classes.

Mallory expressed his desire to end this strike as soon as possible.

"It's really hurting the University," he said. "We are a community of scholars — that's not what's happening right now."

Jim Delle, a GEO member and a representative from the University Labor Council, which is made of up the five campus unions, read a statement from the council calling O'Brien's letter "a desperate attempt by management . . . ultimately to break the strike."

In other developments, both the administration and GEO officials mutually agreed to bring in an outside mediator to facilitate negotiations and try to end the week-long strike.

Emily Isaacs, co-speaker of GEO, said the strike will continue indefinitely until their demands are met.

Roberta Gulick, a member of the American Arbitration Association, is expected to arrive on campus today.

"We're very pleased with this choice," Isaacs said.

She said a mediator allows both sides to make their issues clear to an outside, unbiased arbitrator but warns, "It won't necessarily solve the conflict."

Graduate employees wearing "On strike" placards provided by the United Auto Workers rallied and chanted around major buildings on the sixth day of the strike.

"The strike is still on," Isaacs said.

UMass receives federal grant to fight illiteracy in Nepal

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Correspondant

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst received a $500,000 cooperative grant Oct. 1 to help combat adult illiteracy in Nepal.

The grant was awarded by the U.S. Agency of International Development under the new Linkages Project.

The Linkages Project promotes ties between U.S. universities and third world universities to promote internationalization in the United States and grassroots development abroad.

"At present, 64 percent of Nepal's adult population cannot read or write," said international education professor David Kinsey.

Over the next five years, the Center for International Education, part of UMass' School of Education, will work with the Research Center for Educational Innovation and Development, which is based at Tribhuvan University in Nepal.

Last spring, Kinsey submitted a proposal to the U.S. Agency of International Development. After a long process, UMass and 13 other universities were chosen out of the 164 universities that applied to receive the grant.

"We hope to use the grant to promote health, literacy and agriculture," said Kinsey.

Kinsey's two main goals for the project are to work together with third world countries to help them in their development needs, and to help promote internationalism in American universities.

Kinsey and Joan Dixon, a doctoral candidate in the School of Education, will be closely involved in the project through the next five years. Kinsey and Dixon plan to travel to Nepal either this December or January to initiate negotiations at Tribhuvan University with the university administration, Nepal's Ministry of Education and a number of non-governmental organizations and international agencies.

"I am looking forward to going to Nepal and getting to know the people there," said Dixon.

Out of the negotiations, Kinsey hopes to agree upon a work plan with the people at Tribhuvan University.

"Working with Tribhuvan University, we hope to assist them in applying their knowledge and skills to the improvement of literacy programs in their country," she said.

No teacher or student exchanges are planned, but it may be possible in the future if more funding becomes available from other sources, said Kinsey. There are many agencies interested in literacy in Nepal, which may be available for funding. "We hope to find additional funding in Nepal," said Kinsey.

In addition to their work in Nepal, Kinsey and Dixon hope to establish a network among the various UMass departments for faculty and students interested in international development.

Kinsey currently teaches a graduate course in literacy and the third world. In the future, a similar course in the Five College system may be offered to undergraduates.

A conference will be held on the role of basic education and literacy in third world development in September 1992. Three or four people from Nepal may be coming as participants, said Kinsey.

"For several years, we have been trying to have UMass support literacy. We hope that this project will contribute in a major way," said Kinsey.

The entire Southwest Residential Area lost power at 1:45 early this morning, according to police. Details in tommorrow's paper.

The sympathy strike that was to be staged by professors today would have been the first time for many graduate students to miss classes since the Graduate Employee Organization strike began last week.

At yesterday's noon rally, some GEO members stated they continue to go to classes despite the GEO's own strike actions.

Liliana Castenada Hidalgo, a communications doctoral candidate, said she did see some hypocrisy in continuing graduate classes.

"In a way I guess it is a hypocrisy our classes haven't been cancelled but we hope that they will be," she said.

Renee Heberle, a GEO spokesperson, explained that GEO members are still attending class because they are striking as workers, not students and added that attending class was a personal decision.

"GEO voted as a body to withhold our labor as grad employees," she said. "The faculty is not on strike and as grad students we are taught by the faculty.

"As far as going to classes, for undergraduates and graduates that is a personal decision. We have given people a list of options, including faculty. It is not a hypocrisy."

Shakuntala Rao, a doctoral candidate in communications, also defended his decision to continue attending class.

"It is not that we are engaging in hypocrisy," he said. "We have no other choice; our choices are limited."

Philosophy doctoral candidate and GEO member, Mecke Nabel said the GEO recommends moving graduate classes off-campus.

"From the beginning we have emphasized that we are graduate employees and students," he said.

Henry Theriault, a philosophy student, said that he has only attended classes held off-campus or in non-academic buildings since the strike began

"We want to be back in the classrooms," he said. "We want classes to be going on, but we are not willing to be exploited by the Administration to have that happen."

"The reason why we have to go to class is if we do not, we will fail out, and if we fail out the strike is useless."

Dog drool wakes boy from coma

By LARRY ROSENTHAL
Associated Press

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — An 11-year-old who suffered a near-fatal head injury two weeks ago put two words together for the first time since the accident thanks to his dog, Rusty.

"Bad Rusty," Donny Tomei said Tuesday as the frisky chow-collie puppy leaped onto him while he sat in a recliner.

"This is really 'a boy and his dog story,'" said Dr. Charles Duncan, a neurosurgeon.

Donny, who also ate his first food Tuesday since the accident, was hit by a car Nov. 4 and was in a coma for several days. He hadn't reacted to anything until last Thursday when Rusty licked his face and the boy smiled.

Although he still doesn't respond to all commands, "he clearly is not in a coma now," Duncan said.

Donny's condition began to improve markedly after his family got permission to bring his beloved dog to the hospital.

"Lots of people have known for a long time that after a head injury like this. Patients tend to respond to their families, people they know well, far sooner than they do to the nurses and doctors taking care of them," Duncan said.

Now that you can see the progress it sure makes it a lot easier," said the boy's 23-year-old sister, Angela Manacchio.

Dr. suspended for aiding suicides

By JEFF HOLYFIELD
Associated Press

LANSING, Mich. — The Michigan Board of Medicine voted unanimously yesterday to suspend the licence of Dr. Jack Kevorkian, a retired pathologist who has helped three women to commit suicide in the past two years.

Board members said they wanted to send a message that Kevorkian's action was unacceptable. The also said they expect Kevorkian to appeal the ruling almost immediately.

Kevorkian has said he would help more people commit suicide even if he lost his medical licence.

State Attorney General Frank Kelley had sought the board's action.

"Regardless of his motives, Doctor Kevorkian's actions appear to be beyond the law. They must be addressed by the proper authority. Under our system, people are not allowed to take the law into their own hands," Kelley said.

Kelley said state law gives the board the power to suspend or revoke Kevorkian's license if it finds the doctor has acted in a negligent or incompetent manner or has administered drugs for other than lawful diagnostic or therapuetic purposes.

Kevorkian's attorney, Geoffrey Fieger, was out of the country until Dec. 4 and unavailable for comment, his office said. No one answered the telephone at Kevorkian's home in Royal Oak this morning.

Kevorkian assisted in the Oct. 23 suicides of two Michigan women; one had multiple sclerosis and the other one suffered from a painful — but not terminal — disease that required 10 pelvic operations.

Memorial service held for professor

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Deceased University of Massachusetts Economics Professor Leonard A. Rapping was honored yesterday at a memorial service held in the Hillel House.

Rapping, who died from a heart attack in Boston Oct. 2, was a nationally-known economist.

He wrote several books including "The Economic Value of the American Merchant Marine" and "International Reorganization and American Economic Policy."

About 45 colleagues, former students, family and friends attended the service conducted by Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

"This was a man who cared very deeply about the Jewish Community," said Perlmutter. "I miss him, but I am glad that we can hold this service at the Hillel House, which he helped to build and maintain.

Robert Costrell, an economics professor at the University, repeated the eulogy he wrote for the funeral.

Costrell and the other speakers painted a mental picture of Rapping.

They portrayed him as a man concerned with the "big questions," who could communicate with anyone about economic ideas and bring much humor to a conversation.

"Leonard was a man who paid attention," Costrell said. "He knew that was what love is all about."

"He was always taking somebody under his wing," he added, "helping people reach their full potential."

Jonathan Tyson of Washington D.C., a former student of Rapping, also spoke. Tyson said Rapping was "one of the most kind and generous people I have known."

"I often felt as if I was on a trip through ideas with Leonard," he said.

Samuel Bowles, another University economics professor, said "The thing I loved about Leonard was just being with him."

Rapping's daughter, Alison, spoke last, showing her appreciation to those who attended the event.

"I will never forget this and I will never forget you and your heartfelt love for dad," she said.

The service ended with a moment of silence and the traditional Jewish prayer, the Mourner's Kaddish.

Senate denounces fee

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted overwhelmingly last night to denounce a $200 housing fee proposed for next semester. The fee would be required for students to secure on-campus housing.

The proposed fee would be imposed upon all on-campus residents desiring a guaranteed room assignment next semester said Student Trustee Kevin Newnan.

He added that Housing Services hopes to implement this policy to prevent students from signing up for their dorm rooms and then moving off campus, costing Housing needed revenue.

Referring to a letter sent by Housing Director Joseph Zannini to Senator Jeff Markuns [Grayson], Newnan questioned the director's authority to raise fees.

"Joseph Zannini knows damn well that the only people that can raise fees are the Trustees," Newnan said. "The Board of Trustees wouldn't give the vast waste pool known as Housing a fee increase if Elvis Presley himself spoke on behalf of one before the Board in person."

Newnan said the fee increase would make it more difficult for students to return to campus next semester.

"There are people who are going to be forced out of their housing because of this, there are going to be people who get screwed out of $200 because of this," he said. "No matter what, this is going to cost the students."

Newnan said, according to his interpretation of the proposal, each student desiring a guaranteed housing assignment for spring semester would pay a $200 fee in the fall. Students' housing fee for spring semester would subsequently be reduced by $200.

Newnan stressed that students who don't desire a guaranteed room assignment will not be required to pay the fee. He warned, however, that these students could be randomly relocated to any living area on campus.

Some senators did not agree with Newnan's proposal.

"He knows damn well what he has said is false," Senator Markuns said about Newnan's comments. "He stated that if you don't get money to come back to school, you lose your housing deposit. No. Wrong. If you can't come back to school, you get your money back."

A roll call was taken by Speaker Bob Monaghan, who announced that the motion passed 30 to five, with five abstentions.

The Senate also supported the reinstitution of the Men's Soccer program, which had been terminated by the administration due to lack of funding.

Senator Dana Forrar [Lewis] noted that the Massachusetts State Senate has discussed bringing back the University's soccer program, since World Cup Soccer officials have reportedly said that Massachusetts cannot be considered a potential site for matches if the state's largest public university has terminated its soccer program.

Forrar, quoting figures he says were published in the Boston Globe, said that $97 million in potential revenue would be lost by the state in World Cup action did not take place here.

The motion passed unanimously.

Urging active democracy

Speakers call for more participation

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Correspondent

At a dual presentation last Tuesday night at Hampshire College's Franklin Patterson Hall, Francis Morse Lappe and writer and administrator Paul DuBois said they were fed up with the mechanistic democracy which we live under and that it was time for all people to take a more active, living role in democracy.

"The Greek definition for an idiot many years ago was, one who did not participate in public life," Lappe said. "As society begins to take a more active role in our democracy, I think we will start to rise above this idiocy."

"It is important to educate the members of our community as to the responsibility that they have to voice their opinion to our government," said DuBois. "The apathy which is so prevalent among people today must change to anger and frustration. We must form a citizen-based democracy in which we take responsibility for society's problems."

Lappe is known for founding the Institute for Food and Development Policy, a respected progressive think-tank concerned with third world policy issues.

Her 11 books addressing issues such as population, democracy and hunger have been translated into 22 languages and are used for courses in over 1,000 colleges and universities.

DuBois has written a widely-used textbook on the leadership and management of nonprofit organizations as well as numerous books on health care. He was vice-president of the College of the Atlantic and Cambridge College, as well as executive director of the Association of Humanistic Psychology.

Both Lappe and DuBois agreed that in order to achieve this living, citizen democ-

Ties between Japan and Europe discussed

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Correspondent

The Consul General of Japan dicussed the European unification and Japan's overall involvement in the present world at the University of Massachusetts last night.

Political science professor Eric Einhorn and European Club President Dimos Silvestriadis introduced the Consul General.

The lecture, sponsored by the European Club, and co-sponsored by the Japan American Club and the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund was titled, "the Japanese View of the European Unification."

Mr. Seigi Hinata, who specializes with relations between the United States and Japan, spoke to a large audience. Speaking of students' general interest in the subject, Hinata said, "I'm pleased to meet young people who are interested in international affairs."

Hinata spoke on a wide range of issues, including Japanese trade and its economic role in the world, in addition to many issues present in the European community.

"I want to give you some facts about the current situation," Hinata said.

"Japan and the United States have developed a close relationship at each level," said Hinata. "However, post-war relations have been overshadowed by the U.S."

The global economy rests upon three pillars, the European Community, the United States and Japan, noted Hinata.

"It is essential for the three to integrate," he added.

Hinata said "Japan welcomes the stronger European economy, that is expected with the unification."

"A strong dynamic world economy needs strong dynamic affairs," he continued.

"The overall trade between Japan and the European community has expanded, but an imbalance remains," said Hinata.

Hinata said that the tariffs between Japan and the European community have been affected by the decrease in automobile purchases in Europe. This is clear in the comparison between the average Japanese tariff of 1.2 percent and the European community's tariff of 5.6 percent.

Not all Japanese automobile companies manufacture their products in Japan added Hinata. Hinata gave Honda and Nissan as examples.

Honda manufactures in Ohio and Nissan manufactures in Europe, after which the vehicles are exported by boat to Japan said Hinata.

"It makes business sense to sell their products where the markets are," said Hinata.

Hinata expressed his disappointment with the unbalanced flow between countries. At present, the ratio between Japanese visits to Europe and vice versa is 15 to 1, said Hinata. He is hoping for a greater exchange rate in the future.

The relationship between Japan and the European community is best described as "unrequited love," said Hinata. He feels that Europeans know very little about Japan, and hopes that this will change.

Hinata feels that a growing desire to cooperate with friends from other countries is arising.

"The end of the cold war is releasing enormous energy for peace and change," he said.

Re-enforcing an earlier statement, Hinata said "Japanese officials have high hopes for the European unification."

"Global independence is a reality, nations can no longer act independently," concluded Hinata.

Faculty respects grads

Respect. A simple word, a simple concept.

The professors of the University of Massachusetts have reason to respect teaching and research assistants — the graduate employees who make up the GEO. They realize the importance of graduate students to education at this University.

Without TAs and RAs supporting the faculty, especially in these times of fiscal difficulty, the University's educational mission would be severely jeopardized. They work long hours for low pay and do so on top of their graduate school workload.

It took the threat of a sympathy strike from the Massachusetts Society of Professors to change Chancellor Richard O'Brien's mind about forcing graduate employees to account for their status, GEO or non-GEO, strike or non-strike. While everyone can be glad that a settlement by mediation is near and a MSP strike has apparently been avoided, it is still not clear how O'Brien really feels about graduate employees. Saying you repect someone and actually respecting someone are two entirely different things.

For example, take the letter O'Brien sent to graduate employees asking them "under penalty of perjury" if they worked between Nov. 11-15. It shows more about O'Brien's attitude toward his employees than any platitudes he can offer.

O'Brien's threat of revoked tuition waivers for those who did not work or did not return the form was high-handedness at its worst. His in loco parentis attitude grows tiring, especially when the welfare of graduate students who feel they must strike is placed in jeopardy by his threats. It should be recalled that this was the same man who as Provost several years ago reportedly said University undergraduates were "wards of the state."

The Chancellor says he respects graduate employees. The MSP proved it yesterday and Tuesday by taking the risk of a sympathy strike which they knew to be illegal — civil servants are prohibited from striking against the state by law. Seeing MSP's commitment to their employees, how could O'Brien continue to pressure grad employees, especially those supporting GEO?

O'Brien had no choice. The MSP, however, saw that divide and conquer schemes and condescending threats are a slap in the face to graduate students' dignity. Their support was admirable.

Respect. It isn't so hard to do.

Time for fun family visits

Felice Cohen

It is that time of year again. When we load our cars with dirty laundry, wave goodbye to our roommates and turn our heads to the road as we head off in our various directions home.

For me, that three hour drive to the Cape is filled with remembrances of past holidays. With the radio blasting, memories of past Thanksgivings dash across my mind. Though fears of having my cheeks pinched from overzealous aunts have since been replaced with the question, "What are your plans after graduation?" is equally as frightening.

But being home for the Thanksgiving break has always been a time for me to reflect on school, my friends, both home and UMass and of course, my family. Granted after 15 minutes inside the door I am ready to jump back into my car and head back to UMass, but I do enjoy visiting with them.

But out of all the holidays, it is Thanksgiving that usually has the most impact on us college students.

There is that initial shock when returning home. For freshmen, the shock of discovering your bedroom has been either taken over by your younger sister, changed into an extra family room or has become the dog's favorite new place to relieve himself, it really clues you in to how much your family actually loves you. But once that is over, there is still the test that determines your endurance.

The annual Thanksgiving football game. (One quick note: no one ever actually watches this game.)

For freshmen, this game is mandatory. It is the first time they are seeing their high school buddies since they left them three short months ago, so it is a big deal that they attend. They usually spend the time gossiping and are more interested in how many of their former classmates have already flunked out. The freshmen can easily be spotted mingling around the field with old friends and as usual, looking lost.

For sophomores and juniors, since they are in another world anyway, the football game is just an excuse for them to get together to make plans for the weekend's upcoming parties. They can usually be found huddled in a huge mass by the end zone. Oh yeah, they are quite often the ones wearing sunglasses, even if it pouring out.

That leaves us with the seniors. Yes, we know who we are. Cool, confident, extremely sure of ourselves and our plans for the future. (Not!) Our conversations are limited to topics of graduate school, employment opportunities and politics. And oh yes, we will only speak to fellow seniors and faculty. We can be found anywhere, since we now own the place.

But despite reminiscing with old friends and showing off our latest duds, the real purpose for heading home is family.

What makes family gatherings so unique from other gatherings is they are predictable. For me, it is always the same. Little cousins running around spilling juice. Mothers trying to institute order. Fathers talking about business, ignoring the hysterical two year-olds at their feet. And us older cousins off in some other room discussing the latest movies and how Aunt Hilda is losing her hair.

So, sure, visiting with family can be stressful, but in the same regards, comforting. Knowing by the time everyone is seated around the table the food will be cold. That as soon as Uncle Moe finishes eating he will be asleep in front of the television. And what your aunt spent the better half of the week preparing will somehow find its way to the floor, where it will be divided between your one and a half year old cousin and your dog, reassures me that no matter how much the world seems to be changing, some things never will.

So next week as you head home for Thanksgiving, and start wondering if your father's uncle will make that pumpkin pie which caused your great aunt's teeth to fall out last year, try sympathizing with me. For my nine year old sister has recently converted half of my bedroom into a Barbie Wonderland.

I ate, drank, burped, had a great time

Todd Kane

Lately I've been thinking about the whole concept of Thanksgiving. It seems to me that we, as Americans, have forgotten the meaning behind most of our holidays.

I grew up in Plymouth, Mass. where the first Thanksgiving was held. Even though I lived in the town where it all started, I never really thought of Thanksgiving as anything more than an excuse to unhinge my jaw and tilt the refrigerator back.

I have decided to take a trip back in time in order to conjure up enough memories about my past Thanksgivings to give you hungry readers something to relate to.

I never really participated in all of the Thanksgiving hoopla. Remember the big game between your high school and its rival? I never went to one of those games. I developed my own game plan for Thanksgiving which I have stuck to for the past several years.

Every year I promise myself that I won't chow down all day long while the turkey is cooking. You know that smell that emanates through the house? I swear that it contains some sort of enzyme that induces uncontrollable eating. For years I ate like a pigeon at the actual dinner because I had eaten everything else in the house that wasn't breathing.

For the past couple years that I have been in college, my higher education has allowed me to develop a more feasible pre-Thanksgiving game plan. For those of you who have my problem with eating before the meal, do what I do — sleep! Why, I've been known to sleep until the dinner is out on the table.

With this plan, I can get out of bed and go directly to the dining room. No hassles with showering and brushing my teeth. Just roll out of bed, gorge for about 45 minutes, burp, flatulate, and go back to bed completely satisfied.

I remember a story my mother told me about one of my father's friends who used to come to our house for Thanksgiving. This guy used to come over, get really drunk, watch a football game, burp, flatulate, eat like a boar, go to the bathroom, induce vomiting, come back out to the dining room, sit down at the table, and begin to eat again. He would repeat this process several times until all the food was gone.

The manner in which I behave during Thanksgiving is quickly becoming similar to this guy's, except for the vomiting.

I was looking through my baby book this past weekend and saw a card that I made in fourth grade for Thanksgiving. The front was a big turkey with a pilgrim hat on with colorful feathers made out of construction paper. Above the turkey read "Happy Thanksgiving." When the card was opened up, it read "I hope we have a big FEAST — from Todd." This card shows that I am the product of the American misconception of the meaning of our holidays.

First of all, the only association I made to Thanksgiving was feast. To me, that is all Thanksgiving was. Second, I associated turkey with Thanksgiving and, to this day, I still feel strange when I eat turkey on any other day of the year — it's just not the same.

Maybe people don't associate Thanksgiving with being thankful because they don't feel that they have anything to be thankful for. I know that expressing thanks for my miserable, poverty-stricken year would feel pretty redundant. The truth is that there really aren't many things to feel thankful for these days. I'm just thankful that I get to go home next week and eat some food doesn't require a can opener to access. Yep, just some of mom's home cookin', thank God for that.

Make a difference

1991 marks the 50th anniversary of the first student initiated drive to raise money for the United way, the official charity of the University. In 1941 the rallying cry was "A buck a student." We think the student body of 1991 is just as eager to help with a worthy cause as our predecessors, but with today's enrollment we think UMass can make a contribution that will make a real difference in the lives of all those United Way helps.

The following organizations have volunteered to help with this 50th anniversary campaign by staffing tables on the Campus Center concourse and in the DCs: Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, VIBES, the volunteer organization of the School of Management, Mortar Board Senior Honor Society, Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity and Golden Key Honor Society.

With help from local businesses and a grant from the SGA, a mailing has been sent to undergraduates asking for your support. Please join us in contributing to the United Way — let's show them that UMass really cares.

SGA's task forces need student support

When I was elected SGA President, I realized that there were many issues that I needed to address. After consulting with students across the campus, I decided to focus on three issues: housing, tuition and fees and voter registration. On Nov. 7, 1991, I created a presidential task force for each of these important issues.

The first task force, called the Housing Services task force, will mainly deal with Housing policies. It will also review the actions of Housing administrators. Bob Monaghan, speaker of the Senate, will coordinate the activities of this task force.

The second task force, called the Tuition and Fees task force, will be mobilizing students in an attempt to stop the increases that we have experienced over the past couple of years. Two people will coordinate this task force. They are Kevin Newman, student trustee, and Jennifer Wood, Commuter Area Government president.

Lastly, the third task force, called the Voter Registration task force, will deputize students, so they can register fellow students to vote. This task force will be under the guidance of Matthew Pavesi, who is the chair of the Student Government Public Policy Committee. This task force is extremely important, especially since both a state representative race and the Presidential primaries will be happening early next semester.

It's important for all students to get involved in these task forces. I know many of you are concerned about the high tuition and ridiculous housing policies. DON'T JUST COMPLAIN, WORK WITH US.

Get involved. We can all make a difference as one united student body. Feel free to contact the Student Government Association at 545-0341. Or stop by anytime at room 420 in the Student Union. All three task forces have an unlimited number of seats, and just by signing your name on a piece of paper you are on that task force. It's extremely important for us to be able to mobilize students around these three issues. As students, this is our university. Let's make it a better place to live for all of us. LET'S MAKE A DIFFERENCE.

David Gagne
SGA President

UM needs attitude change

Trystan Skeigh

If I were a goddess of Public Higher Education, and UMass were a piece of paper, I would wad it up and ask for a rewrite.

As a transfer student from a small state college in Kansas, I knew a state school on the East Coast would be a radically different experience. But I wasn't prepared for the lack of value assigned to undergraduate students. This strike by the GEO has only served to highlight a deeply entrenched, long-standing problem at this University.

My first insight occurred while listening to a spokesperson for liberal arts speak during an orientation presentation in 1988. He said transfer students needed to realize that UMass was a research-oriented institution and we couldn't expect a lot of individual attention from our professors. He stressed that students at UMass were expected to aggressively take steps to find help for things we might not understand in class. He cautioned us that our professors might not have much time to meet with us individually because of the emphasis on faculty research.

My understanding of my value as an undergraduate has grown a great deal since this ominous introduction. I have also learned that undergraduate students are expected to absorb mid-year fee hikes, increased class sizes, decreased class selections, support graduate student strikes and miss classes, and pay for it all even though financial aid has steadily declined.

And I have also learned that when undergraduate students visit Boston to protest these injustices, all the media sees is that a bunch of unruly young people stomped on some flowers.

I have thought, since the beginning, that the philosophy behind a public research-oriented institution was wrong, and I was highly relieved to hear that budget cuts might force this philosophy to change.

I wish the shift could have occurred as a voluntary shift in the philosophy held by the now-defunct Chancellor Joseph Duffey.

Students from poor families depend on state public universities and colleges to provide affordable, solid education. We do not come to UMass and take out loans, beg our parents, and live on Ramen noodles for four years so some very well-educated researchers with Ph.D.s can do their work, assign most of their teaching load to TAs, and remain, for the most part, invisible faces with glamorous names attached to various departments.

I would rather go to a University where undergraduate students mattered. I think UMass should adopt a philosophy dedicated to teaching. If that means the authors of some of the best-selling books on the latest theories aren't around anymore for an occasional book-signing, so be it. I would rather take a class with a dedicated teacher with a less flashy degree who could help me read and learn from that same book, than be a part of a department where I pay for the research, but never get an opportunity to learn it well.

Undergraduate money is the oil that allows this University machine to run. Yet undergraduate students are seen as nameless, faceless cogs by nearly everyone, from Boston to Whitmore.

I thought we were the reason public higher education exists. These days I'm not so sure.

Undergraduate students are tired of being treated like cogs at this University. We are not simply the source of each year's fiscal budget. We are minds and hearts and aspirations. We are dreams and potentials. Above all else, we're people, and we need some consideration and respect.

Boston, Whitmore and the GEO need to remember this. When the dust settles, undergraduates will be the ones handed another fee increase. We deserve better from this University, in terms of classes, materials and lower costs. UMass should not become privatized, it should instead, be reprioritized.

Anyone out there want to strike for this?

Writer has some clever union ideas

Dear working undergrads,

Are you a resident assistant or on work study? Do you work for the University in any capacity? If so, you know that we are underpaid, overburdened and ignored. It's just not fair. I believe all full-time students who work more than ten hours a week for the University are entitled to academic credit, free room and board and job security. I propose that we form a union. We could be affiliated with the Teamsters. I suggest we call the union YUGO, Yahoo Undergraduate Organization.

The Administration would have to recognize us and acquiesce to our demands. Why, you ask? Simple. Imagine all the working undergraduates, or at least a third of them, going on strike. The library is already understaffed so it would be forced to close. The dining commons, the Hatch, People's Market and Earth Foods would stop serving people. Everyone on campus would starve. Not to mention all the mundane (or not so mundane) jobs which are essential to the smooth running of this university. For example, all the students who work in Whitmore or the various schools' advising offices. More importantly, who would collect all the recyclables from the dorms? In short, the University would cease to function as an academic institution.

Threats against strikers echo East European oppression

I am an Eastern European graduate student at UMass and I'd like to share my perspective on the GEO strike.

The decision to strike was not an easy one for graduate teaching assistants. My impression is that graduate TAs generally bring a lot of qualifications and prior experience to their teaching positions and take them as seriously as any other full-time job. They are severely overworked and underpaid, yet, what they find most difficult to swallow is the marked unwillingness of the administration to acknowledge their contribution to the quality and quantity of work being done at UMass and to treat them fairly as employees.

The letter that Chancellor O'Brien sent to all graduate employees as a response to the GEO strike aroused in me fears that I had thought I would never experience in this free country. Since my arrival here, I had been working on liberating myself of that uneasy feeling with authority and sense of constant guilt and undefined threats around the corner that are my legacy of being born and raised under a totalitarian system. The emphasis on tolerance for individual perspectives and diversity and the readiness to examine every instance of social injustice and oppression had begun to return to me my self-trust and hope.

When the strike was voted I was fascinated by the careful, good-willed, informed attitudes of the GEO strikers, the respect for the individual decision of every graduate employee and the observance of democratic principles. People were standing up for their rights after having patiently examined every other alternative and found it not working.

Elena Mustakova

Even more inspiring was the willingness of department heads and chairs to risk their positions and stand up for principle, showing respect for and trust in the mature decisions of their graduate employees. In the communist Eastern Europe that I knew, people in their positions would have pressed their graduate employees against the wall and ruthlessly defended their own interests. What I have been seeing on campus in the joint efforts of graduate employees, faculty and non-academic staff has given me an unforgettable lesson in the exercise and upholding of freedom.

The Chancellor's letter, on the other hand, made my mind reverbrate with the old, familiar terminology of control and threat. The whole tone of the letter reminded me inescapably of the vague and sinister warnings that communists would use against protesting students and intellectuals in an attempt to convince the public they were a negligible number of outlaws disturbing the public peace and well-being, and should therefore be harshly punished.

When such announcements used to be made, they would inevitably begin by paying vague tribute to the "good ones" (compare "the administration recognizes the valuable contribution you and your colleagues make. . ."), which would then clearly escalate to a big "but" statement, where the law-breakers would be referred to as "some individuals" (compare with "a number of graduate student employees have decided to break their contracts. . ."), and an indirect warning would follow to that part of the public which might have misgivings about who to side with (compare with "we need to be sure that those of you who have not will get your paychecks as usual.").

Here I am, with lots of misgivings and mixed feelings about the whole thing, and with painful doubt whether there's any place around this world of ours where people can truly speak out their beliefs without being persecuted, where opposing opinions are the object of genuine discussion, where the Gordion Knot is disentangled instead of cut and where respect for human dignity stands above any authority.

Columnist misrepresents role of undergrads

We feel compelled to respond to Marc Elliott's column, "Don't follow mob mentality (Collegian, Nov. 18)." Elliott provides divisive and sometimes infantile sentiments. In recommending that undergraduates not "be led by the nose by the so-called 'undergraduate leaders,'" Elliott proposes students think for themselves but he provides unsubstantiated arguments for consideration.

Before agreeing with his decidedly hollow insinuations consider that as students, graduates have had to pay fee increases too but as employees they also get less in stipends as the budget is cut. As far as the budget is concerned there is common ground between grads and undergraduates. Consider also that they have supported us. In 1989 they supported the strike on campus protesting the budget cuts and in November 1989 more than 30 GEO and Graduate Student Senate members "drove to Boston to continue lobbying," against the cuts (Collegian, Nov. 11, 1989). GEO and large numbers of undergraduates supported the faculty in their work stoppage last April. Graduates and undergraduates supported the professors because we understood the interdependence inherent in the student/faculty relationship. During that stoppage 50-85 percent of classes were affected (Campus Chronicle, April 19, 1991) and Chancellor Duffey stated, "he sympathized with the strike and. . . would. . . not be the 'agent of enforcement' for the state (Collegian, April 17, 1991)."

Ask yourselves why O'Brien is trying to break this strike and why, in spite of the fact that GEO and the UAW have agreed to shoulder any possible legal cost resulting from the agency fee Whitmore still hasn't come to an agreement. The other unions on campus support the strike and the executive board of the Massachusetts Society of Professors is considering action.

We, the undersigned, realizing that the interests of the graduate students are complimentary, not contradictory, to our own, urge our fellow undergraduates to support the GEO strike. Do something, write a letter, call Chancellor O'Brien, join the picket lines or wear a GEO sticker.

Seventy-four people signed this letter

We really like all the letters we've been getting. We're sorry we don't have room to print them all, but we're trying.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, and under fifty lines. Length is important; long letters don't fit on the page and usually take too long to get to the point.

Always put your name, address and phone number on your letter.

We love cartoons drawn by students, too. Cartoons should be drawn on 8 1/2 by 11 white paper in flair pen. Ink from ballpoint pens looks really bad. Not recommended. Actually, forbidden.

You can hand-deliver your written masterpiece or send it through the mail. The important thing is that it gets to the* Collegian, *113 Campus Center basement.

Your letters and cartoons make our day. In fact, they make our page. Thanks.

Weld alters regulations

Claims changes will aid businesses

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. William Weld announced a host of regulatory changes Tuesday that he said will cut red tape and improve the business climate of the state. But one critic charged the plan would hurt workers.

Half of the 140 changes can be made unilaterally by the administration, but the other half will need legislative action. Weld said many of the administrative changes have already been made or will be in place shortly.

"The regulatory underbrush in this state has grown into a snarled thicket that is snagging businesses throughout the commonwealth," Weld said. "These long overdue reforms address archaic and costly state barriers that needlessly hinder economic growth."

Although the governor's plan was hailed by a number of business groups, some of the proposals could prove controversial.

The proposal would, for example, relax the "Blue Law" restrictions on retailers and manufacturers to allow them to open on Sunday mornings and currently prohibited holidays without a special permit. That proposal that has been opposed by religious leaders and unions in the past.

The measure would also relax some provisions of the state's prevailing wage laws, setting a threshold of $250,000 for the law to apply and exempting contracts for maintenance of public facilities and housekeeping authorities.

Joseph Faherty, president of the Massachusetts AFL-CIO blasted both recommendations, which would need legislative approval.

"The only ideas that come out of the corner office for business development are anti-worker whether it's repeal of Blue Laws or prevailing wage," Faherty said. "The public has already rejected issues that target working families."

The plan would also permit the Registry of Motor Vehicles to sell information that is on the public record, such as information from state drivers' licences, to private businesses that could then use the information as a marketing tool.

In Massachusetts, many drivers license numbers double their social security numbers. When asked whether he was concerned about businesses obtaining such information, Weld said people have the option to change the number if they choose.

Sniper trial begins; accused claims innocence

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) — Friends of Scott Chipman testified that if he had been the sniper that fatally shot a 14-year-old girl as she rode in a school bus, he would have thrown the murder weapon in the Cape Cod Canal.

Robyn Dabrowski, a 14-year-old New Bedford High School student, was killed as she rode in the bus travelling on Route 25 on the way to a school basketball game in Plymouth.

Chipman and his friend, William Ferrera, are being tried separately on murder charges connected in the shooting in Brockton Superior Court. Police have been unable to locate the murder weapon.

Chipman told at least two of his friends he would have tossed the gun if he had killed Dabrowski, according to the testimony at his trial.

"If I was the [explicative], I'd throw it in the canal," the 19-year-old Justin Walker quoted Chipman as saying while they were watching a television news bulletin the day after Dabrowski was killed.

Kimberly Allen of West Barnstable testified that Chipman made similar statements to when they discussed the shooting a few days later.

Accessory charges against Caren Srenroos were dropped in exchange for her testimony against Chipman. She said in court that she told Chipman he could not hide his rifles in her house.

"I told him he could throw it in the canal as far as I was concerned," she said.

After his arrest, police said Chipman hinted he had arranged to have the weapon buried, according to a published report in The Brockton Enterprise.

Although police did not find the murder weapon, they did recover a rifle scope which they believe was used by Dabrowski's killer.

The scope had been seen by several people in the home of Richard Edwards of Bourne. Edwards said he found the scope under a chair in his living room one day after Chipman left.

This Thursday night, Pearl St. is lucky enough to host possibly the coolest band ever to exist. Part punk rock, part grade-school poetry, part surreal/religious/freaky music, King Missile has reserved a small but important spot in the Hip Band Hall of Fame.

Since 1987, when Fluting on the Hump was released on Shimmy Disc Records, King Missile has been cranking out odd tunes centered around the poetry/stories/lyrics/obsessions of singer John S. Hall. Hall's musings on blood, religion, sensitive artists, dinosaurs, and food have a simple, almost childish feeling to them. "I wish I could sit on soft pillows and drink molten lava," Hall says on one song, taking the listener into a world where wonder and imagination are valued, encouraged and expected.

Yet King Missile is not about pure escapism. The darker side of Hall's persona shows itself often in his work. At the end of "I Wish", from this year's The Way to Salvation, Hall laments, "Freedom is lost. Failure is just around the corner. And the only thing that consoles me anymore is the sound of my voice — and the fact that I don't cut myself shaving as often as I used to. Of course, I don't shave as often as I used to either."

Hall's obsession with the apocalypse, a recurring theme on The Way to Salvation, also signals the more sober side of King Missile. "The prevalent theory in my mind for about fifteen years has been that there's an apocalypse coming in '92 - '93, " Hall explains, "But as far as it being a major King Missile theme, I probably use the word 'delicious' more than the word 'apocalypse."

With all of this in mind, one should take note that the music of King Missile is far more likely to put you in a great mood than to set you off thinking about impending doom and the futility of our existence.

Musically, King Missile has gone through several distinct stages of evolution. Originally a duo with John S. Hall and Dogbowl, the early songs were simple, catchy, mostly acoustic tunes. With the second album They, Hall and Dogbowl fleshed out their sound with additional instrumentation from Shimmy Disc mastermind Kramer. Dogbowl eventually left the band and was replaced by seasoned indy guitarist Dave Rick, who had played with Phantom Tollbooth, Bongwater, and B.A.L.L. among others; and bassist-keyboardist Chris Xefos.

The new lineup recorded Mystical Shit, which featured the wildly sucessful single "Jesus Was Way Cool". Both Mystical Shit and The Way to Salvation have a straightfoward guitar-based, retro-rock garage sound, sometimes reminiscent of Neil Young and even the Doors. Occasionally Rick, Xefos, and drummer David Ramirez will lapse into a psychedelic white noise frenzy in order to get a point across, but generally things remain on the melodic side of the fence. It's Hall's rantings that really give King Missile their bizarre, random edge.

You might want to bring some earplugs to Pearl St. with you, because King Missile has been known to turn the volume way up for live shows. Expect a large dose of material from Salvation and Mystical Shit, as well as some reworked versions of the best songs from the first two albums ("Wuss," "Take Stuff From Work," "Hemopheliacs of Love").

Opening for King Missile this Thursday will be Sonic Trout recording artists Earshot. Earshot is a very original and energetic band with two drummers, a bassist, a guitarist, and a singer. Last spring they opened up for Alice Donut at Hampshire College and blew them away. It should be a great show.

King Missile and Earshot will play an 18+ show at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton on Thursday, Nov. 21 The show starts at 8:30 pm.

Noises Off is off but the fun lingers on

By DANIEL JOKELSON
Collegian Correspondent

Last week I was treated to what was probably the most technically brilliant show I have seen in my three plus years here. The UMass Theater Guild's production of Noises Off was a completely organized presentation of what a completely disorganized play looks like, and it was a riot to watch.

Noises Off is an extremely exaggerated look at a life in the theater. We see a sleazy director, two very spacey stage managers and six incredibly stupid, jealous, deaf or temperamental actors (including some who have all of these qualities) asserting their egos and eccentricities simultaneously and at all times throughout the show. It was difficult to follow at times because I couldn't look at all of the transactions going on onstage at once.

I suppose that was part of the point of Noises Off: that sometimes theater can be so intensely confusing (in so many ways — emotionally, technically, etc.) that it's possible for everyone involved to screw up at the same time — and it was so fun to watch.

And it was so fun to watch. In the first act, we see a dress rehearsal the night before the opening of the company's show, Nothing On, a farce that requires perfect timing. Strangely enough, the actors don't have any problems at all with the timing; they keep stopping the show to ask why their characters would do what they're doing, to ask about simple prop maneuvers or to call for lines — all problems they should have mastered during the first rehearsals. Through all this the personality of each member of the cast and crew is humorously exposed.

Selsdon (Chris Itrato) is the old pro of the cast. Unfortunately, he's also deaf, senile and prone to naps and schnaps. The cast is always looking everywhere for him (when he's actually usually just in the bathroom taking a snooze) or trying to hide any liquor present from him. Selsdon is the one character who's forever late on his cues and Itrato played him with wonderful charm. Gary (Andy Alabran) is the ultimate optimist who's always taking time out from rehearsal to express his enthusiasm and love for the whole process and people in it. This is frustrating for the director because it takes Gary forever to finish talking, and when he does, no one is ever sure what he's just said — he always ends it with a "and well, you know" after 10 minutes of not saying anything in particular, which Alabran did with hilarious consistency. Lloyd (Cutter Garcia) the director is fed up with his cast but placates their silly problems by making up silly reasons for their characters' actions. Garcia's rage and conscious attempts at holding the show together were a great contrast to the actors' actions, which were slowly but surely ripping the show apart. Micha Hollingsworth was wonderful as the earnest but hopelessly inept actor Frederick, who has to have reasons for every action he takes and who gets a nosebleed every time anyone so much as trips and falls, which is often.

The second act takes us backstage during the middle of the run of the show (the set was fun to watch as well — it revolved back and forth from the set of Nothing On to the backstage area and back again). It was this act that was the peak of the show for me. While actors were running on and off the stage belting lines, we were watching the silent actions and responses of the actors backstage (you could see the actors doing their performance from a large window in the center of the set, making the reality of the freaked out backstage scenes much more intense). It was here that all of the personality conflicts really came into being, and the results were fantastic.

Given the climactic finish, the third act was a little bit of a let down, but it was still terrifically funny. At this point, the show is close to it's final performance, and the actors are regularly fighting on stage. The set is falling apart, and all the timing required to do the entrances and exits right is lost, as they find themselves seeing each other when they weren't supposed to be, etc. Anything that can go wrong goes wrong in this act, and the UMass actors timed the mishaps perfectly again. It was one of those ultimate theater experiences anybody who's ever done plays has had nightmares about but loves to talk about after it's happened, and I felt like leaping up on stage and sharing that experience with the actors — it drew me in.

Melford to tickle the ivories at Hampden

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

Roll it, Myra! Here's a New Yorker at heart playing new jazz and boogie woogie learned straight from the greats. Her style is "pound-it-out and have a good time," with an abstract spirit ringing through.

Her first album, Jump, includes bassist Lindsey Horner and drummer Reggie Nicholson. On a mini-tour before going on to Europe, Melford described the effect they had on rock fans. "In the rock clubs, they all started hooting and hollering and yelling when we played something they liked. I started to feel like a pop musician."

Melford's music definitely isn't mainstream jazz, but every so often, her playing will shift into a groove. The improvising can change from a reflective, free-flowing style to a sharp-edged sound; nevertheless, a strong tradition is heard in the music.

Melford, originally from Chicago, was ready to take on the music scene upon arrival in 1985. As a child, she had already learned the keyboard fundamentals from boogie pianist, Erwin Helfer (her mom thought she was learning classical). Jazz was no stranger to Melford, either, having learned from teachers Art Lande, Gary Peacock and Bert Wilson. As for world music, Melford studied gamelan and African percussion at Evergreen State College and Seattle's Cornish Institiute.

Once in the Big Apple, she was embraced by the improv and alternative music clique at the legendary club, the Knitting Factory. She performed a bluesy solo on the album, "Live at the Knitting Factory, Voulme II". That single lead her to join the 30-city Knitting Factory European Tour in 1990.

Overkill to bring galactically good metal

By ERIC POULIN
Collegian Staff

Thrashers of the world unite!!! Katina's will be the place for you this Sunday night, as Megaforce/Atlantic recording stars Overkill will bring their moshing onslaught to Hadley for an all-ages crowd. Women and children beware: the pit will be a scary place to be for this one.

The band is touring in support of their fifth album, Horrorscope, which was produced by Terry Date (Soundgarden, Pantera, Mother Love Bone). It is also the first album that features new guitarists Merritt Gant and Rob Cannavino, who give the band a shot of fierce power and fury, and were the big reason why this is their most brutal album yet.

Overkill have always been in the forefront of the power metal scene, although their fan base has remained in the smaller club scene. This small, but greatly zealous following is a result of their incessant touring, which has led the band abroad on numerous occasions. If you're among those who has seen them in the past, you're in for a new experience, as the new dual-guitar lineup seems to be the launching pad needed to send them full-force into the 90's.

When asked about the new album, lead singer Bobby 'Blitz' Ellsworth said "Cannavino and Gant bring you twice the impact — a different approach with the same great outcome." Cannavino added,
"It's raw, it's aggressive, and it has the best elements of the band's past, with a fresh, new outlook for the future."

Overkill may be the band that most of the paying crowd will be coming to see Sunday, but the opening act, the Galactic Cowboys may be the band to really watch out for. This Houston-based quartet has been described by some as "Metallica meets the Beatles", for their ability to mesh driving, grinding music with surprisingly harmonious vocals.

"It's really a honor to be compared with those bands," guitarist Dane Sconnier told The Collegian in a telephone interview. "All of those bands — CSNY, Yes, The Beatles — they're the bands that we grew up listening to. It's really flattering."

Their self-titled debut album (Geffen Records) definitely shows great potential, as their eclectic hodgepodge of influences all are apparent. And, believe me, you can listen to it on numerous occasions and still not be able to figure out what's going on. They're a band that is devoted to playing the kind of music that they want to hear, so it's a given that their musical integrity shines through.

The album also possesses the song that just might become the anthem of bands who let their Christian beliefs show through. The opening track, entitled "I'm Not Amused", is a message to all bands that are driven by Satanic influences.

"That kind of thing doesn't amuse us," quips bassist Monty Colvin.

This song alone may put the Galactic Cowboys on the map, and is one of the finest thrash songs that I've heard in a long, long time.

Overkill and The Galactic Cowboys will play at Katina's Nightclub on Sunday. The show is open to all ages.

New Dino Jr: it'll be cool with you

Whatever's Cool With Me
Dinosaur Jr.
Sire

Amherst's finest, Dinosaur Jr., recently released a collection of Green Mind outtakes, B-Sides, live tracks and one new single called "Whatever's Cool With Me". While records like these are usually hit-and-miss at best, J. Mascis and friends manage to rise above expectations and deliver some quality songs.

> "Mascis lives up to the title of guitar god with a three hour (or so) soaring into the heavens solo that will leave your ears giddy for weeks."

Unfortunately, the EP starts out on a somewhat sour note with the title track. A ferocious double bass drum break and a catchy bridge can't make up for J's flat croaking and the musically uninteresting verse progression.

Things start to look up on the second track "Sideways" has a similar feel to the quieter songs on Green Mind. The verse works well set against the simple, stripped down acoustic guitar that begins the song. Mascis' voice is still warbly and off-key, but in the way we've all grown to love and admire.

The best song on "Whatever" has to be "Not You Again," an infectious, hard-driving insecurity trip in which Mascis, having given bad advice, begs a friend, "If I say a word just stop me/Cause I know I should shut up/ Guess I'll split now, just forget you met me/ Forget I brought it up." It's the kind of song that forces the listener to hit the repeat button on the CD player three or four times before moving on to the next song.

Another highpoint is Dinosaur Jr's reinterpretation of David Bowie's "Quicksand". Mascis chooses to scrap Bowie's dense, arty "Kissing the Viper's fang" type imagery in favor of a more honest, closer-to-home lyrical approach. The new words, coupled only with acoustic guitars, make for a quite beautiful and intensely personal song.

The heavy, flute-less live version of "Thumb" reigns supreme over the wimpy, watered down studio version on Green Mind. Mascis lives up to the title of guitar god with a three hour (or so) soaring in the heavens solo that will leave your cars giddy for weeks.

There is some filler on Whatever's Cool With Me. "Pebbles and Weeds" sounds very much like a B-side. The Sabbath-like opening riff is outdated and doesn't do anything for me. It seems as though the tons of guitar and vocal overdubs in the song are used to mask sloppy playing and poor songwriting instead of being used to enhance the song.

"The Little Baby," although a throwaway for a songwriter of Mascis' talent, carries an intense bass guitar/drum groove with some inspired screaming in the chorus.

All in all, it wouldn't kill you to go downtown for Dinosaur Jr's "new" EP. In fact, it might just make your day.

"Here she comes, Miss . . .

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Lisa A Jouris, a sophomore at UMass, has been selected to be a contestant in the Miss Massachusetts - USA pageant to be held at the New Holiday Inn Grand Ballroom in Worcester. Jouris, a semifinalist in last year's pageant, has a 3.7 GPA in UMass' School of Management.

Jouris, a.k.a. Miss Littleton, was kind enough to grant me an interview despite her hectic preparation schedule.

LC: How did you get selected to be in the pageant?

LJ: I submitted a one page biography, a picture and an application to the pageant headquarters in Boston. Last year there were around 350 applicants and 75 were chosen. I'm not sure of the numbers this year.

LC: Have you won any other titles/pageants?

LJ: No, but I was a semifinalist last year in the Miss Massachusetts - USA pageant.

LC: What is the pageant schedule?

LJ: There is a swimsuit, interview, and evening gown competition. This is a different pageant from Miss America, because there is no talent involved. The contestants are secluded for two days. There are chaperones, too. You only have 2 1/2 minutes with the judges, so you have to talk as fast as you can. They asked me about the history of Massachusetts last time, so I had to take a book out of the library.

LC: How long have you lived in the United States?

LJ: I was born in Boston. I lived in Saudi Arabia for 9 years, and moved to the U.S. in 1985. At the end of 1987 I moved back to Massachusetts. I went to an international school, and that's why I like UMass. It has a lot of those same qualities. I realized every person is unique in their own way.

LC: How much money is necessary to participate in the pageant?

LJ: I had to go out last year and get 22 sponsors. I had to raise over 600 dollars this year. Because of the recession it was a lot harder to get support.

LC: Why are you participating?

LJ: I like competition; it brings out the worst and best qualities in people. Modeling is my favorite hobby, and people listen to you when you have this title. I could be a spokesperson for Massachusetts' problems, like the recession. I saw a (former pageant winner) on 20/20 or 60 Minutes bring up the issue of incest, before Roseanne Barr. I want to learn more about how to help people.

LC: What do you think about the controversy surrounding these pageants?

LJ: 2 1/2 minutes with each judge is definitely not long enough for them to get to know you and your personality. Some of my friends say this is just a glamour girl competition. I would have more time for the personal interview. I do have a problem with that conflict. I would love to be a Sports Illustrated girl, but I want people to like me for my personality and not what I look like.

LC: Are these pageants really competitive/stressful?

LJ: It is a very friendly atmosphere. It is very competitive also, but it's a challenge for me to break through the ice with those people.

I would like to thank my friends and family for supporting me through all of this because it means a lot to me. Last year a contestant was sent tons of flowers. I don't think that most people know they can send flowers to support the contestants representing them.

Friday, Nov. 22 is the last day to purchase tickets to see the competition for $35 for the weekend of Nov. 30.

Giving thanks for Valley musical variety

By BRIAN HARRINGTON

The weekend before Thanksgiving is usually a slow time around these parts for clubland. Most students are trying to catch up on the course work they've neglected all semester so they can split early from campus and head home. Many will leave this weekend. Most touring acts also want to get home for the turkey holiday so bookings relax a bit this coming week and tour busses hit the highway and head for whatever direction that home is located. What better time then to go out for beers and see a local bar band?

Jabberwocky

One of the best of the local bar bands are the Big Bad Bollocks, whose rowdy acoustic Celtic sound is reminiscent of the Pogues and the Waterboys. They will be at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Noho tommorrow night and the Guiness will be served in fine style as the Bollocks rip and roll through a night of tawdriness. The Big Bad Bollocks combine raw acoustic instrumentation with vaudeville style comic entertainment and they are fronted by nutty boy John Allen who hails from Derbyshire in Northern England. Pat Owens is on guitar and vocals, John Reily is designated driver and mandolin player, and drummer Bob Richards pounds away on a cocktail drum. These shows always sell out so get there early, and remember that the Iron Horse is always ALL AGES.

Dig it. You might want to go see a promising new band at the Hatch in the Student Union tommorrow night. They call themselves Nag, Nag, Nag and they have been together since September. Nag, Nag, Nag performed their first gig over at the Butterfield coffeehouse a few weeks back and the positive response from the audience has bolstered them to keep plugging away at it. They've been working on a demo tape at a recording studio down in Springfield and they tell me their influences range from Lou Reed to the Pixies. Like the Pixies, two of the band members, Ari Vais and Tony Westcott, go to UMass. Ari and Tony both play guitar, sing vocals, and share in the songwriting. The rhythm section consists of homeboys Brian Osley on bass and Paul Pellis. Nag, Nag, Nag perform mostly originals. If you can't see them at the Hatch tommorrow night then I suggest roving on down to the WMUA studios in the basement of the Campus Center on Saturday, where Nag, Nag, Nag will be recording a "live" radio show at 1:30 pm in Campus Center room 101 with the Canine Bastards. Methinks this be a punkfest of sorts to be aired at a later date. Why not be part of the studio audience?

Speaking of the Campus Center, if you passed through the concourse yesterday you might have seen band members of One Eyed Jake selling their new CD. The bad boys of the UMass party circuit have their CD on sale at Al-Bum's in downtown Amherst and it will also be available at their gigs. How about sending me a copy?

Saturday finds the Dertonz (last year's Rock 102/Pearl Street Battle of the Bands runnerup) over at Sheehan's Cafe in Noho. We are talking some serious funk action here folks.

Lesbian discusses Nicaraguan movement

By TRACY GAVEL
Collegian Correspondent

Nicaraguan lesbian activist Lupita Siquiera Malespin outlined the parallels between the gay movement and the country's liberation in the last decade when she spoke on "The Lesbian and Gay Movement in Nicaragua Today" Tuesday in the Campus Center.

Malespin has been working on AIDS education in Nicaragua for several years, as well as sexuality education and she has been active in the Nicaraguan women's movement.

Malespin said one of her goals has been to "empower young people to challenge [issues of] homophobia, sexism and sexuality."

She told the audience about how before the Sandinista's revolution in 1979, sexuality itself was taboo and homosexuality was "a taboo of taboo."

Because 60 percent of people in 1979 could not read or write, most people were ignorant on issues of sexuality, and that only a few "courageous" gays and lesbians were open about their sexuality, added Malespin.

Malespin said the main concern of the Nicaraguan people before 1979 was survival under the regime of the dictatorship, not personal issues of identity.

"In 1974 I never thought that I'd live twenty years . . . people were dying," she said. "The only alternative gays had was to be involved in the struggle."

She described the social change of the 1980s in her country, when gays began to come out and have social lives.

"We became interested in getting information about sexuality, and our newspaper began writing about AIDS," Malespin said. "Anything that was called a 'gay disease,' we wanted to know about. We started reading lots of pamphlets, etc. . ."

Malespin described how this new knowledge and interest, that she and other gays felt, led to organizing a collective for AIDS education.

Their motivation for the collective was "seeing that the (gay) struggle is the same everywhere," said Malespin.

The small collective was later discovered by the federal government, through the Administration of Health for Nicaragua, and they began to work together to support AIDS education, Malespin reported. Gradually, the collective also included education on issues of sexuality and gay identities.

"Little by little, we grew . . . gay people identified with us because for the first time somebody was talking to them in the same language . . . another gay person," she said.

But Malespin stressed the difficulties of the gay movement that lie ahead, especially after the recent election of Nicaragua's new conservative government.

She emphasized that their present goal is "to maintain our gains and to give AIDS and sex education without prejudice. We must defend our civil rights now."

Malespin also said that it would be extremely difficult for the government to close or to take much action against the collectives, because there is much support from the feminist movement as well as legal protection from the Nicaraguan constitution.

The current collectives for sexuality and AIDS education in Nicaragua include a lesbian group, a gay men's group, XOCHIQUETZAL, which is the new foundation collective, and SEPSIDA, which is the group for AIDS education.

Malespin said that next year the collectives are planning 12 workshops using films and projector slides, and last year was the first year of an International Gay Pride Day, which Nicaraguan collectives celebrated through radio broadcasts and pamphlets.

"The principal thing is that [it is the] same behavior," Malespin said. "[After they discovered my sexuality] my family accepted me, because I was the same person all the time. The gay struggle is not only a gay struggle, it is of all people. . . we must break the chains of ignorance and oppression."

History ignores lesbians

Accessing lesbian history said difficult

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

"Survival is in the finding of kindred spirits anywhere" wrote Natasha Josefowitz in her poem "Tokens".

Part of lesbian/gay community building is the reclaiming of themselves as a people from the annals of history.

But uncovering lesbian history is a difficult task because of the social stigma attached to both the subject and those who do the research, according to Dr. Faith Rogrow, an historian from the State University of New York at Binghampton who spoke at UMass last Friday.

Dr. Rogrow began her presentation with a story about renown feminist author and poet Judy Grahan.

Rogrow said when Grahan went to a library to do some research on lesbian history, she found that the texts on gays and lesbians were kept locked in a special vault and she had to make special arrangements to see them. Most of the texts were psychological works that labeled gays and lesbians "deviant."

Rogrow said although access to lesbian and gay texts has improved over the years, "significant challenges" remain in studying lesbian history.

The "Invisibility" of lesbian issues in periodical listings is a major difficulty for researchers, Rogrow said.

She said most reference books, which are "the tools historians are trained to use," do not include a subject heading of "lesbians."

She also said the Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature, a frequently used reference guide, does not index any gay or lesbian publications.

Rogrow said this lack of inclusion was a "significant problem" for lesbian history researchers.

"Indexes exist to save us lots of research time," she said, but pointed out that although issues concerning gay men were sometimes included under the listing "homosexuality," often lesbians were "simply ignored" by the Periodical Guide.

Researchers who collect oral histories also face difficulties, Rogrow said, because many subjects do not want to be identified as lesbian.

"It's simply dangerous to be identified as lesbian," Rogrow said, "and has been for some time in this country."

Lesbians have also been reluctant to leave written histories, Rogrow said. Most of the written accounts have been generated by sources "antagonistic to lesbians," Rogrow said. She gave courts and mental institutions as examples.

"These records are not reflective of her [a lesbian's] own vision of her experience," Rogrow said.

Rogrow said graduate students who focus on lesbian history face persecution and may be denied their degree or not receive a reccomendation. "Most researchers are independent, unaffiliated with a formal institution because it's hard to find jobs."

Number women carrying guns increasing

BOSTON (AP) — Dina Furlong, a 27-year-old Kingston homemaker, bought a Colt .380 automatic pistol for protection after she was harassed by a gang of men while jogging on the beach.

"From what you hear in the news about attacks on women, I just feel better having it on me," Furlong said. "Hopefully, I won't ever have to use it, but it's nice to know it's there if I get into trouble."

Furlong is among the estimated 15 million U.S. women who own firearms, according to a Gallup poll estimate. According to gun retailers, women represent the fastest-growing market for handguns, the Boston Sunday Herald reported. Most buy their guns for protection.

Mike Giacoppo, a former Cambridge police detective who runs the Boston Gun and Rifle Club, said he has seen a "radical" increase in the number of women taking his firearms training course in just the past six months.

"Before, we used to get a few girls in here, mostly being dragged in by their boyfriends," Giacoppo said. "Now we're seeing a lot of businesswomen, doctors, lawyers, nurses, teachers, secretaries. They're afraid of being mugged, robbed, raped or murdered. They want to be able to protect themselves. They want to be able to feel safe."

Although statistics show a woman is more likely to be victimized by a relative or acquaintance, gun-shop owners say the fear of being attacked by a stranger is translating into gun sales.

Still, Handgun Control, a Washington-based gun-control lobby, says women should think twice before deciding to carry a gun.

the administration was intended to remove what he called the "very, very punitive" measures in a letter O'Brien issued to graduate student employees on Tuesday.

"We wanted to get this dark shadow out from over the graduate students and the members of the negotiating team," Lenson said.

The "dark shadow" Lenson spoke of referred to a paragraph in the letter stating that any graduate student not completing the form attached to the letter or checking off that they did not "fulfill their contractual obligations" on Nov. 14 and 15 "will no longer have an employment contract with the University and will receive a bill for tuition and curriculum fees for the remainder of the Fall semester," unless they returned to work by Tuesday.

In a statement yesterday, O'Brien said he is "not presently contemplating" cancelling contracts revoking tuition and fee waivers.

GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs also announced to protesters that the University had called in Roberta Golick of the American Arbitration Association to act as an outside mediator in negotiations between the two sides.

"O'Brien originally said he would only have mediation if we called off the strike," Isaacs said. "That's off — we now have mediation and a strike."

"I think the administration finally perceives the widespread strength of GEO's demands," Isaacs said.

Representatives of several local unions spoke to voice their support of the GEO's demands.

Irene Price, a member of University Staff Association, read a statement from U.S.A. President Sheila Griffith supporting GEO.

"Today is a day for all unions at UMass to unite," Price said. "The administration continues to try to back employees into a corner — the time has come to stop accepting this type of anti-union behavior.

"It's time to take a stand — time to say no more bad-faced bargaining, no more disregard of employees well-being," Price said.

Jonathan Tuttle of the Northampton Labor Council said the Council had decided to endorse the GEO's strike and presented a check of $500 for the GEO's hardship fund.

"When agency fees first came in here, it was because workers withheld their services," Tuttle said. "The sharks that surround you will break their teeth on your iron resolve."

Following the rally, GEO members marched to Whitmore and delivered 3,707 cards signed by undergraduates saying they supported GEO's contract demands.

"Why Should I Register...
...For Peer Education Programs?"

Let Me Count The Whys.

1. It will teach me about important public health issues like sexually transmitted diseases and AIDS, alcohol and drug issues, cardiovascular illness, cancer, accident prevention, eating disorders, stress and consumer health.
2. It will teach me valuable skills like leading a workshop, giving a presentation and developing marketing strategies.
3. It can really help me be part of a team working to improve UMass.
4. It can help me to meet lots of people.
5. It can help me to improve areas of my own health.
6. I can earn three academic credits.
7. It can improve my chances of getting a job, because I will represent the University Health Services.
8. In short, it might be the most important course I take while I'm a student at UMass.

HELLO? MR. KIMBERLIN? THIS IS RICK REIFEN FROM THE WASHINGTON POST...
I'M DOING A PIECE ON DAN QUAYLE FOR THE PAPER. I UNDERSTAND THAT IN PRISON YOU'VE BEEN REPEATEDLY PREVENTED FROM TALKING TO THE PRESS ABOUT QUAYLE, WHICH, FRANKLY, I DON'T GET.
IT SEEMS LIKE AN AWFUL BIG DEAL IS BEING MADE OVER A 20-YEAR OLD MARIJUANA CLAIM. WAS THERE, BY ANY CHANCE, SOMETHING ELSE YOU WERE PLAN MIND TO REVEAL ABOUT QUAYLE HAD YOU BEEN PERMITTED TO SPEAK?
OH, YOU MEAN HIS DEA FILE?
BINGO.

TODAY'S EXTREMELY A DISCONTENTED!
THE TROUBLED AUTHOR SAT AT HIS DESK WONDERING WHY HE WAS SO BLESSED WITH ENDLESS TURMOIL. SEE, HE HAD, AT ONE TIME, LIVED IN A COMMUNIST ALAS, HE PAINSTAKINGLY MOVED BACK INTO THE DORMS "NO BIG DEAL," HE HAD ONCE THOUGHT. "I'LL PROBABLY MEET SOME NEW PEOPLE." OH, WAS HE WRONG.
THE YOUNG MAN LIVED WITH A ROOMMATE WHO WAS THE ABSOLUTE ANTITHESIS OF HIM FOR MONTHS UNTIL LADY LUCK GRANTED HIM WITH A SINGLE UNFORTUNATELY, HE MADE ABSOLUTELY NO NEW FRIENDS IN THE HALL. HE FIGURED "AH, NO BIG WHOOP! I'LL PROBABLY JUST EAT AT THE D.C.'S TOGETHER AND GET DRUNK TOGETHER SO THE AUTHOR KEPT TO HIMSELF, BITTERLY MOURNING ONE NIGHT, HUNGER HIS FRIENDS CAME UP FROM HOME:
A NEIGHBOR WHO WAS OVER 21 HAD A BEER IN THE DORMS WHERE THE AUTHOR PROMISED TO SEE HIM COME TO PASS. SINCE HE HAD BUT WITH PLANS TO BE HALL A PERSONAL R.A., REFLECTING THE DORM'S MAIN HOUSE WAS ALREADY TRIMMED CUTBACK DORMS HAVING BEEN TOO HALL, DECIDED TO BECOMING THE UNKNOWN AUTHOR AND THE TWO FRIENDS INSTEAD THE AUTHOR ALSO FOUND OUT 3 DAYS LATER THAT HIS ROOM WAS DOCUMENTED FOR ABUSE WHEN HE AND HIS TWO FRIENDS HAD RETURN ON THAT SAME EVENING INTENTIONALLY EMPTIED ALL OTHER ROOMS IN THE HALL WERE GIVEN AWAY A "WARNING" FOR THEIR NOISES AND UNRULE ALE DRINKING
I LIVE ON A FLOOR WHERE 8 OUT OF 10 MALES SHAVE THEIR HEADS AND LEAVE THE HAIR IN THE BATHROOM SINKS. ONLY ONE OUT OF 5 OF THE SHAVERS HAVE FORGOTTEN ALL OVER THE TOILETS. URINE IS ALWAYS IN THE TOILET SEATS OF THE FLOOR. PEOPLE TALK TO EACH OTHER ALMOST ACTUALLY WHISPER AT 2 A.M. — AND ARE PROUD BEING IN THE HALLWAY WHO ARE CLEARLY UNDER 21 BY BOTH THESE PEOPLE AND ALL ALCOHOL HAVE CASES OF EMPTIES STASHED IN THEIR ROOMS THAT ARE SOME-HOW INVISIBLE WHEN THE R.A. CHECK FOR(ED) COMES BY TO VISIT AND I GET PUNISHED BY "JUICE IS ONE NIGHT THAT'S JUSTICE IN THE DORMS, MY AUNT?"

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Unfamiliar people and places are not for you today. Get together with close friends and loved ones. Emphasize what you can do as a team — there truly is power in numbers.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A festive atmosphere boosts your spirits. Trust only the people you know and love today. Cooperation is your ticket to business success. Someone new on the scene could try to deceive you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A good day to write letters and make important phone calls. Travel will put you in touch with valuable new contacts. You make friends wherever you go. Put your credit cards away!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be cautious in financial matters. Expected money may not materialize before the holidays. Pay more attention to legal loopholes. Avoid exhaustion by pacing yourself at work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you think big, you will accomplish great things. New trends favor your efforts. Buy something beautiful today to decorate your home. Your creative efforts are recognized by those who count.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Seek a lasting solution to a financial problem. Avoid showdowns and ultimatums in the afternoon. Listen to opposing views without losing your cool. Quiet confidence is the key to success!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may not want to accept an older person's advice, even if you think it is correct. Review your options. Wisdom comes with experience. Follow the lead of a highly successful colleague.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Have another try at kicking a habit that has been deemed harmful to your health. Today is an ideal time to expand your social circle. Be more outgoing at parties and office functions.

SAGITARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not try to force an issue or threaten someone. Issuing an ultimatum will backfire. Know what a loved one wants before you offer solace or advice. Socialize tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your generosity may be jeopardized if you get involved with the wrong person. Resist subtle pressure form someone who has designs on your money. You must think about the future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Listen to the good advice that is available to you in your own home. Ownership and property matters enjoy favorable influences. Play down your weaknesses while emphasizing your strengths.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You feel impulsive today and want to make big changes in your life. A helpful associate directs your attention to earning more money. Showcase a special talent and the sky is the limit!

racy, people must first develop a self-interest in the issues which govern our government.

"In developing a self-interest of our well-being in the public arena, we, in turn, develop a relational self-interest with others," she said. "That is, the idea we put forth will undoubtedly clash with others. In clashing with others, we develop strong relationships which gives us more power — more say in our democratic government."

SPORTS NOTICE

BASKETBALL TICKETS — Student tickets for the Nov. 25 men's basketball game against Keene State will be available today, Thurs., Nov. 21. They can be picked up between 7 a.m. and 3 p.m. in the lobby of Curry Hicks Cage. Students with a valid undergraduate I.D. can obtain one general admission ticket.

MINUTEMANIACS — Anyone, who either is a Minutemanic or wants to be one, should show up at Ratter's Pub at 8 p.m. on Friday Nov. 22. There will be a club meeting there at that time until just before the Siena game at midnight.

LOCAL 509
Service Employees International Union
UMass Chapter

November 19, 1991

To the University community:

We, the elected leaders of Local 509, SEIU, which represents over 800 professional staff members at the Amherst campus, express our strong and unanimous support for the Graduate Employees Organization in its struggle for a fair contract. We deplore the recent positions and tactics of management, especially its absurd refusal to agree to an agency fee for graduate employees.

We are especially outraged by the letter, dated November 15th and signed by Chancellor O'Brien, which threatens drastic and illegal action by the University against graduate employees if they do not abide by its terms. This letter can do nothing but inflame the present tense situation and make a settlement of this dispute more difficult to achieve. We demand that University management rescind this letter immediately, and that management settle this dispute with GEO by agreeing to a fair contract which recognizes GEO as the chosen representatives of graduate employees on this campus.

We urge all professional staff in our bargaining unit to come to a membership meeting on Monday, November 25th, at noon in Campus Center 804-808. At that meeting we will be discussing possible job actions in support of GEO and other matters of serious and immediate concerns to our members.

Back in the saddle again; gotta love riding a horse

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

With names like Fiasco, Sassafrass and Evil Knievel it's a wonder anyone would want to saddle up one of the horses at the Hadley Farm.

But for members of the University of Massachusetts Equestrian team, riding these huge animals is not only a sport, but more accurately, a love.
